The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1998) for the relief of the estate of Martin Flynn, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after "4,000", strike out "with interest at the rate of —— percent per annum", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Martin Flynn, deceased, of Des Moines, Iowa, the sum of $4,000, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for expenses incurred by the estate in restoring to their original condition the fifth and sixth floors of the Flynn Building, Des Moines, Iowa, which were vacated on September 30, 1929, by the United States Veterans' Bureau, at the expiration of its lease.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has an amendment pending, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$4,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,025."

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that was in accordance with an understanding we had.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was in accordance with the report from the Veterans' Bureau. I now have a report from the Veterans' Bureau, of which I will read the last two paragraphs:

It now appears that the cost of installation of the lavatories by the owners of the building would be $785 rather than $975, the amount of the proposal for this work submitted by Robinson Bros.

It is considered that $785 is a reasonable charge for the installation of 18 lavatories, and, in view of the foregoing, it is recommended that the previous report of February 19, 1934, recommending payment of the claim in the amount of $3,025, be amended to recommend $3,810, which this administration believes would be a just settlement of the claim.

If it will be satisfactory to the Senator from Tennessee, I ask, in compliance with this report, to substitute the figures "$3,810" in place of "$3,025."

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has a report recommending the extra amount?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; and I will insert this letter from the Veterans' Bureau in the RECORD in support of my statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well; the amendment is accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

APRIL 7, 1934.

Hon. ERNEST W. GIBSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GIBSON: This will supplement my letter of April 4, 1934, furnishing a report regarding the estimate of $785 for the installation of lavatories in the Flynn Building, Des Moines, Iowa, which was considered in connection with S. 1998 (73d Cong.), "A bill for the relief of the estate of Martin Flynn", concerning which a report was furnished the Chairman, Committee on Claims, United States Senate, on February 19, 1934.

After a careful investigation of the facts in connection with this claim and consideration of the item of $785, including a review of the case by the solicitor, the following pertinent facts are elicited.

The lessors in this case had originally claimed $4,000 for the restoration of the premises in question and subsequently agreed to compromise for $3,000. There were submitted by the regional manager, Des Moines, Iowa, by letter of September 4, 1931, estimates that were received and which total the $4,000 referred to. There was also submitted affidavit made by O. E. Lynch in which he sets forth:

"I further depose and say that no charge was made for doors and lavatories as the ones formerly used were put back in their proper place."

The affidavit in question, while showing that $3,000 would have been acceptable if payment had been made at that time in compromise of the original claim of $4,000, is not to be considered as limiting the amount to which the claimant is otherwise entitled, including the proper cost of reinstallation of the lavatories mentioned.

It now appears that the cost of installation of the lavatories by the owners of the building would be $785 rather than $975, the amount of the proposal for this work submitted by Robinson Bros.

It is considered that $785 is a reasonable charge for the installation of 13 lavatories and in view of the foregoing, it is recommended that the previous report of February 19, 1934, recommending payment of the claim in the amount of $3,025 be amended to recommend $3,810, which this administration believes would be a just settlement of the claim.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, as modified by inserting "$3,810" instead of "$3,025", is agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2800) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS, Mr. McKELLAR (and other Senators). Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MEDICAL CORPS OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2455) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Corps of the Regular Army, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after "1917", to insert "Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of promotion there shall be credited to officers of the Medical Corps all active service as officers of the Medical Reserve Corps rendered by them between April 23, 1908, and April 6, 1917: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator in charge of the bill to state the effect of the proposed legislation.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, this bill will grant certain promotions to officers of the Medical Corps which they have been denied, not by law but by action of the Secretary of War. Under the law, the Regular officer gets his promotion for the time he served during the war. These men are placed on the list so that they are not given credit for the time they served in the Organized Reserves during the period prior to the war.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the committee report a unanimous one?

Mr. CAREY. The committee report was unanimous.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask how many officers are included?

Mr. CAREY. About 230, if I remember correctly.

Mr. McKELLAR. And what will be the cost of the measure?

Mr. CAREY. I cannot tell the Senator the cost; but this bill gives the medical officers the rank to which they are entitled on the same basis as other officers of the Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, SISTERSVILLE, W.VA.

The bill (S. 3046) creating the Sistersville Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, hold, and operate a highway bridge across the Ohio River at or near Sistersville, W.Va., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Sistersville Bridge Commission (hereinafter created, and hereinafter referred to as the "commission"), and its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, hold, and operate a highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at or near the city of Sistersville, W.Va., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the commission and its successors and assigns the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of West Virginia and the State of Ohio as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate and other property are located, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in said States, respectively.

SEC. 3. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the said bridge which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000 shall be let by competitive bidding after reasonable advertisement for bids. Sealed bids shall be required, and all such contracts shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder.

SEC. 4. The commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto, by an issue or issues of interest-bearing negotiable bonds of the commission, for the security of which the commission may mortgage, pledge, or otherwise hypothecate all of the property it is authorized to hold, together with the income therefrom.

SEC. 5. The bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be deemed to be an instrumentality for interstate commerce, the postal service, and military and other purposes authorized by the Government of the United States and said bridge and the bonds issued in connection therewith and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from all Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation. Said bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the commission may determine, so as to produce the cost of the bridge and its approaches, and the land, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith. The cost of the bridge shall be deemed to include interest during construction of the bridge, and all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge, and the acquisition of the necessary property, and expenses incident to the financing thereof.

SEC. 6. For transit over the said bridge there shall be charged tolls sufficient to pay the cost and expense of operating and maintaining the bridge, interest on the indebtedness of the commission, and provide a sinking fund to pay off the principal of said indebtedness at maturity. Such tolls shall be fixed by the commission, subject, however, to the power with respect thereto vested in the Secretary of War by the said act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 7. After a sinking fund sufficient for the amortization of all indebtedness of the commission shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, and the commission, its successors and assigns shall thereupon convey by proper instrument of conveyance all right, title, and interest in said bridge and its approaches to the State of West Virginia and the State of Ohio jointly upon the agreement of such States to accept and to maintain and operate such bridge as a free bridge.

SEC. 8. For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the Sistersville Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession and the right to contract, sue, and defend in courts of law and equity, possess a common seal, hold title to real estate and other properties, and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

SEC. 9. The commission shall consist of one person named by the governing bodies of each of the following governmental units, to wit: Tyler County, W.Va.; city of Sistersville, W.Va.; Monroe County, Ohio. Any vacancy occurring in said commission shall be filed by the governmental unit that made the original appointment. The members of the commission shall serve without pay but shall be reimbursed out of any funds in its hands for necessary expenses incurred in the conduct of its business. The commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorney, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as it may deem necessary, and fix the compensation of such person.

SEC. 10. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the commission, or any member thereof, to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds becoming available under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

ZINSSER & CO.

The bill (S. 1214) for the relief of Zinsser & Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust upon a fair and equitable basis or to cancel any agreement, express or implied, that has been entered into in good faith by any officer acting under his authority, direction, or instruction with Zinsser & Co., Inc., Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y., for the sale of War Department buildings, underground piping, and concrete foundations, together with all fixtures considered part of the building and located upon ground owned by the said company.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The bill (S. 3085) relating to the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Let that go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri to consider the report on this bill? It has been strongly recommended by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and approved unanimously by the Committee on Banking and Currency. There is no controversy about it, and no objection to it that I have ever heard. It is very important that the bill pass and go over to the House. The explanation is made in the report, from which I will read very briefly:

Other leading industrial nations, almost without exception, have provided aid to their exporters by furnishing middle- and long-term credits, by establishing limited credit-insurance facilities, or by actually assuming a portion of the risk involved. The lack of similar governmental assistance in this country is said to have greatly reduced the volume of American industrial exports competing for markets with the goods of other nations.

The proposed amendment would enable the Corporation to establish or utilize corporations and other agencies wholly owned by the United States, which would cooperate with American manufacturers to enable them to compete upon a fair basis with foreign manufacturers, and which might even be able, in some cases, to effect actual exchanges of goods for goods.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that he apparently is speaking in reference to the next order of business on the calendar. The bill which has just been reached is Senate bill 3085, order of business 560.

Mr. FLETCHER. I find that is a fact; but I would say the same thing with reference to the bill to which the Senator refers. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as will be seen by the report on the bill, has made a strong recommendation that the amendments proposed be made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. It is very important that they should be made, and should be made now.

Some proposed amendments were sent to me after the bill was reported, which are merely formal and corrective, and I will offer those amendments, but it will take but a moment to act on them. There is very little involved in the bill other than procedure. For instance, it is designed to relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from giving bond in appeal cases, where they take appeals, and to make their seal and their records evidence in court.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It authorizes the use of authenticated copies of the record in evidence.

Mr. FLETCHER. Exactly. I should like to have the bill acted on.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I find from a hasty reading of the bill that it involves a number of amendments to the present Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act which have to do more with procedure before Federal courts than anything else, a subject within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, rather than a matter which actively concerns the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. For instance, I find in the letter of Chairman Jones a statement that the bill "provides a simple method for giving Federal courts jurisdiction of suits under $3,000 brought by corporations wholly owned by the United States, which jurisdiction is now obtained by cumbersome method of joining the United States." I should like to know what business it is of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be recommending changes in judicial procedure in courts of the United States?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that is a practical question which they have to confront from time to time. They have suggested a number of amendments. For instance, they desire to have the privilege of having copies of books, papers, records, or other documents made evidence. That is a matter they encounter whenever they have any litigation, and I think it is proper that there should be an amendment of the act in that regard. It is a situation which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is constantly meeting, and the necessity for the amendment is shown by Chairman Jones' letter, to which the Senator has referred.

I do not think it is necessary to refer a question of this kind to some other committee, for instance, the advisability of an amendment making their records evidence in court, having their seal attested, and all that sort of thing. Why should the Committee on Banking and Currency not handle it?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Missouri has raised a question in which I am very much interested, because I have an amendment now before the Committee on Banking and Currency designed to repeal a portion of the act with reference to the Federal Reserve banks, which has extended to the Federal courts jurisdiction over cases involving less than $3,000. It has worked out in this way, and I desire to call the Senator's attention to it, because if this would further extend the jurisdiction, I would not favor the passage of the bill.

Under the bill which we passed last year, if a Federal Reserve bank happens, as it has in a number of instances, to have as collateral security a note for $50 of a farmer in some section of this country, the Federal courts are given jurisdiction of such cases. The result is that men are frequently compelled to go 50 to 100 miles to employ a lawyer in a distant city. Is it understood that this measure would still further extend the jurisdiction of Federal courts in cases where collateral security is held by Government agencies? That is what I understand to be the effect of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not so understand it. It seeks to provide a simple method for giving Federal courts jurisdiction of suits involving under $3,000 brought by corporations wholly owned by the United States.

Mr. BLACK. But that is exactly the point; I disagree with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if they are seeking that jurisdiction. It is my judgment that it is fairer to the citizens of this country to have suits against them filed in courts close to them, rather than to extend the jurisdiction to cases involving less than $3,000 where a Government corporation happens to have as collateral security a note on which it desires to file suit. I think that is wholly unfair to the smaller individual whose note happens, without his knowledge, to be placed as collateral security with the governmental agency.

Mr. FESS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BLACK. I should prefer to have the bill go over, if that provision is in the bill, unless it is to be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

FINANCING OF EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

The bill (S. 3138) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid in financing exports and imports was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that is the bill about which I just spoke. It has to do with providing means for handling exports and imports. I know of no objection in the world to it. It would help our manufacturers and would help other people who want to do an export business. The Corporation can deal only with United States corporations, and with nothing else, under the bill. We have set up an export corporation, and this would enable them to get their finances so arranged that they could do business. I hope the Senator will let the bill pass. It is reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. FESS. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1884) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FEDERAL CREDIT UNION SYSTEM

The bill (S. 1639) to establish a Federal Credit Union System, to establish a further market for securities of the United States, and to make more available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit, thereby helping to stabilize the credit structure of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will not the Senator withhold his objection for a moment in order to permit me to make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. As indicated in the title to the bill, it seeks to make available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit. The bill does not eliminate State credit unions. It provides for a Federal system which will go along with and parallel the State unions.

I assume that no question will be raised as to the general merit of credit unions, their extraordinary record during the depression, and the value of rapid credit-union extension.

Credit unions are organizations of working people which enable members of a given group to save money, generally in very small individual amounts, thereby gradually collecting their own capital, which is loaned to members of the individual group for provident purposes at normal interest rates. These credit unions, nationally extended, will close the great gap in the credit structure, a gap which leaves men and women of small means, when in need of legitimate credit, largely at the mercy of usurious money lenders.

This is a great national problem which knows no State lines. So great have been the abuses of the loan sharks that over 20 States have attempted to curb this evil by laws which permit the licensed private money lender to charge 3½ percent a month—42 percent per annum—on small loans, on the theory that the alternative to a legal high rate is an illegal rate which is tremendously higher.

This small-loan business at usurious rates totals more than $2,000,000,000 annually, destroying the normal cash buying power of the masses of the people to an appalling extent.

It is the purpose of the credit union to establish credit facilities for proper purposes at normal rates for men and women who otherwise must have recourse, in time of need, to the usurer; and this is a national problem. The credit unions have proved their capacity to solve the problem.

Credit unions originated in Germany 80 years ago. Massachusetts enacted the first State credit-union law a quarter of a century ago, and there are now such laws in 38 States. In 1932 Congress enacted such a law, in terms very similar to this bill, for the District of Columbia. Unions operate in the States under the same supervision as State banks, and in the District of Columbia subject to annual examination by the Comptroller of the Currency.

Composed of working people, intensely stricken by the depression, the credit unions have come through with no involuntary liquidations, establishing in the process a very extraordinary record. There are 2,350 credit unions in this country at present, with 450,000 members, earnestly desirous of this legislation, in order that credit unions may extend on a national scale more rapidly now that the national need has been so clearly established.

The bill involves no Government loans, no subsidy, no appropriations of money. Credit unions pay their own way. In fact, some revenue will be brought to the Government through permit fees.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the bill modeled after the Massachusetts law?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator that the Massachusetts law has been highly successful; that the credit unions have been of great benefit to the poorer and working classes of people of my State.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am glad to have that statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will it cost the Government anything; and if so, in what way?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is my judgment that the supervision required can be taken care of by existing Federal supervisory personnel. This measure will bring revenue to the Government through permit fees.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does it require an appropriation of any kind?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; it does not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As the Senator from Texas knows, this bill came from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and we have made quite an investigation of the subject. There are many of these credit unions in the State of Kentucky, which State I have the honor in part to represent. Undoubtedly the credit unions have been the means by which small groups of people and even larger groups of people within an industry or within an establishment have been able to establish their own credit facilities——

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Without being subject to the outrageous rates of loan sharks and others who prey upon people of that class. They are a sort of a happy medium between the loan shark and the bank, which cannot extend credit to many of these people, because they do not have the required security.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And because the loans are quite small as a rule.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I certainly hope that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] will not insist upon his objection to the present consideration and passage of this bill, because I think it is very meritorious.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the statement which has been made by the Senator from Texas, supplemented by the statements of the Senators from Massachusetts and Kentucky, indicate that the bill is of very great importance. My objection is not because I am in opposition to the bill but because I think it deserves more consideration than can be accorded to it on a call of the calendar under the unanimous-consent rule.

I happened to be on the subcommittee which reported favorably upon the bill, but further consideration led me to the conclusion that it was entitled to some study by the Senate, particularly upon the question as to whether or not the United States Government wanted to embark upon a program of incorporation of credit unions, which are now subject to very exemplary State legislation, which would in large extent be superseded by Federal legislation. The bill further includes provisions by which credit unions may have access to the Federal Reserve System. I think before that bill is passed it ought to be studied somewhat further, and I, therefore, continue my objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in order that a complete explanation may be found in the RECORD, will the Senator from Colorado permit me to complete my remarks, which will take only a few minutes?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Credit unions pay their own way. The bill simply recognizes the value of the credit-union plan and clears the way for a truly national development. I have never heard the value of the credit union questioned.

If there be an issue against this bill, it has to do with the need for Federal legislation. Banking has long been considered a matter of national as well as of State concern, and the enactment of this bill will in no wise affect credit unions operating under State laws; its operating practice follows the State laws closely. It does recognize that this matter of stopping wastes of mass buying power is of national concern, and it seeks to make possible credit-union development nationally at a time of great national need. Its enactment will make it possible for working people to organize credit unions in States which have no credit-union laws, and there are 10 of these. It will also simplify organization in States where existing State credit-union laws are oppressive or have become so hopelessly defective as to be practically inoperative. The second part of the bill will allow credit unions in the same State to have a central depository, of great value in times of industrial depression and at all times a means of keeping all credit-union funds operating effectively for the purpose of caring for short-term loans.

Eventually State central credit unions should be permitted to maintain a national central credit union—which could be accomplished only under a Federal law—enabling funds to be transferred from one section to another as the need develops, making possible a maximum national small-loan service.

In the United States there are both rural and urban credit unions, and much of the present development calls for a national program. In industrial groups, nationally distributed, for example, credit unions are being organized on a national scale, which development must stop at State lines where there either is no State law or where State laws are oppressive or inoperative. This bill is simply a permissive bill, giving the right to groups wherever located to ask for the privilege to organize credit unions under proper Federal supervision. It comes at a time when we are all concerned with national rehabilitation and when we are doing many things to hasten national recovery. It seeks to eliminate usurious money lending in the only way it can be done, namely, by enabling the average man to combine with his fellows to the end that, working together, they may solve their own short-term credit problems at normal rates. The worker who is spending a substantial part of his earnings on interest overcharges cannot spend that amount for the things he needs to buy. On the increased purchasing power of the masses of the people recovery mainly depends.

We seek here to solve a great national problem in the only way it can be solved—by making available to people of small means credit for provident purposes through a national system of cooperative credit.

Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement by Mr. Roy F. Bergengren, entitled "Credit for All the People", which appeared in the current issue of the magazine Today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

[From Today of Apr. 21, 1934]

"CREDIT FOR ALL THE PEOPLE"—A PLEA FOR THE CREDIT UNION AS AN AID IN SOLVING THE PROBLEM OF CONSUMER CREDIT, WHICH NOW IS A MAJOR OBSTACLE TO RECOVERY

By Roy F. Bergengren

The consumer credit problem, unsolved, is a fundamental obstacle to industrial recovery. Cooperative credit will solve it.

To these two conclusions of fact we can add a third, that if a worker destroys his week's pay, he can buy nothing with it; if millions of other workers do the same, the result is industrial stagnation. By the same token, any circumstance which results in the destruction of any part of the worker's dollar, in that proportion, contributes to economic paralysis.

A great percentage (it has been authoritatively put at 80 percent) of everything that is manufactured or produced from the soil is bought, in normal times, by men and women who earn $35 a week and less. Obviously, the buying power of the worker's dollar is a primary consideration in any plan of recovery.

In the ideal state, we would be able to buy what we need in order to live comfortably and progressively and happily—and pay cash for it. We have not achieved that ideal state and, meantime, credit is essential. If the worker pays too much for credit, by the degree of overpayment he impairs his cash purchasing power and his ability to contribute to recovery.

The credit side of banking has never reached the masses of the people. Regardless of his fair credit limitations, the average man is urged to buy on credit, even though he mortgages his future earnings and often pays usurious installment charges. Our economic life has been built too much on the principle that "unto everyone that hath shall be given * * * but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Four actual cases will illustrate this.

The first involved a railroad employee who borrowed $30 from a loan shark, paid in interest $1,080, and was then sued for the $30. He paid 3,600 percent.

The second incident involved a man whose affairs were tangled; with a $40-a-week job he was always getting caught up. He was surprised to find that he had undertaken to buy, on the installment plan, things calling for total weekly payments of $52.

The third had to do with a fireman who, 14 months ago, bought furniture which he could have had for $250 cash; his receipts showed he paid $325, and he still owed $300.

Finally, one of a group of farmers questioned the assertion that many of them were paying 42 percent for short-term credit. The meeting adjourned to the county recorder's office across the street and found that, of the group of 186 farmers, 82 had mortgaged all their movables for loans at 3½ percent a month.

How extensive is this consumer credit problem? In the Internal Debts of the United States it is declared that at the beginning of 1933 there were approximately $14,400,000,000 of personal and household short-term loans outstanding against American families (an increase of $500,000,000 in a single year) with an annual interest charge of $609,700,000.

Obviously, we must first reduce interest charges; obviously, our eventual objective must be to get out of debt. Cooperative credit will accomplish both objectives. It takes the private-profit motive out of the transaction.

That is why over 2,300 credit unions ("credit union" being the name given to cooperative credit societies in America) are already in existence in the United States, with a membership of more than 450,000 persons and resources of more than $65,000,000. They are growing at the rate of more than three every business day. They make, too, a saver out of the borrower, lifting him first out of the hole of debt he is in and then filling up the hole.

In 1909 Massachusetts enacted the first State credit-union law in the United States. It worked so well that, a few years later, President Taft called its value to the attention of the other Governors. Since then, 37 other States have enacted similar laws, and in 1932 Congress enacted such a law for the District of Columbia. A bill is pending before Congress which would authorize credit-union organization anywhere in the United States.

There are 95 credit unions among employees of Armour & Co. in 38 States. Of an average age of 18 months (and with no operating experience in average times) they have loaned approximately $2,000,000 with practically no losses.

There are 322 credit unions of postal employees, with over 70,000 members, savings of nearly $7,000,000, and an annual small-loan business of better than $10,000,000.

Credit unions have been organized recently within the Farm Credit Administration, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Department of Agriculture.

During its 17 years of operation the Municipal Credit Union of the City of New York (composed of city employees) has loaned $19,112,104 to 83,690 borrowers.

Seventeen thousand employees of the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co. are members of eight credit unions, in which they have saved more than $2,000,000, and have loaned, without appreciable losses, $18,500,000.

The Indiana Farm Bureau Federation has established 32 credit unions.

There are 32 credit unions among employees of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad.

The Alma Exchange Credit Union took the place of a small rural bank at Alma, Ga. After 3 years it has resources of $50,000, and is performing cooperatively every primary function of a community bank.

POOLING COMMON RESOURCES

It is a very simple business in which the credit union is engaged, and one which its directors understand—that of pooling common resources, managing the pool, and investing the results in the men and women who accumulated the pool in the first place. It introduces three new banking theories:

(1) Ordinary folks can develop the capacity to manage their own money.

(2) It puts money to work for the benefit of the people to whom it belongs.

(3) The purpose of the loan is the important thing.

Credit unions make loans only for provident purposes; that is the law. The loan must promise a real benefit to the borrower. They appreciate that if a loan performs a real service, the borrower is apt to make sacrifices to pay it back.

To the farmer, his credit union loans money for seed and fertilizer and stock and farm machinery and a thousand and one other purposes incidental to farming. To the city worker, it loans money to help him with his taxes or to pay the hospital or the college tuition or to enter a business. To both farmer and city worker the credit union brings the doctrine of cash buying, and it seeks in most practical fashion to make the installment buyer not only a cash buyer but also an intelligent buyer.

If the proof of the pudding lies in the eating of it, credit unions operate under the same rules as banks in 38 States—and they came through the depression practically without runs or failures. Eligible to relief from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, only a half dozen of them have needed it.

There is no limit to their proper growth. They are to the banking business what the low-priced car is to the automotive industry. They are predicated on the supposition that the brotherhood of man is a good business principle.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2816) to extend the time for the refunding of certain taxes erroneously collected from certain building-and-loan associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky explain this bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, under the revenue acts from 1918 to 1926 there were provisions for certain taxes, including those on building-and-loan associations. The building-and-loan associations paid these taxes for some years. The Supreme Court thereafter held the law unconstitutional, and there have been refunds from time to time. This bill simply provides that the building-and-loan associations may file their claims with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and that he may adjudicate them without the necessity of introducing separate bills. There are some 8 or 10 States involved and some 30 building-and-loan associations, and the amount, I understand, will probably not exceed $80,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an adverse report from the Treasury Department, is there not?

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the Treasury makes an adverse report. It always does when we try to get money out of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Kentucky let the bill go over for today?

Mr. LOGAN. Of course, I am not personally interested in this matter at all. The building-and-loan associations, however, have paid in their money. The United States Government has held the money, which the Supreme Court says it has no right to hold, and therefore the Committee on Claims reported the bill favorably.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it go over for today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SITE FOR A LIGHTHOUSE DEPOT AT NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2834) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to acquire a site for a lighthouse depot at New Orleans, La., and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 7488 be substituted for Senate bill 2834, and that the Senate consider the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]?

Mr. JOHNSON. Are the House bill and the Senate bill exactly alike?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSON. And are the amendments to the Senate bill also incorporated in the House bill, so as to eliminate from the House bill the same language that is eliminated from the Senate bill?

Mr. OVERTON. The House bill is identical with the Senate bill, as reported by the committee, with the amendments which the committee believes will remove the objections that have been made.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the amendment directing how the money shall be allotted eliminated from the House bill?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of H.R. 7488 which the Senator from Louisiana has requested to substitute for the Senate bill? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7488) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to acquire a site for a lighthouse depot at New Orleans, La., and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase from the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans, New Orleans, La., a lease for not exceeding 99 years of a site on which is to be located the New Orleans Lighthouse Depot for a consideration of not exceeding $20,000 for the 99 years, payment thereof to be made upon approval of the lease by the Secretary of Commerce from funds allotted and made available for this project by proper authority. The site shall contain approximately 2.28 acres, description of which by metes and bounds shall be incorporated in the lease; and the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to erect upon such site such wharves, docks, and other structures as he may determine to be feasible and suitable for the purposes of the lighthouse depot, and to make payment therefor from funds allotted and made available for this project by proper authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2834 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3170) to revise the air-mail laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being the unfinished business, the bill will be passed over.

CIRCULATION OF READING MATTER AMONG THE BLIND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2922) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind", approved April 27, 1904, and acts supplemental thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 2, line 11, I move to strike out, after the word "libraries", the words "or when sent by a printing press for the blind to a public institution for the blind or a public library."

The department requested that that amendment be made, and I think it should be made probably in the interest of fairness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind", approved April 27, 1904 (33 Stat. 313), the supplemental provision in section 1 of the Post Office Appropriation Act for 1913, approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 551), and the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind", approved June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 668; U.S.C., title 39, ch. 8, sec. 331), be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Books, pamphlets, and other reading matter published either in raised characters, whether prepared by hand or printed, or in the form of sound-reproduction records for the use of the blind, in packages not exceeding 12 pounds in weight, and containing no advertising or other matter whatever, unsealed, and when sent by public institutions for the blind, or by any public libraries, as a loan to blind readers, or when returned by the latter to such institutions or public libraries, magazines, periodicals, and other regularly issued publications in such raised characters, whether prepared by hand or printed, or on sound-reproduction records (for the use of the blind), which contain no advertisements and for which no subscription fee is charged, shall be transmitted in the United States mails free of postage and under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

"Volumes of the Holy Scriptures, or any part thereof, published either in raised characters, whether prepared by hand or printed, or in the form of sound-reproduction records for the use of the blind, which do not contain advertisements (a) when furnished by an organization, institution, or association not conducted for private profit, to a blind person without charge, shall be transmitted in the United States mails free of postage; (b) when furnished by an organization, institution, or association not conducted for private profit to a blind person at a price not greater than the cost price thereof, shall be transmitted in the United States mails at the postage rate of 1 cent for each pound or fraction thereof; under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

"All letters written in point print or raised characters or on sound-reproduction records used by the blind, when unsealed, shall be transmitted through the mails as third-class matter."

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, WHEELING, W.VA.

The bill (S.3099) authorizing the city of Wheeling, a municipal corporation, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at Wheeling, W.Va., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and to provide for military and other purposes, the city of Wheeling, a municipal corporation of West Virginia, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in Wheeling, W.Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. The said municipality of Wheeling may charge toll for the use of said bridge, which rates of toll may be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay (a) the reasonable cost of maintenance, repair, and operation of the said bridge and its approaches; and (b) the amortization within a reasonable time and not exceeding 25 years from the date that the bridge is opened to traffic, and under reasonable condition of any loan or loans, including reasonable interest, taxes, and financing charges made, or to be made in connection with the construction of said bridge and its approaches.

SEC. 3. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches and of all expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the tolls collected from time to time shall be kept and shall at all reasonable times be available for the information of all persons interested in the construction, operation, and maintenance thereof.

SEC. 4. The right to sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, or pledge any or all of the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said city of Wheeling, or any corporation to which, or any person to whom, such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same through mortgage, pledge, foreclosure, or otherwise, including therein the United States of America acting by or through the President, the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, such other agency or agencies as may be designated or created for such purpose pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act or any other amendment or supplement thereto, or any other agency or agencies as may be created for such purpose by the Congress of the United States, and such person or corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise all of the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon the city of Wheeling as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 5. Whenever a sum sufficient to amortize and pay off the amount of money used in building and constructing said bridge shall have been collected, the city of Wheeling shall declare said bridge free and open to the use of the general public without the imposition of any further tolls or charges for the use of said bridge.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES IN OREGON

The bill (S. 3114) to extend the time for commencing the construction of certain bridges in the State of Oregon was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing the construction of the following bridges, authorized to be built by the State of Oregon, are hereby extended to October 1, 1934: (1) Across the Umpqua River, at or near Reedsport, Oreg., authorized by act of Congress approved June 13, 1933; (2) across Yaquina Bay, at or near Newport, Oreg., authorized by act of Congress approved June 13, 1933; (3) across Coos Bay, at or near North Bend, Oreg., authorized by act of Congress approved June 13, 1933; (4) across the Siuslaw River, at or near Florence, Oreg., authorized by act of Congress approved June 13, 1933; and (5) across Alsea Bay, at or near Waldport, Oreg., authorized by act of Congress approved June 15, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

WILBUR ROGERS

The bill (H.R. 4423) for the relief of Wilbur Rogers was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon retired officers of the United States Army, Wilbur Rogers, major, United States Army, shall be held and considered, notwithstanding any other provision of law, to have been classified in class A and to have been retired under section 1251 of the Revised Statutes for incapacity which was a result of an accident of service: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, allowance, or any payment provided under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, 1924, as amended, or other benefit whatsoever to which said person may be or become entitled by law, shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

ROBERT EMIL TAYLOR

The bill (S. 1725) for the relief of Robert Emil Taylor was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the adjudication of the claims of Robert Emil Taylor (C-267750), late private, Thirty-second Company, One Hundred and Sixty-sixth D. B., for disability allowance benefits under the World War Veterans' Act, as amended, and for adjusted compensation under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to include as active military service during the World War the service of the said Robert Emil Taylor from August 28, 1918, to the date of his discharge July 19, 1919, notwithstanding the industrial furlough on which he was ordered from November 16, 1918, to July 17, 1919.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2334) authorizing the city of Atchison, Kans., and the county of Buchanan, Mo., or either of them, or the States of Kansas and Missouri, or either of them, or the highway departments of such States, acting jointly or severally, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Atchison, Kans., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H.R. 7748) regulating procedure in criminal cases in the courts of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CRIME PREVENTION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar 618, being the bill (H.R. 7748) regulating procedure in criminal cases in the courts of the United States. The bill, which is one of the so-called "crime-prevention bills", was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee. It is intended to prevent dilatory action in cases in the Federal courts. I understand that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has considered the measure and no longer objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 618. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 7748) regulating procedure in criminal cases in the courts of the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no plea to abate nor motion to quash any indictment upon the ground of irregularity in the drawing or impaneling of the grand jury or upon the ground of disqualification of a grand juror shall be sustained or granted unless such plea or motion shall have been filed before, or within 10 days after, the defendant filing such plea or motion is presented for arraignment; and from the time such plea or motion is filed and until the termination of the first term of said court beginning subsequent to the final judgment on such plea or motion and during which a grand jury thereof shall be in session, no statute of limitations shall operate to bar another indictment of any defendant filing such plea or motion, or of any other defendant or defendants included in the indictment to which such plea or motion is directed, for the offense or offenses therein charged.

SEC. 2. No plea to abate nor motion to quash any indictment, upon the ground that one or more unqualified persons served upon the grand jury finding such indictment, shall be sustained if it appears that 12 or more jurors, after deducting the number so disqualified, concurred in the finding of said indictment: Provided, however, That no juror shall be permitted to testify, in this connection, as to whether he or any other individual juror voted for or against the finding of such indictment, but it shall be the duty of the foreman of each grand jury to keep a record of the number of grand jurors concurring in the finding of any indictment and to file such record with the clerk of the court at the time the indictment is returned. Such record shall not be made public except on order of the court.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be applicable to the district courts of the United States, including the district courts of Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

ARTHUR R. LEWIS

The bill (S. 1992) for the relief of Arthur R. Lewis was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Arthur R. Lewis shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Second Company (Mobile), Coast Artillery Corps, January 13, 1924: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 36) directing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "authorized", to strike out "and directed", and in line 6, after the numerals "11", to strike out "1932" and insert "1934", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas the 11th day of October 1779 is the date in American history of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of West Virginia, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Kentucky, Illinois, Michigan, Tennessee, Indiana, Wisconsin, New York, Nebraska, Texas, Minnesota, Delaware, Maryland, Arkansas, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Ohio, and other States of the Union, through legislative enactment designated October 11 of each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929, and October 11, 1931, to be General Pulaski's Memorial Day; and

Whereas it is fitting that the recurring anniversary of this day be commemorated with suitable patriotic and public exercises in observing and commemorating the death of this great American hero of the Revolutionary War: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11, 1934, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1934, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski."

EXPENDITURES OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF WILD-LIFE RESOURCES

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S.Res. 201) increasing the limit of expenditures by the Special Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "purposes", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$5,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized and directed by S.Res. 246 on April 17, 1930, to investigate the conservation of wild animal life, hereby is authorized to expend in furtherance of such purposes $5,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorizesd.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2794) to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act with respect to rates of compensation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments, on page 3, section 4, line 22, after the word "commissioner", to insert "with the approval of the Commission", and on page 5, section 5, line 8, after the word "commissioner", to insert "with the approval of the Commission", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 7 of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If at any time during such period the employee unreasonably refuses to submit to medical or surgical treatment, the deputy commissioner may, by order, suspend the payment of further compensation during such time as such refusal continues, and no compensation shall be paid at any time during the period of such suspension, unless the circumstances justified the refusal."

SEC. 2. So much of subdivision (c) of section 8 of such act, as amended, as precedes paragraph (13) thereof is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Permanent partial disability: In case of disability partial in character but permanent in quality, the compensation shall be 66⅔ percent of the average weekly wages, which shall be in addition to compensation for temporary total disability paid in accordance with subdivision (b) of this section, and shall be paid to the employee, as follows:

"(1) Arm lost, 280 weeks' compensation.
"(2) Leg lost, 248 weeks' compensation.
"(3) Hand lost, 212 weeks' compensation.
"(4) Foot lost, 173 weeks' compensation.
"(5) Eye lost, 140 weeks' compensation.
"(6) Thumb lost, 51 weeks' compensation.
"(7) First finger lost, 28 weeks' compensation.
"(8) Great toe lost, 26 weeks' compensation.
"(9) Second finger lost, 18 weeks' compensation.
"(10) Third finger lost, 17 weeks' compensation.
"(11) Toe other than great toe lost, 8 weeks' compensation.
"(12) Fourth finger lost, 7 weeks' compensation."

SEC. 3. Paragraph (22) of subdivision (c) of section 8 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(22) In any case in which there shall be a loss of, or loss of use of, more than one member or parts of more than one member set forth in paragraphs (1) to (19) of this subdivision, not amounting to permanent total disability, the award of compensation shall be for the loss of, or loss of use of, each such member or part thereof, which awards shall run consecutively."

SEC. 4. Subdivision (j) of section 14 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(j) Whenever the deputy commissioner determines that it is in the interest of justice, the liability of the employer for compensation, or any part thereof as determined by the deputy commissioner with the approval of the Commission, may be discharged by the payment of a lump sum equal to the present value of future compensation payments commuted, computed at 4 percent true discount compounded annually. The probability of the death of the injured employee or other person entitled to compensation before the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to compensation shall be determined in accordance with the American Experience Table of Mortality, and the probability of the remarriage of the surviving wife shall be determined in accordance with the remarriage tables of the Dutch Royal Insurance Institution. The probability of the happening of any other contingency affecting the amount or duration of the compensation shall be disregarded."

SEC. 5. Section 22 of such act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"MODIFICATION OF COMPENSATION CASES

"SEC. 22. Upon his own initiative, or upon the application of any party in interest, on the ground of a change in conditions or because of a mistake in a determination of fact by the deputy commissioner, the deputy commissioner may, at any time prior to 1 year after the date of the last payment of compensation, whether or not a compensation order has been issued, review a compensation case in accordance with the procedure prescribed in respect of claims in section 19, and in accordance with such section issue a new compensation order which may terminate, continue, reinstate, increase, or decrease such compensation. Such new order shall not affect any compensation previously paid, except that an award increasing the compensation rate may be made effective from the date of the injury, and if any part of the compensation due or to become due is unpaid, an award decreasing the compensation rate may be made effective from the date of the injury, and any payment made prior thereto in excess of such decreased rate shall be deducted from any unpaid compensation, in such manner and by such method as may be determined by the deputy commissioner with the approval of the Commission."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Judiciary Committee accompanying the bill may be printed in the RECORD following the action of the Senate on the bill.

There being no objection, the report (No. 588) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2794) to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act with respect to rates of compensation, and for other purposes, report the same favorably to the Senate and recommends that the bill do pass, with the following amendments:

On page 3, line 22, immediately after the word "commissioner", insert the words "with the approval of the Commission."

On page 5, line 8, immediately after the word "commissioner", insert the words "with the approval of the Commission."

The purpose and need of this legislation are set out in the following memorandum which was presented to the committee by Senator LA FOLLETTE, author of the bill:

The Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act, approved March 4, 1927 (Public No. 803, 69th Cong.), went into effect July 1, 1927, and has been notably successful in operation. Some obscurities in the law as revealed by experience, however, now make desirable a few improving amendments.

S. 2794 embodies six amendments which, as a result of extended conferences, have been agreed upon by representatives of longshoremen's and maritime employers' organizations as fair and equitable. These amendments represent a series of compromises among the groups affected and do not appreciably affect the cost to employers. They are in line with recommendations made in recent annual reports to Congress by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission which administers the act.

FIRST AMENDMENT

Section 1 of S. 2794 adds a new sentence to section 7 (a) of the existing act. It authorizes a deputy commissioner to suspend payment of compensation if the injured employee unreasonably refuses to submit to medical and surgical treatment. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission in its seventeenth annual report (June 30, 1933, pp. 18–19) states:

"Deputy commissioners have found it difficult in a number of cases to make awards which properly protect the interest of the employer due to the failure of the employee to carry out the entirely proper instructions of the physician or surgeon treating his case, and in some cases due to the deliberate acts of the employee in removing bandages or doing other things which clearly increase the period of disability."

The proposed amendment is in line with the recommendations of the Commission.

SECOND AMENDMENT

Section 2 of S. 2794 amends subdivision (c) of section 8 of the existing act so as to provide that in case of permanent partial disability—for example, the loss of an arm—compensation shall first be paid during the "healing period" and that such payments shall be in addition to the compensation payable on account of the permanent partial disability as fixed in the schedule, paragraphs (1) to (12) of section 8 (c).

This amendment sets forth clearly the intentions of those who drafted the original act. Subsequent court interpretation has resulted in some confusion and unexpected injustice (Texas Employers Ins. Assn. v. Sheppeard (32 Fed. (2d) 300); Texas Employers Ins. Assn. v. Sheppeard (Eq. No. 375 in the U.S. District Court for the southern district of Texas, Houston division); Baltimore & Philadelphia Steamboat Co. et al. v. Norton et al (40 Fed. (2d) 530, 48 Fed. (2d) 57, and 284 U.S. 408); Crescent Wharf & Warehouse Co. v. Pillsbury (54 Fed. (2d) 1077). The United States Employees' Compensation Commission describes the result of these decisions in its latest annual report (pp. 16–17) as follows:

"Among other things it may be pointed out that under the interpretation placed upon section 8 (c) (22) an injured employee who suffers a prolonged period of temporary total disability followed by a permanent partial disability consisting of a small percentage of loss of use of a member in many cases could not be awarded as much compensation for his entire disability, both temporary total and permanent, as he would be clearly entitled to have awarded him for his temporary total disability alone if he had had no ensuing permanent partial disability."

The Commission recommends an amendment "to correct this situation and avoid the incongruous and harsh results of such interpretation as well as to assure compensation in all cases for the disability actually suffered." The amendment proposed in section 2 of S. 2794 is in line with this recommendation.

THIRD AMENDMENT

The second amendment above described would result in a definite increase in compensation cost to the employers under the act were it not for the third amendment, as follows: Section 2 of S. 2794 amends section 8 (c) of the act by reducing the number of scheduled weeks of compensation payable for permanent partial disabilities in paragraphs (1) to (12). In each instance the reduction proposed is equal to the number of weeks of compensation specified in the present healing-period clause, section 8 (c) (22), which is repealed by this bill. This amendment, taken together with the previous amendment, constitutes a compromise which corrects injustices without increasing the cost to the employer.

FOURTH AMENDMENT

Section 3 of S. 2794 substitutes for the existing paragraph (22) of section 8 (c)—which is in effect repealed by the second and third amendments above—a new subdivision which makes it possible, in cases where a worker loses more than one member listed in the schedule (for example, a finger and a thumb), to pay compensation on account of each member lost. Such separate, consecutive awards are not possible under the existing act. This amendment is identical with that recommended by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission in its latest annual report (p. 17).

FIFTH AMENDMENT

Section 4 of S. 2794 amends section 14 (j) of the act so as to authorize the deputy commissioner to make partial lump-sum settlements. At present, lump-sum settlements, when made, must be for the entire amount of the compensation due. The Commission in its seventeenth annual report (p. 17) states:

"Deputy commissioners who have had occasion to apply this section have expressed the opinion that in many cases partial lump-sum settlements would be for the best interests of a person entitled to compensation although there is not sufficient justification for commuting the entire amount due in one payment."

This amendment is in accordance with the recommendation of the Commission.

The amendment also provides that in computing the lump sum payable to a widow, the probability of her remarriage shall be taken into consideration. Computations are to be made upon the basis of the remarriage tables of the Dutch Royal Insurance Institution, as is provided in the New York compensation law and in accordance with practice generally, since these are widely recognized as the authoritative tables for this purpose.

SIXTH AMENDMENT

Section 5 of S. 2794 amends section 22 of the existing act so as to broaden the grounds on which a deputy commissioner can modify an award and also while strictly limiting the period, extends the time within which such modification may be made. The Commission in its seventeenth annual report (p. 18) states:

"Section 22 of the Longshoremen's Act provides for a reconsideration or review by him (a deputy commissioner) of his action with less authority to do justice to the parties than is contained in any provision for a similar purpose in any State compensation law. A review now authorized 'during the term of an award' is not sufficient in the interests of justice. In many cases the 'terms of the award' has ended when the compensation order is issued."

The amendment is in line with the recommendation of the Commission except that it limits to 1 year after the date of the last payment of compensation the time during which such modification may be made. The amendment also permits an increase or decrease in the compensation under a modifying award when changed conditions or a mistake in a determination of fact makes such modification desirable in order to render justice under the act, such modifying award to date from the time of the accident.

CHARLES B. ARRINGTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 790) for the relief of Charles B. Arrington, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 10, after the name "November", to strike out "12" and to insert "22", and in the same line, after the figure "1918", to insert:

Provided, That no pay, pension, privilege, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of this act prior to its passage or subsequent thereto.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, their widows and dependent relatives, Charles B. Arrington, formerly first lieutenant, Company D, Four Hundred and Fourth Telegraph Battalion, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on November 22, 1918: Provided, That no pay, pension, privilege, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of this act prior to its passage or subsequent thereto.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORIZATION OF ACCEPTANCE OF MEDAL BY VERNON C. DEVOTIE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1794) to authorize Vernon C. DeVotie, captain, United States Army, to accept a certain decoration tendered to him by the Colombian Government, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Vernon C. DeVotie, captain, United States Army, formerly assigned as military attaché to the legation at Bogota, Colombia, is authorized to accept the decoration known as the "Cross of Boyaca", second-class, tendered him by the Colombian Government in recognition of his efforts, while serving as such attaché, to bring about a better understanding between the peoples of Colombia and the United States, and the Department of State is authorized to deliver such decoration to the said Vernon C. DeVotie.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado explain the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this is a permissive bill, approved by the Committee on Military Affairs, to authorize the receipt of a decoration by a captain of the United States Army for services rendered in promoting good will and peace between Colombia and the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. What did he do?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, having made the report, I will say that we do not know what he did, except as set out in the communication from the Colombian Government. He was military attaché of our Government at its legation in Colombia. The Colombian Government actually gave him this medal, but under our law he cannot accept it; so he deposited it in the War Department until he could secure authority to accept it. The War Department has no objection to the bill, except it says we ought to wait until we get some more medals and distribute them all at once. The Military Affairs Committee, however, could see no reason for that. So we reported Captain DeVotie ought to be allowed to go down to the War Department and get his medal. That is all there is to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRANCHES OF NATIONAL BANKS IN TERRITORIES OR POSSESSIONS

The bill (S. 3287) to authorize national banks situated in a Territory or possession of the United States to establish branches, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any national banking association legally established and situated in a Territory or possession of the United States, may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, establish and operate new branches at any point in the Territory or possession within which such association is situated.

BENEFITS TO PROVISIONAL OFFICERS OF THE REGULAR ESTABLISHMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1595) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, at the end of the bill, on page 2, line 12, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the benefits of the act of May 24, 1928, entitled "An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War", are hereby extended to those provisional officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States who were appointed pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes", approved June 3, 1916, and the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States", approved May 18, 1917, and who served during the period from April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921, and whose appointments were not made permanent, if application for such benefits is filed with the Veterans' Administration within 12 months after the passage of this act: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance conferred by this act shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill? I should like to ask the Senator from Texas how many officers it includes?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It includes about 42.

Mr. McKELLAR. What will be the cost of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not have the exact figures, but the cost will not be large. I shall explain to the Senator the circumstances. The World War officers who would be benefited are those who, because of being neither regular nor emergency officers, have been unable to secure the benefits of their service through the Veterans' Administration. This situation is due to the fact that a number of officers were appointed provisional officers in 1917 and continued to serve during the World War under such commissions and to render exactly the same service as any other commissioned officers. The bill is merely a matter of justice intended to correct an evident oversight in the act of May 24, 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAMMOTH CAVE NATIONAL PARK, KY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 618) to amend the act of May 25, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Mammoth Cave National Park in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes", which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "second", to strike out "proviso" and insert "and third provisos"; in line 7, after the word "same", to strike out the word "is" and insert "are"; and at the top of page 2 to insert the following:

Provided further, That no general development of said area shall be undertaken until a major portion of the remainder in such area, including all the caves thereof, shall have been accepted by said Secretary, and he shall have established a schedule of fees for admission to such caves.

SEC. 2. That in the establishment of the said Mammoth Cave National Park the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept donations of money for the acquisition of lands and rights therein and to acquire the same by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second and third provisos of section 3 of the act of May 25, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Mammoth Cave National Park in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes", be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows: "And provided further, That the minimum area to be administered and protected by the National Park Service shall be, for the said Mammoth Cave National Park, 20,000 acres: Provided further, That no general development of said area shall be undertaken until a major portion of the remainder in such area, including all the caves thereof, shall have been accepted by said Secretary and he shall have established a schedule of fees for admission to such caves."

SEC. 2. That in the establishment of the said Mammoth Cave National Park the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept donations of money for the acquisition of lands and rights therein and to acquire the same by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLAMETTE NATIONAL FOREST, OREG.

The bill (S. 3007) to authorize an extension of exchange authority and addition of public lands to the Willamette National Forest in the State of Oregon was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any lands which are in private ownership within the following-described area which are found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes may be offered in exchange under the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465), as amended by the act of February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1090), and upon acceptance of title shall become parts of the Willamette National Forest; and, by proclamation of the President of the United States and upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, any lands in public ownership within such described area not now within the national forest found to be chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes may be added to the Willamette National Forest, subject to any valid existing claims. Townships 16 and 17 south, ranges 3 and 4 east, and sections 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36 in township 15 south, range 3 east, of the Willamette meridian.

HANS DAHL

The bill (S. 113) for the relief of Hans Dahl was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of all laws conferring rights, benefits, and privileges upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, Hans Dahl shall be held and considered as having been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on January 15, 1929, as a seaman: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

JOSEPH GOULD

The bill (S. 164) for the relief of Joseph Gould was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, Joseph Gould shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on June 25, 1920, as a seaman, second class, United States Navy: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

WILLARD HEATH MITCHELL

The bill (S. 309) granting an honorable discharge to Willard Heath Mitchell was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Willard Heath Mitchell, who was gunner's mate on board the U.S.S. Montana, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on September 23, 1932: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the pasage of this act.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Willard Heath Mitchell."

CLARENCE LEROY WITHAM

The bill (S. 333) for the relief of Clarence Leroy Witham was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Clarence Leroy Witham, who served honorably as an enlisted man in the United States Navy during the World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as an enlisted man on February 2, 1922: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the date of passage of this act.

HUGH FLAHERTY

The bill (S. 367) for the relief of Hugh Flaherty was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines Hugh Flaherty, private, United States Marine Corps, Spanish-American War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Marine Corps on the 22d day of April, 1899: Provided, That no pension, pay, allowance, or bounty shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

EDGAR JOSEPH CASEY

The bill (S. 427) for the relief of Edgar Joseph Casey was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

OFFICERS OF DENTAL CORPS OF THE NAVY

The bill (S. 1172) for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a House bill of identical purport as the Senate bill, and I move that the House bill, being the bill H.R. 6690, be substituted for the Senate bill and be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 6690) for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all commissioned officers now on active duty in the Dental Corps of the United States Navy who, while heretofore on active duty as reserve or temporary commissioned officers, had qualified for appointment to the Dental Corps of the United States Navy pursuant to an examination held at the United States Naval Medical School, Washington, D.C., in January 1920, and who since that date have continuously served on active duty, shall hereafter be entitled to a position on the precedence list in accordance with that attained in said examination: Provided, That such officers of the Dental Corps shall be assigned running mates for promotion purposes in accordance with their precedence as so determined: And provided further, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue to any officer by reason of the passage of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 1172, for the relief of certain officers of the Dental Corps of the United States Navy, will be indefinitely postponed.

U.S.S. "NEWPORT"

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to turn over to the municipality of Aberdeen, Wash., the U.S.S. Newport for use of the Grays Harbor district in connection with the training of the Naval Reserve organization of the district: Provided, That no expense to the Government shall be involved.

WILLIAM J. NOWINSKI

The bill (H.R. 408) for the relief of William J. Nowinski was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in computation of service for pay purposes, Lt. (Junior Grade) William J. Nowinski, Supply Corps, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have entered a commissioned status in the Navy on April 19, 1926.

IMPROVEMENT OF DESTROYER BASE RESERVATION AT ASTORIA, OREG.

The bill (S. 1797) authorizing the removal of rock from the submarine and destroyer base reservation at Astoria (Tongue Point), Oreg., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to permit the State of Oregon, the county of Clatsop in such State, or any agent of or contractor with such State or county, or any department of the Government, to remove rock from the submarine and destroyer base reservation at Astoria (Tongue Point), Oreg., in any case where it is shown to the satisfaction of such Secretary that the rock sought to be removed is to be used exclusively in the construction of public works.

JOHN THOMAS SIMPKIN

The bill (H.R. 507) for the relief of John Thomas Simpkin was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John Thomas Simpkin, who was a member of the naval forces of the United States, at the time of his discharge being confined in the United States naval prison at Portsmouth, N.H., shall hereafter be held and considered to have received a full, honorable discharge from the naval service of the United States on February 14, 1921: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill (H.R. 909) for the relief of Elbert L. Grove was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Elbert L. Grove, late of United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 31st day of March 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

JOHN C. M'CANN

The bill (H.R. 1404) for the relief of John C. McCann was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to correct the service record of John C. McCann, formerly of the U.S.S. California, so that he shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on August 26, 1908, and to grant to such John C. McCann an honorable discharge as of such date: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reasons of the enactment of this act.

P. JEAN DES GARENNES

The bill (H.R. 2040) for the relief of P. Jean des Garennes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to pay to P. Jean des Garennes, formerly a professor at the United States Naval Academy, now blind and totally incapacitated, the sum of $50 per month for the remainder of his life, beginning with the month in which this act is approved, chargeable to the appropriation "Pay, Naval Academy."

HARVEY COLLINS

The bill (H.R. 2074) for the relief of Harvey Collins was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Harvey Collins, late of the United States Navy, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 20th day of September 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

AUSTIN L. TIERNEY

The bill (S. 1979) for the relief of Austin L. Tierney was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, there is on the calendar a practically identical House bill, being House bill 6871, which I ask may be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6871) for the relief of Austin L. Tierney, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Austin L. Tierney, who served as a fireman, third-class, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a fireman, third-class, on April 25, 1918: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1979, for the relief of Austin L. Tierney, will be indefinitely postponed.

BRONZE TABLET TO THE MEMORY OF GEN. ROBERT H. DUNLAP, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 276) to authorize the placing of a bronze tablet bearing a replica of the Congressional Medal of Honor upon the grave of the late Brig. Gen. Robert H. Dunlap, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, at the beginning of line 2, to insert "The Government shall be at no expense in connection with the preparation of or the placing of this tablet", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be placed upon the grave of Robert H. Dunlap, former brigadier general, United States Marine Corps, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va., a bronze tablet bearing a replica of a Congressional Medal of Honor, for distinguishing himself conspicuously by extraordinary courage on May 19, 1931, at La Fariniere, Cinq-Mars La-Pile, France, where he met his death in a supreme effort to save the life of a French peasant woman. The Government shall be at no expense in connection with the preparation of or the placing of this tablet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DEDICATION TO PHILADELPHIA OF TRACT OF LAND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3542) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to dedicate to the city of Philadelphia for street purposes a tract of land situate in the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to dedicate to the city of Philadelphia, for street purposes, all that certain lot or piece of ground situate in the thirtieth ward of the city of Philadelphia and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point formed by the intersection of the southerly side of Bainbridge Street, 50 feet wide, and the westerly side of Twenty-fourth Street; thence south 75°18'58" E., 53 feet and 11⅛ inches to a point, the said point being the intersection of the former southerly line of Bainbridge Street, 50 feet wide, and the northwesterly line of Grays Ferry Road, 60 feet wide; thence south 57°14'27" W., 60 feet and 4⅛ inches along the said side of Grays Ferry Road to a point in the westerly side of Twenty-fourth Street; thence along the same north 15°4'32" E., 59 feet and 2¼ inches to the first-mentioned point and place of beginning, containing thirty-five one thousandths of an acre of land, more or less.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is the area that is proposed to be deeded to the city of Philadelphia?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill simply releases to the city of Philadelphia a few feet of land in order to straighten out a highway and to make it safer for the public.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL J. BUDZINSKI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 865) to correct the naval record of Michael J. Budzinski, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, benefits, and privileges upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy Michael J. Budzinski shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the United States Navy on the 15th day of December 1918: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Michael J. Budzinski."

IRWIN D. COYLE

The bill (H.R. 2041) for the relief of Irwin D. Coyle was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Irwin D. Coyle, lieutenant commander, United States Navy, in the sum of $911.94, representing payment made by him to an officer of the Navy in accordance with orders of the Navy Department, which payment was disallowed by the Comptroller General: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to recredit the accounts of Chief Boatswain John B. Manghan, United States Navy, deceased, with the sum of $165.95, which amount was due and unpaid to Chief Boatswain Manghan at the date of his death on May 23, 1932, and was subsequently applied by the Comptroller General of the United States to offset in part the disallowance of $911.94 then outstanding in the accounts of Lt. Comdr. Irwin D. Coyle, Supply Corps, United States Navy.

DAISY M. AVERY

The bill (H.R. 880) for the relief of Daisy M. Avery was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the funds not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Daisy M. Avery, in complete payment and settlement of all claims against the United States Government on account of an injury sustained by the said Daisy M. Avery while in the performance of her duty as an employee of the United States Government on March 28, 1922: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

FRANK WILKINS

The bill (H.R. 4542) for the relief of Frank Wilkins, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $100 to Frank Wilkins for the death of a horse caused by a shot on the military reservation at Fort McPherson, Ga., in December 1925.

DONGJI INVESTMENT CO., LTD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3016) for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co., Ltd., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Private Law No. 228, Seventy-second Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of the Dongji Investment Co., Ltd.," be, and it is hereby, amended by deleting from lines 5 and 6 the words "in excess of the amount of the performance bond given by such company."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, during the last Congress a bill for relief of the Dongji Investment Co. of Hawaii was reported favorably and passed. This bill proposes to amend that act. The Government made a contract with the company for certain timbers for the navy yard at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, but owing to circumstances which intervened it was impossible for the investment company to fulfill its contract and the Government exacted certain penalties. It is a charitable organization. So in the last Congress the bill to relieve it of the claim of the Government was introduced and passed. There was a bond filed to the extent of $2,400. It is proposed to relieve the company of everything except the amount of that bond as it does not have the money with which to pay it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see that the Navy Department recommends the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes; it is recommended by the Navy Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE LAWLEY & SON CORPORATION, OF BOSTON

The bill (S. 3047) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of George Lawley & Son Corporation, of Boston, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a very large amount seems to be involved in this bill. Is the Senator from Kentucky thoroughly convinced it is right?

Mr. LOGAN. It is true that the amount carried by the bill is large, amounting to about $93,000. It grew out of a contract made by the Government about 1898 to build two torpedo boats. The contractors lost a lot of money.

The Government did not know how to build them, neither did the contractor. The matter was referred to the Court of Claims some years ago. The court reported that the amount, about $93,000, was what the concern lost. It did not enter a judgment, and perhaps had not such authority under the resolution. The claim is undoubtedly just. There is no legal obligation on the Government to pay it, but it grew out of the change in plans and specifications through no fault of the contractor.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator and his committee believe it is all right?

Mr. LOGAN. We are satisfied the claim should be paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was it a unanimous report?

Mr. LOGAN. It was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $92,781 to the George Lawley & Son Corporation, of Boston, Mass., being the difference between the actual cost of the construction of two torpedo boats and the amount paid under the contract entered into for the building of said boats, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 135, Seventy-third Congress, second session.

W. H. KEY AND ESTATE OF JAMES R. WILSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2112) for the relief of W. H. Key and the estate of James R. Wilson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out the initial "R" and insert "E"; in line 12, to strike out the numeral "2" and insert "21"; and on page 2, line 3, to strike out the initial "R" and insert "E", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $160 to W. H. Key and the estate of James E. Wilson, their heirs or assigns, as compensation for the NE¼NE¼ sec. 31, T. 7 S., R. 8 W., Huntsville meridian, Lawrence County, Ala., erroneously deeded to the United States of America by George E. Barnett, trustee of S. E. Gardner (bankrupt), by deed dated March 21, 1918, and recorded among the land records of Lawrence County in liber 2, folio 148, March 23, 1918: Provided, That the said W. H. Key and the estate of James E. Wilson, their and each of their heirs or assigns, shall quitclaim to the United States all of their rights, title, and interest in and to the said described land.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of W. H. Key and James E. Wilson."

MARY JOSEPHINE LOBERT

The bill (H.R. 4959) for the relief of Mary Josephine Lobert was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill from the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this is a bill for the relief of Mary Josephine Lobert. Her husband gave bond on or about February 22, 1928, for the appearance of one John Wunder in the Federal court to answer to a charge of violation of the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. An indictment was returned against Wunder, and his case was called for trial May 16, 1928. He did not appear and later was found confined in the State penitentiary at Little Rock, Ark.

In the meantime judgment on the bond had been entered against Mr. Lobert but had not been paid. He promptly notified the Federal authorities of the whereabouts of Wunder and requested a remission of the judgment. With full knowledge of the fact that Wunder was in custody of the State authorities of Arkansas, the United States marshal insisted that Mr. Lobert pay the amount of the judgment, and this was done on December 31, 1929.

Under the circumstances it was not possible for Mr. Lobert to produce the defendant Wunder in the Federal court as required by his bond. The State of Arkansas had the defendant. They took good care of him until his term expired in June 1931 when he was turned over to the Federal authorities as required by his bond.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has he ever been produced?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; he has. As I just stated, the State of Arkansas had the defendant. They took good care of him until his term expired in June 1931, when he was turned over to the Federal authorities.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary Josephine Lobert, widow of M. J. Lobert, the sum of $1,632.68, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States representing judgment in the amount of $1,632.68, secured to the United States for the United States District Court of the Western District of Texas against M. J. Lobert, on account of bond of $1,500, for the appearance of Johnnie (Jack) Wander (Wunder), charged with a violation of the Motor Vehicle Theft Act, which bond was forfeited by reason of the failure of the said defendant to appear, and $132.68 being court costs, paid into court on December 31, 1929, and deposited by the United States marshal for the western district of Texas, and covered into the Treasury of the United States on January 9, 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

KATHERINE G. TAYLOR

The bill (H.R. 2818) for the relief of Katherine G. Taylor was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Katherine G. Taylor, superintendent Taylor Hospital, Ridley Park, Pa., the sum of $159. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for medical aid rendered to Laura Mae Kurtz as a result of being struck by United States Army Cadillac truck no. 60186 on March 20, 1929, near Ridley Park, Pa.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ARTHUR K. FINNEY

The bill (H.R. 526) for the relief of Arthur K. Finney was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur K. Finney, of Plymouth, Mass., the sum of $108.77 in full compensation for handling two carloads of coal, totaling 84.19 tons, sold to the United States Government and delivered to the Federal building at Plymouth, Mass.

MONUMENTAL STEVEDORE CO.

The bill (H.R. 6638) for the relief of the Monumental Stevedore Co. was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOHN H. MEHRLE

The bill (H.R. 879) for the relief of John H. Mehrle was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John H. Mehrle, of Columbus, Ohio, the sum of $1,000, in full settlement against the Government for injuries received when struck by a Government mail truck at the intersection of Fourth and Spring Streets, Columbus, Ohio, on September 5, 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The bill (H.R. 7803) authorizing the city of East St. Louis, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets, in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS UNDER AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The bill (S. 2817) to amend the act relating to contracts and agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved January 25, 1934, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the bill was considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency and unanimously reported. On January 25, 1934, an act was passed providing that section 3741 of the Revised Statutes and sections 114 and 115 of the Criminal Code of the United States shall not apply to any contracts or agreements entered into under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The sections referred to provide in effect that Members of Congress shall have no interest, direct or indirect, in any contract or agreement entered into in behalf of the United States by any officer or person authorized to make contracts in its behalf.

The purpose of the act of January 25 was to exempt Members of Congress from the application of the provisions of such sections so far as contracts and agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act are concerned.

The bill reported by the committee amends the act of January 25 so as to provide that the exemptions shall apply with respect to contracts and agreements entered into under the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, and the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933.

Mr. FESS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to contracts and agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act", approved January 25, 1934, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, and the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933."

FLORENCE HUDGINS LINDSAY AND ELIZABETH LINDSAY

The bill (H.R. 233) for the relief of Florence Hudgins Lindsay and Elizabeth Lindsay was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Florence Hudgins Lindsay and Elizabeth Lindsay, mother and sister, respectively, of Roland Martin Lindsay and James Lawrence Lindsay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, one half to each, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, for loss and damages sustained by reason of the death of said Roland Martin Lindsay and James Lawrence Lindsay on account of injuries sustained on the 6th day of October 1931, from collision with a United States Army truck operated near Grafton, York County, Va., occasioned by the said truck being operated on a dark night and without being properly lighted: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MARGUERITE CISCOE

The bill (H.R. 264) for the relief of Marguerite Ciscoe was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Marguerite Ciscoe, widow of William Ciscoe, who was fatally injured as a result of being struck by a United States mail truck No. 4182, New York City, N.Y., on July 18, 1931, suffering injuries which caused his death on November 12, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

HARVEY M. HUNTER

The bill (H.R. 323) for the relief of Harvey M. Hunter was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse Harvey M. Hunter, civilian ammunition foreman of the Ordnance Department, United States Army, the sum of $71.50, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for damage done to household goods during transportation from station at Baltimore, Md., to new station at San Francisco, Calif., August 7, 1928, to October 18, 1923, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States.

GLENDALE, CALIF.

It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

WARD A. JEFFERSON

The bill (H.R. 520) for the relief of Ward A. Jefferson, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the indebtedness of Ward A. Jefferson in the amount of $1,197.57, arising out of the fact that for the period from March 1, 1929, to January 10, 1931, he was paid for services rendered by him as a bridge tender on the Cape Cod Canal and also as rural mail carrier on the route from West Wareham, Mass., the payment of such dual compensation being in contravention of the provisions of section 6 of the act of May 10, 1916, as amended by the act of August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 582; U.S.C., title 5, sec. 58).

WILLARD B. HALL

The bill (H.R. 719) for the relief of Willard B. Hall was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Willard B. Hall, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75, being the value of a horn used by the claimant during his service with the First Kansas Infantry Band, the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Infantry Band, and the One Hundred and Tenth Engineers' Band from July 31, 1917, to May 3, 1919.

WILLIAM E. BOSWORTH

The bill (H.R. 768) for the relief of William E. Bosworth, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem in favor of William E. Bosworth, coupon note no. A–131414 in the denomination of $500 of the Victory 4¾-percent convertible gold notes of 1922–1923, matured May 20, 1923, without interest and without presentation of said note which is alleged to have been stolen or destroyed, provided the said note shall not have been previously presented and paid: Provided, That said William E. Bosworth shall first file in the Treasury Department of the United States a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said note in such form and with such corporate surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the theft or destruction of the note hereinbefore described: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOHN MOORE

The bill (H.R. 2512) for the relief of John Moore was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of John Moore, on account of injuries sustained by him while employed by the War Department at Detroit, Mich., on or about August 18, 1919, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said John Moore had made application for the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOHN A. RAPELYE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 211) for the relief of John A. Rapelye, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after "That the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of John A. Rapelye, postmaster at Flushing, N.Y., with the sum of $1,249.08 to reimburse him for money-order and postal funds stolen from the Jackson Heights station of the Flushing post office on the night of March 3, 1927: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Gillespie, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after "That the", to strike out "Postmaster General" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of E. W. Gillespie, former postmaster at Rock River, Wyo., in the sum of $94.91, such sum representing the loss in the account of the said E. W. Gillespie caused by the failure of the First National Bank of Rock River, Wyo., where the post-office funds were deposited by the said E. W. Gillespie.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

IRENE BRAND ALPER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 473) for the relief of Irene Brand Alper, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "pay", to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Irene Brand Alper the sum of $1,250 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States in full settlement for an injury incurred by her when 19 years old, when she was seriously injured and crippled for life by being struck down and run over on the 11th day of August 1921 by the United States Navy car no. 2499, in the city of New York, through the careless and negligent operation of said car by an employee of the United States Government employed at the time to operate said car: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE BUILDING, LAS VEGAS, NEV.

The bill (S. 2662) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office building at Las Vegas, Nev., was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill is the same as House bill 3900, Order of Business No. 763.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3900) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to subcontractors, labor, and material men who furnish labor and material to the Plains Construction Co., defaulted general contractor for the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., such sums as he may consider equitable and just to reimburse said subcontractors, labor, and material men for unpaid accounts left by said Plains Construction Co at the time of its default, said sums to be paid only upon proper proof of actual losses sustained exclusive of profit; and there is hereby made available for this purpose not to exceed $20,000 from any sum which may remain from the lump-sum appropriations made for building-construction purposes, notwithstanding the amount of the claims of said subcontractors in addition to the cost of completing the building exceed the limit of the cost for the construction of the Las Vegas Post Office.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in explanation of the bill I desire to say that the bill is supported by the report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury. It grows out of the con truction of a post-office building in Las Vegas, Nev., where the contractor furnished a bond which was discovered by the Government to be false and without validity and used the names of sureties that were not authorized. In other words, he forged the names of his sureties. He was afterward indicted and tried.

The materials and labor furnished went into the building and were used by the Government. The Government had the benefit of them; and when the contract was again let, the materials and the labor and everything that had been furnished under the first contractor were taken into consideration and deducted from the price of the second contract. The Government got all the benefit of these things. No one excepting those who furnished the material and the labor lost by it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Goldsmith Metal Lath Co. the sum of $892.73, to Price-Evans Foundry Corporation the sum of $1,790.10, and to R. W. Felix the sum of $27.81, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for losses suffered by the said companies by reason of the default of the Plains Construction Co., general contractors for the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., and the contractor's failure to furnish the valid bond as required by law for the protection of labor and material men furnishing labor and material on public works: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, this amendment provides for compensating certain additional subcontractors on the same job who are not covered under the language of the bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada. These claims have been passed upon and favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and also by the Committee on Claims of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2662 will be indefinitely postponed.

MARGOTH OLSEN VON STRUVE

The bill (S. 2875) for the relief of Margoth Olsen von Struve was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Margoth Olsen von Struve, widow of Henry C. von Struve, late American consul at Tenerife, Canary Islands, the sum of $5,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

STELIO VASSILIADIS

The bill (S. 2748) to authorize an appropriation for the reimbursement of Stelio Vassiliadis was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Stelio Vassiliadis the sum of $406.53, being the equivalent of 790 gold rubles at $0.5146 to the ruble, for the reimbursement of certain expenditures made by him as vice consul of Spain at Kiev, Russia, in representing the interests of the United States at that post from March 1, 1918, to the end of February 1920.

CORNELIA CLAIBORNE

The bill (S. 2919) for the relief of Cornelia Claiborne was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I notice that this bill and the next one are bills to pay a year's salary to the widows of our foreign officers who died in the Service. Is there any law which provides for that?

Mr. JOHNSON. It is the custom. I do not think it is a law.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will involve a very heavy expense if we are to pay a year's salary in all such cases.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it is the law, but I think it has been a universal custom.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There are many precedents for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossod for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Cornelia Claiborne, widow of Hamilton Cabell Claiborne, late American consul at Frankfort, Germany, the sum of $7,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service.

EMILE C. DAVIS

The bill (S. 2367) for the relief of Emilie C. Davis was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emilie C. Davis, widow of Raymond Davis, late Foreign Service officer of the United States, and formerly American consul at Aden, Arabia; Paris, France; Rosario, Argentina; and Prague, Czechoslovakia, the sum of $4,500, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2674) to amend an act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] to explain the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, this is a bill which relieves from taxation those commodities upon which a processing tax is charged when they are used by State or Federal charitable institutions. It is a bill in which many of the States are interested. They can get relief later, but this is a provision whereby they will not have to pay the processing tax in the first instance. The bill has been submitted to the Department of Agriculture and has the Department's O.K.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendments suggested have been incorporated in the bill?

Mr. DIETERICH. They have been incorporated in it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 7, after the word "State", to insert "or Federal"; and on page 3, line 4, after the word "or", to strike out "use", with a quotation mark, and insert "use. The word 'State' as used in this section shall include a State and any political subdivision thereof," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (c) of section 15 of the act entitled "An act to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to raise revenue for extraordinary expenses incurred by reason of such emergency, to provide emergency relief with respect to agricultural indebtedness, to provide for the orderly liquidation of joint-stock land banks, and for other purposes", approved May 12, 1933, is amended to read as follows:

"Any person, including any State or Federal organization or institution, delivering any product to any organization for charitable distribution or use, including any State or Federal welfare organization, for its own use, whether the product is delivered as merchandise or as a container for merchandise or otherwise, shall, if such product or the commodity from which processed is under this title subject to tax, be entitled to a refund of the amount of any tax due and paid under this title with respect to such product so delivered, or to a credit against any tax due and payable under this title of the amount of tax which would be refundable under this section with respect to such product so delivered: Provided, however, That no tax shall be refunded or credited under this section unless the person claiming the refund or credit establishes, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury (1) that he has not included the tax in the price of the product so delivered or collected the amount of the tax from the said organization, or (2) that he has repaid, or has agreed in writing to repay, the amount of the tax to the said organization. No refund shall be allowed under this section unless claim therefor is filed within 6 months after delivery of the products to the organization for charitable distribution or use. The word 'State' as used in this section shall include a State and any political subdivision thereof."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 6898) authorizing the city of Atchison, Kans., and the county of Buchanan, Mo., or either of them, or the States of Kansas and Missouri, or either of them, or the highway departments of such States, acting jointly or severally, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Atchison, Kans., was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARINO AMBROGI

The bill (S. 417) for the relief of Marino Ambrogi was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Marino Ambrogi, who was a member of Company B, One Hundred and Fourth Regiment ——— Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 20th day of December 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

CHESAPEAKE BAY BRIDGE

The bill (S. 3211) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay between Baltimore and Kent Counties, Md., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay, between Baltimore and Kent Counties, Md., authorized to be built by the Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co. by section 11 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1933, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, FLORENCE, NEBR.

The bill (S. 3230) creating the Florence Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Florence, Nebr., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Florence Bridge Commission (hereinafter created, and hereinafter referred to as the "commission"), and its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near the city of Florence, Nebr. (now a part of Omaha, Nebr.), at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the commission and its successors and assigns the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate and other property are located, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in said States, respectively.

SEC. 3. The commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and its approaches and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto by an issue or issues of negotiable bonds of the commission, bearing interest at not more than 6 percent per annum, the principal and interest of which bonds and any premium to be paid for retirement thereof before maturity shall be payable solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act. Such bonds may be registrable as to principal alone or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 20 years from their respective dates, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places as the commission may determine. The commission may repurchase and may reserve the right to redeem all or any of said bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices, not exceeding 105 and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. The commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the commission in respect of the construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge, the conservation and application of all funds, the safeguarding of moneys on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of said trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporations. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with the law and also provisions for approval by the original purchasers of the bonds of the employment of consulting engineers and of the security given by the bridge contractors and by any bank or trust company in which the proceeds of bonds or of bridge tolls or other moneys of the commission shall be deposited, and may provide that no contract for construction shall be made without the approval of the consulting engineers. The bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be deemed to be an instrumentality for interstate commerce, the postal service, and military and other purposes authorized by the Government of the United States, and said bridge and the bonds issued in connection therewith and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from all Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation. Said bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of more than 6-percent interest on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values, and the face amount thereof shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, the cost of the bridge and its approaches, and the land, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith. The cost of the bridge shall be deemed to include interest during construction of the bridge, and all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge, and the acquisition of the necessary property, and incident to the financing thereof. If the proceeds of the bonds issued shall exceed the cost as finally determined, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund hereinafter provided. Prior to the preparation of definitive bonds the commission may, under like restrictions, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates with or without coupons of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definitive bonds when such bonds have been executed and are available for delivery.

SEC. 5. Upon the completion of such bridge, it shall be the duty of said commission, until said bridge shall be taken over or acquired by one or more governmental units as provided in this act, to supervise the collection of tolls and to authorize and audit all expenditures of money received from the collection of tolls, to see that all revenues received from the bridge, except such amounts as may be necessary for the repair, operation, and maintenance thereof, shall be paid into the sinking fund and used for the amortization of the outstanding indebtedness incurred for the construction or improvement of such bridge. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been provided, the bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, and the commission, its successors and assigns, shall thereupon convey by proper instrument of conveyance all right, title, and interest in said bridge and its approaches to the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa jointly upon the agreement of such States to accept and to maintain and operate such bridge as a nontoll bridge.

SEC. 6. For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the Florence Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession; the right to contract, sue, and defend in courts of law and equity; possess a common seal; hold title to real estate and other properties; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

The commission shall consist of one person named by the governing bodies of each of the following governmental units, to wit: Douglas County, Nebr.; city of Omaha, Nebr.; Pottawattamie County, Iowa. In the event that any of said governmental units shall fail to take the necessary action, then the person holding the office of county attorney of Douglas County, Nebr., and the person holding the office of county attorney of Pottawattamie County, Iowa, shall become members of said commission. Any vacancy occurring in said commission shall be filled by the governmental unit that made the original appointment. The members of the commission shall serve without pay but shall be reimbursed out of any funds in its hands for necessary expenses incurred in the conduct of its business. The commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorney, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as it may deem necessary, and fix the compensation of such persons. All expenses and salaries shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the commission, or any member thereof, to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds provided by this act.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, BETTENDORF, IOWA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3269) relating to the construction, maintenance, and operation by the city of Davenport, Iowa, of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, State of Iowa, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 3, line 18, to strike out "4 and 5" and insert "4, 5, and 6", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Davenport, Iowa, and Davenport Bridge Commission are, and each of them is, hereby authorized to exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing B. F. Peek, G. A. Shallberg, and C. I. Josephson, of Moline, Ill.; J. W. Bettendorf, A. J. Russell, and J. L. Hecht, of Bettendorf and Davenport, Iowa., their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near Tenth Street, in Bettendorf, State of Iowa", approved May 26, 1928, and heretofore extended by acts of Congress, and the bridge constructed by said city of Davenport and said Davenport Bridge Commission, or either of them, under such authority, shall be deemed to be an instrumentality for interstate commerce, and said bridge and the approaches thereto and the revenues derived therefrom shall be exempt from all State, municipal, and local taxation.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon said city of Davenport and Davenport Bridge Commission, and each of them, the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate, including real estate devoted to park purposes, and other property in the State of Iowa and the State of Illinois as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in such States, respectively.

SEC. 3. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. Sections 4, 5, and 6 of said act approved May 26, 1928, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, NEW BOSTON, ILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 8429) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing D. S. Prentiss, R. A. Salladay, Syl F. Histed, William M. Turner, and John H. Rahilly, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the town of New Boston, Ill.", approved March 3, 1931.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas explain this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is one of the usual bridge bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. It revives the former act, as I understand?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It revives the former act. The persons named in the act did not take action within the time originally allowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 3, 1931, granting the consent of Congress to D. S. Prentiss, R. A. Salladay, Syl F. Histed, William M. Turner, and John H. Rahilly, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the town of New Boston, Ill., be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge and approaches thereto herein referred to be commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE, LAKE CITY, ARK.

The bill (H.R. 8438) to legalize a bridge across St. Francis River at or near Lake City, Ark., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the bridge now being constructed across St. Francis River at or near Lake City, Ark., by the Arkansas State Highway Commission, if completed in accordance with the plans accepted by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War as providing suitable facilities for navigation and operated as a free bridge, shall be a lawful structure, and shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Mississippi Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Carthage, Leake County, Miss., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, SULLIVAN COUNTY, IND.

The bill (H.R. 8853) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at a point in Sullivan County, Ind., to a point opposite on the Illinois shore was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved February 10, 1932, to be built by Sullivan County, Ind., or any board or commission of said county which is or may be created or established for the purpose, across the Wabash River, extending from some point in the county across said river to a point opposite on the Illinois shore, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BOARD OF INDETERMINATE SENTENCE AND PAROLE OF THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 3290) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole for the District of Columbia and to determine its functions, and for other purposes", approved July 15, 1932, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new section to be numbered "10" and to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The Board of Parole created by the act of Congress entitled 'An act to amend an act providing for the parole of United States prisoners, approved June 25, 1910, as amended', approved May 13, 1930, shall have and exercise the same power and authority over prisoners convicted in the District of Columbia of crimes against the United States and now or hereafter confined in any United States penitentiary or prison (other than the penal institutions of the District of Columbia) as is vested in the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole over prisoners confined in the penal institutions of the District of Columbia."

BREWER PAINT & WALL PAPER CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2553) for the relief of the Brewer Paint & Wall Paper Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$2,223.37" and insert "$1,981.29", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Brewer Paint & Wall Paper Co., Inc., the sum of $1,981.29, in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of extra painting work performed under contract no. W6174–qm–33, dated April 25, 1931, in connection with the construction of three barracks buildings at Langley Field, Va.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA EDWARDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6862) for the relief of Martha Edwards, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, to strike out "Rowls" and insert "Rawls", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal guardian of Martha Edwards, of East Camp, Norfolk, Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for permanent injuries sustained by her as a result of being struck by a United States naval airplane on the premises of her father at East Camp, Norfolk, Va., on October 30, 1929; and in addition, pay to the Norfolk Protestant Hospital the sum of $177, and to Dr. Julian L. Rawls the sum of $150, due them for care and attention to her as a result of said injury; Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

HARDEN F. TAYLOR

The bill (H.R. 4792) to authorize and direct the Comptroller General to settle and allow the claim of Harden F. Taylor for services rendered to the Bureau of Fisheries, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and allow the claim of Harden F. Taylor in the sum of $500 for services rendered to the Bureau of Fisheries in the preparation of a manuscript on the refrigeration of fish, notwithstanding provisions of existing law.

GALE A. LEE

The bill (H.R. 5936) for the relief of Gale A. Lee was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of Gale A. Lee, postmaster at Pueblo, Colo., with the sum of $861.02, being the amount of payments made by such postmaster during the period August 16, 1930, to October 31, 1932, as compensation at 65 cents per hour to Helen G. Engle, of Pueblo, Colo., for services as a substitute postal clerk qualified as a stenographer, which amount was disallowed in his account because the employee was during the same period a clerical assistant at $1,500 per annum in the office of the deputy clerk of the United States district court at Pueblo, Colo.

DISABILITY OF SENIOR CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7356) to provide in case of the disability of senior circuit judges for the exercise of their powers and the performance of their duties by the other circuit judges, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "illness", to insert "or other cause", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in case of the senior circuit judge of any circuit is unable because of illness or other cause to exercise any power given or to perform any duty imposed by law, such power or duty shall be exercised or performed by the other judges of that circuit in the order of the seniority of their respective commissions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who reported the bill, to explain the facts with reference to it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the present law authorizes the circuit judge next in seniority to preside over the court in the absence of the senior circuit judge, but there is no statutory designation of the judge who shall perform the many administrative duties of the senior circuit judge in case of the latter's disability. This bill simply authorizes the senior judge, who is by the present law authorized to preside, to perform other administrative duties. Its passage is requested by the Department of Justice, and is recommended by that Department.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM G. BURRESS, DECEASED

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 2439) for the relief of William G. Burress, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act" and to insert "That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of this act prior to its passage or subsequent thereto", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William G. Burress, who was a member of Company A, Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 7th day of March 1897: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall accrue by virtue of this act prior to its passage or subsequent thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LOUISE FOX

The bill (S. 1198) for the relief of Louise Fox was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Louise Fox, widow of William C. Fox, late minister to Ecuador, the sum of $10,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died of illness incurred while in the Consular Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

ANNE B. SLOCUM

The bill (S. 1199) for the relief of Anne B. Slocum was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is the same as Order of Business 766, House bill 210. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 210) for the relief of Anne B. Slocum, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Anne B. Slocum, widow of Clarence Rice Slocum, late American Consul at Fiume, the sum of $3,500, being one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act; Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1199 will be indefinitely postponed.

AUGUSTUS C. HENSLEY

The bill (S. 2909) for the relief of Augustus C. Hensley was considered, order to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives, Augustus C. Hensley, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on September 1, 1864, from the military service of the United States as a private of said company: Provided, That no back pay, pension, bounty, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

FIRE ESCAPES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 2623) to amend the act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906, as amended, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to require the erection of fire escapes in certain buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved March 19, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"That it shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building three or more stories in height, constructed or used or intended to be used as an apartment house, tenement house, flat, rooming house, lodging house, hotel, hospital, seminary, academy, school, college, institute, dormitory, asylum, sanitarium, hall, place of amusement, office building, or store, or of any building three or more stories in height, or over 30 feet in height, other than a private dwelling, in which sleeping quarters for the accommodation of 10 or more persons are provided above the first floor, to provide and cause to be erected and fixed to every such building one or more suitable fire escapes, connecting with each floor above the first floor by easily accessible and unobstructed openings, in such location and numbers and of such material, type, and construction as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may determine; except that buildings designed and built as single-family dwellings, and converted to use as apartment houses, in which not more than three families reside, including the owner or lessee, or rooming houses in which sleeping accommodations are provided for less than 10 persons above the first floor, not more than 3 stories, nor more than 40 feet in height, and having a total floor area not more than 3,000 square feet above the first floor, shall be exempted from the provisions of section 1 of this act; and except that buildings used solely as apartment houses, not more than 3 stories, nor more than 40 feet in height, so arranged that not more than 5 apartments per floor open directly, without an intervening hall or corridor, on a fire-resistive stairway, 3 feet or more in width, enclosed with masonry walls in which fire-resistive doors are provided at all openings, shall be exempted from the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building already erected, or which may hereafter be erected, in which 10 or more persons are employed at the same time in any of the stories above the second story, except three-story buildings used exclusively as stores or for office purposes, and having at least two stairways from the ground floor each 3 or more feet wide and separated from each other by a distance of at least 30 feet, from one of which stairways shall be easy access to the roof, to provide and cause to be erected and affixed thereto a sufficient number of the aforesaid fire escapes, the location and number of the same to be determined by the Commissioners, and to keep the hallways and stairways in every such building as is used and occupied at night properly lighted, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners, from sunset to sunrise.

"SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any building used or intended to be used as set forth in section 1 of this act where fire escapes are required, or any building in which 10 or more persons are employed, as set forth in section 2 of this act where fire escapes are required, also to provide, install, and maintain therein proper and sufficient guide signs, guide lights, exit lights, hall and stairway lights, standpipes, fire extinguishers, and alarm gongs and striking stations in such locations and numbers and of such type and character as the Commissioners may determine; except that in buildings less than six stories in height, standpipes will not be required when fire extinguishers are installed in such numbers and of such type and character as the Commissioners may determine.

"SEC. 4. The Commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to issue such orders and to adopt and enforce such regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes and carry into effect the provisions of this act, and to require any alterations or changes that may become necessary in buildings now or hereafter erected, in order properly to locate or relocate fire escapes, or to afford access to fire escapes, and to require any changes or alterations in any building that may be necessary in order to provide for the erection of additional fire escapes, or for the installation of other appliances required by this act, when in the judgment of the Commissioners such additional fire escapes or appliances are necessary.

"SEC. 5. Each elevator shaft and stairway extending to the basement of the buildings heretofore mentioned shall terminate in a fireproof compartment or enclosure separating the elevator shaft and stairs from other parts of the basement, and no opening shall be made or maintained in such compartment or enclosure unless the same be provided with fireproof doors.

"Such buildings as are used solely for office buildings above the second floor and defined under the building regulations of the District of Columbia to be fireproof are exempted from the requirements of this act as to fire escapes, guide signs, and alarm gongs; but when the face of a wall of any such fireproof building is within 30 feet of a combustible building or structure, or when the side or sides, front or rear of such building or structure faces within 30 feet of a combustible building, or contains a light or air shaft or similar recess within 30 feet of a combustible building, then each and every window or opening in said wall or walls shall be protected from fire by automatic iron shutters or wire glass in fireproof sash and frames.

"SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful to obstruct any hall, passageway, corridor, or stairway in any building enumerated in this act with baggage, trunks, furniture, cans, or with any other thing whatsoever.

"SEC. 7. No door or window leading to any fire escape shall be covered or obstructed by any fixed grating or barrier, and no person shall at any time place any incumbrance or obstacle upon any fire escape or upon any platform, ladder, or stairway leading to or from any fire escape.

"SEC. 8. Any person failing or neglecting to provide fire escapes, guide signs, guide lights, exit lights, hall and stairway lights, standpipes, fire extinguishers, alarm gongs, and striking stations, or other appliances required by this act after notice from the Commissioners so to do, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, and shall be punished by a further fine of $5 for each day that he fails to comply with such notice. Any person violating any other provision of this act or regulations promulgated hereunder shall be punished, upon conviction thereof, by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100 for each offense.

"SEC. 9. The notice from the Commissioners requiring the erection of fire escapes and other appliances enumerated in this act shall specify the character and number of fire escapes or other appliances to be provided, the location of the same, and the time within which said fire escapes or other appliances shall be provided, and in no case shall more than 90 days be allowed for compliance with said notice unless the Commissioners shall, in their discretion, deem it necessary to extend their time.

"SEC. 10. Such notice shall be deemed to have been served if delivered to the person to be notified, or if left with any adult person at the usual residence or place of business of the person to be notified in the District of Columbia, or if no such residence or place of business can be found in said District by reasonable search, if left with any adult person at the office of any agent of the person to be notified, provided such agent has any authority or duty with reference to the building to which said notice relates, or if no such office can be found in said District by reasonable search if forwarded by registered mail to the last-known address of the person to be notified and not returned by the post-office authorities, or if no address be known or can by reasonable diligence be ascertained, or if any notice forwarded as authorized by the preceding clause of this section be returned by the post-office authorities, if published on 10 consecutive days in a daily newspaper published in the District of Columbia, or if by reason of an outstanding unrecorded transfer of title the name of the owner in fact cannot be ascertained beyond a reasonable doubt, if served on the owner of record in the manner hereinbefore in this section provided, or if delivered to the agent, trustee, executor, or other legal representative of the estate of such person. Any notice to a corporation shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to have been served on such corporation if served on the president, secretary, treasurer, general manager, or any principal officer of such corporation in the manner hereinbefore provided for the service of notices on natural persons holding property in their own right, and notice to a foreign corporation shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to have been served if served on any agent of such corporation personally, or if left with any person of suitable age and discretion residing at the usual residence or employed at the usual place of business of such agent in the District of Columbia: Provided, That in case of failure or refusal of the owner entitled to the beneficial use, rental, or control of any buildings specified in this act to comply with the requirements of the notice provided for in section 9, the Commissioners are hereby empowered and it is their duty to cause such erection of fire escapes and other appliances mentioned in the notice provided for, and they are hereby authorized to assess the costs thereof as a tax against the buildings on which they are erected and the ground on which the same stands, and to issue tax-lien certificates against such building and grounds for the amount of such assessments, bearing interest at the rate of 10 percent per annum, which certificates may be turned over by the Commissioners to the contractor for doing the work.

"SEC. 11. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in term time or in vacation, may, upon a petition of the District of Columbia, filed by its said Commissioners, issue an injunction to restrain the use or occupation of any building in the District of Columbia in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 12. As used in this act—

"(a) The terms 'apartment house', 'tenement house', and 'flat' mean a building in which rooms in suites are provided for occupancy by three or more families.

"(b) The term 'rooming house' means a building in which rooms are rented and sleeping quarters provided to accommodate 10 or more persons, not including the family of the owner or lessee.

"(c) The term 'lodging house' means a building in which sleeping quarters are provided to accommodate 10 or more transients.

"(d) The term 'hotel' means a building in which meals are served and rooms are provided for the accommodation of 10 or more transients.

"(e) The term 'elevator shaft' includes a dumbwaiter shaft.

"(f) The term 'fire escape' means an exterior open stairway or arrangement of ladders constructed entirely of incombustible materials and of approved design, or an interior or exterior stairway of fire-resistive construction with enclosing walls of masonry with fire-resistive doors and windows.

"(g) The term 'standpipe' means a vertical iron or steel pipe provided with hose connections and valves, so arranged as to supply water for fire-fighting purposes.

"(h) The terms 'fireproof' and 'fire-resistive' have the same meaning as is ascribed to the term 'fire-resistive' in the Building Code of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 13. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

CARLSBAD CAVERNS NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H.R. 5397) to authorize the exchange of the use of certain Government land within the Carlsbad Caverns National Park for certain privately owned land therein, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, INDIANA

The bill (H.R. 8834) authorizing the owners of Cut-Off Island, Posey County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge or causeway across the old channel of the Wabash River, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCY COBB STEWART

The bill (S. 3026) for the relief of Lucy Cobb Stewart, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lucy Cobb Stewart, widow of Nathaniel B. Stewart, late consul general at Barcelona, the sum of $9,000, such sum representing 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND BY THE UNITED STATES

The bill (S. 3303) to provide for the expeditious condemnation and taking of possession of land by officers, agencies, or corporations of the United States authorized to acquire real estate by condemnation in the name of or for the use of the United States for the construction of public works now or hereafter authorized by Congress was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of expediting the actual construction of public works now or hereafter authorized by Congress, with a view to eliminating unnecessary delay in the institution of such proceedings and in acquiring possession of land for such works and in increasing immediate employment thereon, any officer, agency, or corporation of the United States authorized to acquire real estate (hereinafter referred to as "condemnor") in the name of or for the use of the United States for such public works, shall, upon the filing of any petition for condemnation of any land or interest therein for such public works, have the right to take immediate possession of said lands, easements, or rights-of-way, to the extent of the interest to be acquired, and proceed with such public works thereon as have been authorized by Congress: Provided, That the court shall have power to fix the time within which and the terms upon which the parties in possession shall be required to surrender possession to the petitioner of all land (a) within 300 feet of dwellings and other structures actually and substantially in use or (b) actually used for agricultural purposes other than forestry or timber: Provided further, That certain and adequate provision shall have been made for the payment of just compensation to the party or parties entitled thereto, either by previous appropriation by the United States or by the deposit of moneys or other form of security by the condemnor in such amount and form as shall be approved by the court in which such proceedings shall be instituted. The respondent or respondents may move at any time in the court to increase or change the amounts or securities, and the court shall make such order as shall be just in the premises, and as shall adequately protect the respondents. In every case the proceedings in condemnation shall be diligently prosecuted on the part of the condemnor in order that such compensation may be promptly ascertained and paid.

SEC. 2. In the institution of any such proceeding for condemnation, it shall be sufficient if the petition describes the land to be acquired by the external boundaries of the area to be taken and joins as parties to such proceeding only such persons who are in actual possession of such land or who are actually known to the condemnor to have any interest therein: Provided, That prior to the commencement of any hearing for the determination of the amount of just compensation to be paid in respect of the taking of any tract of land within such area, such petition may be amended to describe such tract in manner sufficient for the identification thereof, and all persons who shall have been found to have an interest in such tract shall be given notice of such proceeding.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this act shall not be construed to be in substitution for, but shall be alternative or supplemental to, any method of acquiring land or interests therein or possession thereof provided by law.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 7581) to authorize a board composed of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Agriculture to negotiate with foreign buyers with the view of selling American agricultural surplus products at the world market price and to accept in payment therefor silver coin or bullion at such value as may be agreed upon, which shall not exceed 25 percent above the world market price of silver, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates based upon the agreed value of such silver bullion or coin in payment for the products sold, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RIFLE RANGES FOR THE ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2130) to authorize an appropriation for the purchase of land in Wyoming for use as rifle ranges for the Army of the United States, which had been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "$13,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$16,000"; on line 6, to strike out "one thousand two hundred and eighty" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand six hundred", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a sum not to exceed $16,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of 1,600 acres of land adjacent to Fort Francis E. Warren in the State of Wyoming for use of the United States Army for rifle-range purposes. All purchase of land under this act shall be made by the Secretary of War pursuant to law governing the acquisition of land for the use of the Army of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED HERRICK

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 250) for the relief of Fred Herrick.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Oregon explain this bill?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, a similar bill for the relief of Mr. Herrick was introduced in an earlier Congress, but met with an adverse report, due partly to the form of the bill itself. The bill was then redrawn in order to meet the requirements of the Department, and it is no longer a claim bill, but is merely a bill to provide a payment in recognition of work performed by Mr. Herrick, of which work the Government obtained the benefit. There is a proviso at the end of the bill that Mr. Herrick, upon acceptance of this money, shall waive any claim he might have against the United States.

The facts are summarized in the report. An examination will disclose that Mr. Herrick entered into a contract with the Government under which he built railroad, logging roads, and partially constructed a sawmill. His total expenditures under the contract amounted to approximately $1,000,000.

Subsequently Mr. Herrick was overtaken with difficulties and was unable to complete his contract within the time set by the contract. Thereupon the Bureau of Forestry, acting under a provision of the contract, canceled the contract, and the Government became the beneficiary of all expenditures and improvements made by Mr. Herrick. The timber had been sold to Mr. Herrick at the price of $2.80 per thousand, and on the resale to another concern a higher price was obtained, yielding a net profit to the Government on the sale of the stumpage. The increased price obtained from the resale was undoubtedly due to the improvements made by Mr. Herrick.

Mr. Herrick is now a very old man, he is ill, he is bankrupt, and in justice this restitution should be made to him.

The committee reported the bill unanimously after full consideration of the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Fred Herrick, of Spokane, Wash., the sum of $50,000 in recognition of work done by the said Fred Herrick in making more accessible the timber resources of the Malheur National Forest by railroad construction: Provided, That the said Fred Herrick shall disclaim and waive all right or claim to any money paid by him and covered into the Treasury in connection with that certain contract for the purchase of timber on the Malheur National Forest, Oreg., dated June 15, 1923.

EDNA B. WYLIE

The bill (H.R. 1362) for the relief of Edna B. Wylie was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD V. BRYANT

The bill (H.R. 2169) for the relief of Edward V. Bryant was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GLENNA F. KELLEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1197) for the relief of Glenna F. Kelley, which had been reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "Postmaster General" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Glenna F. Kelley, postmaster at Goreville, Ill., in the sum of $48.34. Such sum represents the amount of a deficit in the accounts of the said Glenna F. Kelley, caused by the loss by said Glenna F. Kelley of postal funds deposited in the First National Bank of Goreville, Ill., which failed December 30, 1930.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

R. GILBERTSEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1211) for the relief of R. Gilbertsen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "Postmaster General" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of R. Gilbertsen, postmaster at Glenburn, N.Dak., in the sum of $250.30 due the United States, on account of the loss of postal funds resulting from the failure of the Glenburn State Bank of Glenburn, N.Dak.: Provided, That the said R. Gilbertsen shall assign to the United States any and all claims he may have to dividends arising from the liquidation of said bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MARIE TOENBERG

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1212) for the relief of Marie Toenberg, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "Postmaster General" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Marie Toenberg, postmaster at Alexander, N.Dak., in the sum of $239.89 due the United States, on account of the loss of postal funds resulting from the failure of the First National Bank of Alexander, Alexander, N.Dak.: Provided, That the said Marie Toenberg shall assign to the United States any and all claims she may have to dividends arising from the liquidation of said bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EMMA FEIN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1633) for the relief of Emma Fein, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emma Fein, widow of John W. Fein, the sum of $3,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government as compensation for the death of her husband, who died as a result of injuries received on July 17, 1913, while employed in the Isthmian Canal Commission blacksmith shop at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the report on the bill just passed be printed in the RECORD in conjunction with the action of the Senate.

There being no objection, the report (No. 705) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S.Rept. No. 705, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 1633):

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1633) for the relief of Emma Fein, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

In line 6, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government."

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The bill, as amended, provides for the payment of $3,500 to Emma Fein, widow of John W. Fein, as compensation for the death of her husband, who died as a result of injuries received on July 17, 1913, while employed in the Isthmian Canal Commission blacksmith shop at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone.

The records of the Panama Canal show that Mr. Fein was employed by the mechanical division as a blacksmith at 70 cents per hour; that on July 17, 1913, while working at a vise in the blacksmith shop at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone, a locomotive was accidentally pushed off end of track, struck Mr. Fein, knocked him down, and he received a crushing injury to right foot and Pott's fracture, which resulted in amputation of distal half of right foot.

Mr. Fein filed claim for compensation under the act of May 30, 1908, as amended March 4, 1911; his claim was approved and payment made for the period from July 16, 1913, to July 16, 1914, in the sum of $1,737.60. (This law provided for the payment of 1 year's salary.)

Under date of January 29, 1916, Mr. Fein made the following statement:

"* * * I am crippled for life and will never again be able to work for my living, from the fact that my foot is still an open wound, bleeding, emission of pus, and high fevers. If I stand on it for more than 20 minutes, there is intense suffering, and I cannot walk at all without the use of a heavy cane."

On January 26, 1916, his doctor stated:

"* * * I have just made a visit to his home, and the examination made today discloses conditions about the same—abnormal tenderness and sensitiveness around the stump, two small sore and raw areas, and some suppuration from two fistulous openings. In my opinion there is evidently some bone necrosis as well as the unhealed stump, and I believe his disability to be practically permanent. Mr. Fein's general health has suffered from this accident on account of the fact that he was a particularly active man, and since the accident has been unable to get out and do anything for himself. The confinement and lack of exercise has worn on him very much both mentally and physically."

Mr. Fein died November 6, 1919.

Dr. Carmichael, of Little Rock, says:

"In my opinion the injury which he (Mr. Fein) received while in the employment of the Government in Panama was the cause of his death, as the medullary substance of the tibia was involved."

General Goethals, then Governor of the Canal Zone, stated:

"The case is only one of scores that have come to my notice within the past few years in which it appears to me that the compensation provided by law is quite inadequate. I have no objection to being quoted in this regard * * *."

Bills for the relief of John W. Fein and for the relief of his widow have been introduced in nine prior Congresses. The first bill was in the Sixty-fourth Congress, introduced March 29, 1916.

Mr. Fein left a widow, 3 daughters, and 1 son.

The facts are fully set forth in the following correspondence, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

THE PANAMA CANAL, WASHINGTON OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., March 31, 1916.

Hon. N. P. BRYAN,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th instant, enclosing a copy of Senate bill 5314, for the relief of John W. Fein, and requesting a report thereon.

In reply there is enclosed herewith a copy of a letter addressed to this office by the auditor of the Panama Canal, dated January 13, 1916, reporting on House bill 5203, which bill appears to be identical with the one enclosed with your communication. The auditor's letter is self-explanatory, and shows that Mr. Fein has received all the compensation which the Panama Canal authorities were by law authorized to pay to him on account of his injury.

Very respectfully,

EARL I. BROWN,
Major Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
Chief of Office.

CANAL ZONE ACCOUNTING DEPARTMENT,
Balboa Heights, January 13, 1916.

Maj. F. C. BOGGS,
Chief of Office, the Panama Canal, Washington, D.C.

SIR: Referring to bill H.R. 5203, for the relief of Mr. John W. Fein, you are advised as follows:

The records show that Mr. Fein was employed by the mechanical division as a blacksmith at 70 cents per hour; that on July 17, 1913, while working at a vise in the blacksmith shop at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone, a locomotive was accidentally pushed off end of track, struck Mr. Fein, knocked him down, and he received a crushing injury to right foot and Pott's fracture; which resulted in amputation of distal half of right foot.

Mr. Fein filed claim for compensation under the act of May 30, 1908, as amended March 4, 1911; his claim was approved and payment made for the period from July 16, 1913, to July 16, 1914, in the sum of $1,737.60.

Respectfully,

H. A. A. SMITH,
Auditor Panama Canal.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION—REPORT OF ACCIDENT INVOLVING PERSONAL INJURY

Name of injured person in full, John W. Fein; nationality, American; place of birth, Brockenhaven, Germany; age, 60; sex, male; color, white; married; occupation, blacksmith; address on Isthmus, Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone; other address (if any), no other; name and address of relative or friend, and how related to injured person, Mrs. Emma Fein, wife, Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone; rating, I.C.C., blacksmith, mechanical division, M.C. no. 37632; superior, A. L. Robinson, master mechanic; date and hour of accident, July 17, 1913, 4:18 a.m.; exact locality of accident, I.C.C. blacksmith shop, Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone.

Cause and nature of accident (describe fully): Mr. Fein was working at his anvil, which is located just inside the south end of the shop and about 10 feet from the end of the drop-pit track. A dead engine, no. 57, was standing on the end of the drop-pit track, with the tender toward Mr. Fein, and the switch leading from the coal-and-sand-chute track was open. A night hostler, J. Q. Aycock, white American, using the rear engine, pushed three others north on the coal-and-sand-chute track for coal and sand and, not knowing that the drop-pit track switch was open, ran in and struck no. 57 and knocked it back on Mr. Fein's anvil so suddenly that he had no opportunity to get out of the way and was caught under the tender, receiving the stated injuries.

On investigation it is learned that Hostler John T. Wilson put engine no. 57 on the drop-pit track about 30 minutes before the accident and, following yard custom, left the switch open. Mr. Aycock, who, had he followed yard rules, should have been on the leading engine of the four he was moving, explains that they were all dead except the one in rear and that owing to steam escaping from engines on a parallel track near the switch he was unable to see the switch light which was set against him (showing red), and did not know that he was on the drop-pit track until his leading engine struck no. 57. Aycock's brakeman, Julian Grant, M.C. no. 3892, who should have been on the lookout on the leading engine, disappeared immediately after the accident and has not returned.

Nature of injury sustained, crushed foot, right. Witnesses (state names, addresses, and occupations), J. Q. Aycock, Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone, night hostler, M.C. no. 136491; Thomas McCulloch, Empire, Canal Zone, machinist, M.C. no. 38342; to what hospital taken, Ancon Hospital, Ancon, Canal Zone; attending physician (name and address), Dr. T. W. Erhart, I.C.C., Ancon Hospital; did injury result in death (if so, state time, date, and place)? No.

Dated at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone, this 18th day of July 1913.

JACK PHILLIPS,
Lieutenant No. 2, Zone Police, District Commander.

HEADQUARTERS, DIVISION OF POLICE AND PRISONS,
ANCON, CANAL ZONE, July 21, 1913.

Official copy respectfully referred to chairman and chief engineer, Culebra, Canal Zone, for his information.

C. W. BARBER, Chief of Division.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION—STATEMENT OF WITNESS TO ACCIDENT

Name of injured person in full, John W. Fein; date of accident, July 17, 1913; place of accident, Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone; name of witness, Thomas McCulloch; nationality of witness, American; residence of witness on Isthmus, Empire; rating, I.C.C. machinist, mechanical division; metal check no. 38342.

Statement: Mr. Fein and I were at work together when engine no. 57 was pushed up into the blacksmith shop and caught him before he could get away. Myself, being on the outside, and nothing in my way, was able to get out of the way by crawling on my hands and knees and not taking the time to get up.

Dated at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone, this 18th day of July 1913.

I certify that the above is a true statement of the facts as witnessed by me.

THOMAS MCCULLOCH.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION—STATEMENT OF WITNESS TO ACCIDENT

Name of injured person in full, John W. Fein; date of accident, July 17, 1913; place of accident, Pedro Miguel; name of witness, J. Q. Aycock; nationality of witness, American; residence of witness on Isthmus, Pedro Miguel; rating, I.C.C. night hostler, Pedro Miguel; M.C. no. 136491.

Statement: I was hostler in charge of engines 281, 252, 206, and 229 at Pedro Miguel shop on July 17. Taking these engines to coal chute to give them coal and sand, engine 281 was the only engine that had enough steam to handle engines. So I was on it and had the negro brakeman on back end of engine 229 and told him to look out for the rear end and not let me back into anything, and he got off and didn't throw the switch to drop it, and I backed in on engines 59 and 57 that were on drop track, and it pushed engine 57 back, and it is the one that hurt John Fein.

Dated at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone, this 18th day of July 1913.

I certify that the above is a true statement of the facts as witnessed by me.

J. Q. AYCOCK.

JOHN M. DAVIS,
Corporal No. 12, Zone Police.

THE PANAMA CANAL,
Balboa Heights, October 7, 1914.

Mr. JOHN W. FEIN,
Little Rock, Ark.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 16 with regard to your physical condition.

Under date of September 12 the claim officer advised you that all the injury compensation allowed by law had been paid to you. The only way, therefore, by which it would be possible for you to receive additional compensation would be the approval by Congress of a special claim for your relief.

Inquiries have been made with the end in view of finding a position on the Isthmus where the nature of the work would permit of your reemployment, but without success, and I regret very much that the gradual completion of the work here and the general reduction of force which is in progress militate against your reinstatement in this service at the present time.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. GOETHALS, Governor.

THE PANAMA CANAL,
Balboa Heights, October 31, 1914.

Miss MARY A. FEIN,
Little Rock, Ark.

MADAM: In reply to your letter of October 16, 1914, you are informed that there is very little on our files concerning the injury sustained by your father, Mr. John W. Fein, which is not already in his possession. The police report of the accident states that it occurred on July 17, 1913, at about 4:18 a.m. in the Isthmian Canal Commission blacksmith shop at Pedro Miguel, Canal Zone. The following is an extract from the police report:

"Mr. Fein was working at his anvil, which is located just inside the south end of the shop and about 10 feet from the end of the drop-pit track. A dead engine, no. 57, was standing on the end of the drop-pit track, with the tender toward Mr. Fein, and the switch leading from the coal-and-sand-chute track was open. A night hostler, J. Q. Aycock, white American, using the rear engine, pushed three others north on the coal-and-sand-chute track for coal and sand, not knowing that the drop-pit track switch was open, and ran in and struck no. 57 and knocked it back on Mr. Fein's anvil so suddenly that he had no opportunity to get out of the way and was caught under the tender, receiving the stated injuries.

"On investigation it is learned that hostler John T. Wilson put engine no. 57 on the drop-pit track about 30 minutes before the accident and, following yard custom, left the switch open. Mr. Aycock, who, had he followed yard rules, should have been on the leading engine of the four he was moving, explains that they were all dead except the one in the rear, and that owing to steam escaping from engines on a parallel track near the switch he was unable to see the switch light was set against him (showing red), and did not know that he was on the drop-pit track until his leading engine struck no. 57.

"Aycock's brakeman, Julian Grant, M.C. No. 3892, who should have been on the lookout on the leading engine, disappeared immediately after the accident and has not returned."

The medical reports show that all the toes of the right foot were amputated; that the foot was mashed, with laceration at the right elbow, Pott's fracture. On December 1, 1913, the surgeon at the hospital, Dr. A. B. Herrick, certified that the amputation was in the fore part of the right foot through the proximal metatarsals, and that the subjective symptoms were a very tender and painful stump. On April 1, 1914, he reported "tender stump with ulcerating cicatrix; pain and pressure over stump; disability partial permanent." On May 1, 1914, the surgeon reported "tender stump with ulcerating cicatrix." This report was iterated on June 1, 1914, and reiterated on July 1 and July 31, 1914.

The record noted above is all the information we have concerning your father's injury. The case is only one of scores that have come to my notice within the past few years in which it appears to me that the compensation provided by law is quite inadequate. I have no objection to being quoted in this regard, if it will assist you in any way in obtaining further compensation for your father.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. GOETHALS, Governor.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., January 26, 1916.

Hon. H. M. JACOWAY,
Member of Congress, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: With reference to the case of John W. Fein, beg to advise that Mr. Fein first consulted me on May 15, 1914. The cause of consultation was an unhealed amputation wound of the right foot. The stump was very tender and the skin had come away in several places and there was an exudation of pus from, at that time, rather deep-seated cavities.

I was at that time of the opinion that the chief cause of this wound not healing was in the skin, part of which had been lost and only a partially successful skin graft emplanted.

Since that time, whenever Mr. Fein uses that foot to any extent, in spite of the fact that all possible paddings and precautions are used, this skin breaks down and suppurates.

I have just made a visit at his home, and the examination made today discloses conditions about the same, abnormal tenderness and sensitiveness around the stump, two small sore and raw areas, and some suppuration from two fistulous openings.

In my opinion, there is evidently some bone necrosis as well as the unhealed stump, and I believe his disability to be practically permanent.

Mr. Fein's general health has suffered from this accident on account of the fact that he was a particularly active man, and since the accident has been unable to get out and do anything for himself. The confinement and lack of exercise has worn on him very much both mentally and physically.

Respectfully,

MILTON VAUGHAN, M.D.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., January 29, 1916.

To the Members of Congress, Washington, D.C.

GENTLEMEN: I take the liberty of dictating the following statement in connection with my claim, H.R. 20754, in order to give facts upon which you may work:

I received official orders from the Washington offices of the Chief Engineer of the Commission to report for duty at Colon, on September 22, 1906, and my services began on October 11, 1906. From that date I worked steadily, with the exception of one vacation, until July 17, 1913, on which date, about 4:30 o'clock in the morning I was run down by an engine while at my post of duty in the shops at Pedro Miguel.

This accident occurred without any warning whatever. I was absolutely without means of protection; in other words, there was nothing to prevent an engine from running through the shops. The stopping post had been removed, for reasons unknown to the writer.

After the accident, the Commission and surgeons did everything that could be done for one so broken up and bruised, as far as authorized by Congress. During the long months of illness that followed, I received good nursing and later was given an artificial extension to my foot.

But for all this, I am crippled for life and will never again be able to work for my living, from the fact that my foot is still an open wound, bleeding, emission of pus, and high fevers. If I stand on it for more than 20 minutes, there is intense suffering, and I cannot walk at all without the use of a heavy cane. On account of the long confinement on the Isthmus, and since at home in Little Rock, my health and strength have left me and I am indeed a very weak man. Since my arrival at Little Rock on May 10, 1914, I have been under constant care of Dr. Milton Vaughan, an ex-Government surgeon, and it has now cost me much of the money I earned in Panama to meet expenses incident to such a condition, and unless I get relief in the very near future, what little I have left will soon be gone also.

I have a young son that I am trying to educate, and unless financial relief is received the boy will have to be taken from school and prospects of an education abandoned.

I do not believe it is the spirit of our Congressmen to turn down the appeal of a man who has given his best efforts for over 7 years in assisting to build the Canal; therefore, I ask that I be given relief in Congress, this request being made as per instructions of Colonel Goethals contained in his letter attached to this file.

In conclusion, I wish to state that I have in my possession copies of every business transaction that has ever occurred between the writer and the Commission, which are at your disposal, if needed.

During my long service on the Isthmus, I never received a reprimand from my superiors and was never absent from my work except when confined to my bed in the hospital there with an attack of malaria.

My entire record is on file in the office of the Commission at Washington and open for your inspection at any time.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. FEIN, No. 37632.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., July 27, 1921.

Mr. JACOWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. JACOWAY: In regard to the cause of the death of John W. Fein, will state that, in my opinion, the injury which he received while in the employment of the Government in Panama was the cause of his death, as the medullary substance of the tibia was involved.

Yours truly,

A. L. CARMICHAEL, M.D.

This sworn to by me the 27th day of July 1921.

A. L. CARMICHAEL, M.D.

C. A. DICKSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 916) for the relief of C. A. Dickson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words, "Postmaster General" and to insert in lieu thereof the words, "Comptroller General of the United States", and on line 6, to strike out the words "and to certify such credit to the Comptroller General", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of C. A. Dickson, postmaster at Cleburne, Tex., in the sum of $72.45. Such sum represents the amount of United States postal funds lost by reason of the failure of the Home National Bank and the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Cleburne, Tex., and charged in the account of the said postmaster as a balance due the United States after the payment of final dividends in respect of such deposits.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2046) to provide relief for disbursing officers of the Army in certain cases, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the act of July 11, 1919 (ch. 9, 41 Stat. 132; U.S.C., title 31, sec. 105), be, and is hereby amended as follows: Wherever the word "Navy" appears in said act the words "or Army" be added, and wherever the words "Secretary of the Navy" appear the words "or the Secretary of War" be added.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. PATTERSON

The bill (S. 1338) for the relief of John F. Patterson was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, John F. Patterson shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company D, First Regiment Minnesota National Guard Infantry, on August 14, 1917: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

PUNISHMENT OF THE CRIME OF LYNCHING

The bill (S. 1978) to assure persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of laws, and punish the crime of lynching, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN N. KNAUFF CO., INC.

The bill (S. 2972) for the relief of John N. Knauff Co., Inc., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $19,032.78 to John N. Knauff Co., Inc., in full settlement of all claims against the Government for damage and loss incurred by said corporation in complying with the orders of the Surgeon General of the United States or his representatives on contract duly executed between the Government of the United States and the plaintiff corporation on January 28, 1920, providing for the making of certain repairs and alterations for the United States in the United States Public Health Service Hospital at Hudson, Jay, and Staple Streets, New York City, in 1920 and 1921, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 128, Seventy-third Congress, second session.

JOSEPH Y. UNDERWOOD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2431) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Y. Underwood, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$282,075" and to insert in lieu thereof "$10,000", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert C. Underwood, of Brooklyn, N.Y., as executor of the estate of Joseph Y. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $10,000, in full satisfaction of all claims of such estate against the United States arising out of services rendered by such Joseph Y. Underwood in effecting the sale of 15 wooden vessels in June 1919 and of 11 wooden vessels in January 1920 by the United States Shipping Board to the Nacirema Steamship Corporation: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Nicholson, widow of George A. Nicholson, late a United States commissioner in the western district of New York, at Canandaigua, N.Y., the sum of $183.45 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for fees earned by said George A. Nicholson, notwithstanding his failure to file a statutory oath in accordance with the provisions of volume 44, United States Statutes, page 918, approved December 11, 1926, and volume 44, United States Statutes, page 1346, approved March 2, 1927: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to order of business 560, being Senate bill 3085, which is an important measure, and which met with some objection on the part of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and, I think, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. The objectionable feature of the bill, I think, the Senator from Florida is now ready to eliminate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of Senate bill 3085, relating to the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 6, after line 9, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. Notwithstanding any limitations on its power, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon request of any borrower under section 201 (a) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, may adjust the maturities of any obligations of such borrower now held by it, or hereafter acquired by it under lawful commitments, to such periods as may in the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be proper, but such adjustment shall not extend any such maturity to more than 20 years from the advancing of the sum or sums evidenced thereby.

On page 6, line 20, to strike out "6" and insert "7"; in line 23, to strike out "(1) By striking from the first sentence thereof '$50,000,000' and inserting in lieu thereof '$100,000,000'", and insert:

(1) By striking from the first sentence thereof "$50,000,000 to or for the benefit of drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000,000 to or for the benefit of drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts, mutual nonprofit companies and incorporated water users' associations."

On page 8, line 3, after the word "repairs", to insert the words "and necessary extensions"; on line 7, after the word "repairs", to insert the words "and necessary extensions"; on line 21 to strike out "7" and to insert "8"; and at the end of the bill to add a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 882 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 661) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 882. (a) Copies of any books, records, papers, or other documents in any of the executive departments, or of any corporation all of the stock of which is beneficially owned by the United States, either directly or indirectly, shall be admitted in evidence equally with the originals thereof, when duly authenticated under the seal of such department or corporation, respectively.

"(b) Books or records of account in whatever form, and minutes (or portions thereof) of proceedings, of any such executive department or corporation, or copies of such books, records, or minutes authenticated under the seal of such department or corporation, shall be admissible as evidence of any act, transaction, occurrence, or event as a memorandum of which such books, records, or minutes were kept or made.

"(c) The seal of any such executive department or corporation shall be judicially noticed."

(b) Section 4 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, sec. 604), is amended by inserting immediately before the semicolon following the words "corporate seal" a comma and the words "which shall be judicially noticed."

SEC. 2. Section 1001 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 870), is amended by inserting immediately after the word "Government" the following: "or any corporation all the stock of which is beneficially owned by the United States, either directly or indirectly."

SEC. 3. Paragraph "First" of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 41), is amended by inserting immediately after the words "authorized by law to sue" in the first sentence thereof a comma and the following: "or by any corporation all the stock of which is beneficially owned by the United States, either directly or indirectly."

SEC. 4. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is further amended by inserting after section 5a thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5b. Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(1) The maturity of drafts or bills of exchange which may be accepted by the Corporation under section 5a of this act, and the period for which the Corporation may make loans or advances under sections 201 (c) and 201 (d) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, and under section 5 of this act, may be 5 years, or any shorter period, from February 1, 1935: Provided, That in respect of loans or advances under such section 5 to railroads, railways, and receivers or trustees thereof, the Corporation may require as a condition of making any such loan or advance for a period longer than 3 years that such arrangements be made for the reduction or amortization of the indebtedness of the railroad or railway, either in whole or in part, as may be approved by the Corporation after the prior approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"(2) The Corporation may at any time, or from time to time, extend, or consent to the extension of, the time of payment of any loan or advance made by it, through renewal, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for such payment shall not be extended beyond 5 years from February 1, 1935: Provided, That the time of payment of loans or advances to railroads, railways, and receivers or trustees thereof shall not be so extended except with the prior approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, in the case of a loan to a railroad or railway, with the prior certification of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the railroad or railway is not in need of financial reorganization in the public interest.

"(3) In connection with the reorganization under section 77 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act, approved July 1, 1898, as amended, or with receivership proceedings in a Federal court or courts, of any railroad or railway indebted to the Corporation, or of any railroad or railway the receivers or trustees of which are indebted to the Corporation, the Corporation may, with the prior approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, adjust or compromise its claim against such railroad or railway, or any such receiver or trustee, by accepting, in connection with any such reorganization or receivership proceedings and in exchange for securities or any part thereof then held, new securities which may have such terms as to interest, maturity, and otherwise as may be approved by the Corporation, or part cash and part new securities so approved: Provided, That any such adjustment or compromise shall not be made on less favorable terms than those provided in the reorganization of the railroad or railway for holders of claims of the same class and rank as the claim of the Corporation."

SEC. 5. Section 301 of the National Industrial Recovery Act (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 40, sec. 412) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That in connection with any loan or contract or any commitment to make a loan entered into by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation prior to June 26, 1933, to aid in financing part or all of the construction cost of projects pursuant to section 201(a)(1) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, the Corporation may make such further loans and contracts for the completion of any such project, or for improvements, additions, extensions, or equipment which are necessary or desirable for the proper functioning of any such project, or which will materially increase the assurance that the borrower will be able to repay the entire investment of the Corporation in such project, including such improvements, additions, extensions, or equipment; and the Corporation may disburse funds to the borrower thereunder, at any time prior to January 23, 1939, notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary contained in this section or in section 201(h) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended: Provided further, That any such further loans shall be made subject to all the terms and conditions set forth in the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, with respect to the loans authorized by section 201(a)(1) of said act."

SEC. 6. Notwithstanding any limitations on its power, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon request of any borrower under section 201(a) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, may adjust the maturities of any obligations of such borrower now held by it, or hereafter acquired by it under lawful commitments, to such periods as may in the discretion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be proper, but such adjustment shall not extend any such maturity to more than 20 years from the advancing of the sum or sums evidenced thereby.

SEC. 7. Section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 43, sec. 403), is amended as follows:

(1) By striking from the first sentence thereof "$50,000,000 to or for the benefit of drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000,000 to or for the benefit of drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts, mutual nonprofit companies, and incorporated water users' associations."

(2) By amending clause (4) thereof to read as follows:

"(4) the borrower shall agree, insofar as it may lawfully do so, that so long as any part of such loan shall remain unpaid the borrower will in each year apply to the repayment of such loan or to the purchase or redemption of the obligations issued to evidence such loan, an amount equal to the amounts by which the assessments, taxes, and other charges collected by it exceed (a) the cost of operation and maintenance of the project, (b) the debt charges on its outstanding obligations, and (c) provision for such reasonable reserves as may be approved by the Corporation; and".

(3) By adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"When any loan is authorized pursuant to the provisions of this section and it shall then or thereafter appear that repairs and necessary extensions or improvements to the project of such district or political subdivision are necessary or desirable for the proper functioning of its project or for the further assurance of its ability to repay such loan, and if it shall also appear that such repairs and necessary extensions or improvements are not designed to bring new lands into production, the Corporation, within the limitation as to total amount provided in this section, may make an additional loan or loans to such district or political subdivision for such purpose or purposes. When application therefor shall have been made by any such district or political subdivision, any loan authorized by this section may be made either to such district or political subdivision or to the holders or representatives of the holders of their existing indebtedness, and such loans may be made upon promissory notes collateraled by the obligations of such district or political subdivision, or through the purchase of securities issued or to be issued by such district or political subdivision."

SEC. 8. (a) Sections 2 and 3 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to subscribe for preferred stock and purchase the capital notes of insurance companies, and for other purposes", approved June 10, 1933, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, secs. 605f and 605g), are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. In the event that any such insurance company shall be incorporated under the laws of any State which does not permit it to issue preferred stock, exempt from assessment or additional liability, or if such laws permit such issue of preferred stock only by unanimous consent of stockholders, or upon notice of more than 20 days, or if the insurance company is a mutual organization without capital stock, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized for the purposes of this act to purchase the legally issued capital notes of such insurance company, or, if the company is a mutual organization without capital stock, such other form or forms of indebtedness as the laws of the State under which such company is organized permit, or to make loans secured by such notes or such other form or forms of indebtedness as collateral, which may be subordinated in whole or in part or to any degree to claims of other creditors.

"SEC. 3. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not subscribe for or purchase any preferred stock or capital notes of any applicant insurance company, (1) until the applicant shows to the satisfaction of the Corporation that it has unimpaired capital, or that it will furnish new capital which will be subordinate to the preferred stock or capital notes to be subscribed for or purchased by the Corporation, equal to the amount of said preferred stock or capital notes so subscribed for or purchased by the Corporation: Provided, That the Corporation may make loans upon said preferred stock or capital notes, or other form or forms of indebtedness permitted by the laws of the State under which said applicant is organized, if, in its opinion, such loans will be adequately secured by said stock or capital notes or other form or forms of indebtedness and/or such other forms of security as the Corporation may require, (2) if at the time of such subscription, purchase, or loan any officer, director, or employee of the applicant is receiving total compensation in a sum in excess of $17,500 per annum from the applicant and/or any of its affiliates, and (3) unless at such time, the insurance company agrees to the satisfaction of the Corporation that while any part of the preferred stock, notes, bonds, or debentures (or, in the case of a mutual insurance company, other form or forms of indebtedness permitted by the laws of the State under which the company is organized) of such insurance company is held by the Corporation, the insurance company, except with the consent of the Corporation, will not (a) increase the compensation received by any of its officers, directors, or employees from the insurance company and/or any of its affiliates, and in no event increase any such compensation to an amount exceeding $17,500 per annum, or (b) retire any of its stock, notes, bonds, debentures, or other forms of indebtedness issued for capital purposes. For the purposes of this section, the term 'compensation' includes any salary, fee, bonus, commission, or other payment, direct or indirect, in money or otherwise, for personal services."

(b) Section 11 of such act of June 10, 1933, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, sec. 605i), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this section and in sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act, the term 'State' means any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia."

SEC. 9. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans upon full and adequate security, based on mineral acreage, to recognized and established incorporated managing agencies of farmers' cooperative mineral rights and pools not engaged in drilling or mining operations, said loans to be made for the purpose of defraying the cost of organizing such pools.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer certain amendments sent to me by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, mainly corrective in character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 7, after the word "and" where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to insert "mutual nonprofit"; on page 7, between lines 8 and 9, to insert the following new paragraph:

(2) By striking from the second sentence thereof "district or political subdivision" and inserting in lieu thereof "district, political subdivision, company, or association."

On page 7, line 9, to strike out "(2)" and insert "(3)"; on page 7, line 23, to strike out "(3)" and insert "(4)"; on page 8, lines 4, 11, 13, 15, 18, and 20, to strike out the words "district or political subdivision" where they appear in each such line and insert in lieu thereof "district, political subdivision, company, or association."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by striking out section 3, which reads:

SEC. 3. Paragraph "First" of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., title 28, sec. 41), is amended by inserting immediately after the words "authorized by law to sue" in the first sentence thereof a comma and the following: "or by any corporation all the stock of which is beneficially owned by the United States, either directly or indirectly."

I will state exactly the effect of the amendment, so that it will be understood.

I have looked up the United States Code, title 28, section 41. Section 3 of the pending bill is an amendment to that code section. If section 3 should be adopted, it would extend to the Federal courts jurisdiction to try any case involving any amount under $3,000, and any case where a suit would be brought by a corporation all the stock of which is owned by the United States, either directly or indirectly.

I am offering this amendment because I believe that the State courts should continue in the future, as in the past, to have jurisdiction of suits involving under $3,000. I move to strike section 3 from the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this is regarded as facilitating procedure, and I will not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. C. GARBER

The bill (H.R. 1418) for the relief of W. C. Garber was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY L. HABERKORN

The bill (H.R. 2337) for the relief of Harry L. Haberkorn was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

The bill (S. 380) for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of catastrophes of nature, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Matthew E. Hanna, American minister to Nicaragua, the sum of $25,368.58, of which the sum of $25,215.50 represents the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the earthquake at Managua, Nicaragua, March 31, 1931, and the sum of $153.08 represents the amount of money and vouchers destroyed when the contents of the safe in the legation were burned.

To Willard L. Beaulac, secretary of the American Legation at Managua, Nicaragua, the sum of $1,006.82, such sum representing the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the earthquake at Managua, Nicaragua, March 31, 1931.

To Marion P. Hoover, clerk in legation at Managua, Nicaragua, the sum of $80, such sum representing the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the earthquake at Managua, Nicaragua, March 31, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent of any claim thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with any such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated for any claim in this act in excess of 10 percent of such claim on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000. The aforestated amounts shall be considered in full settlement of the aforesaid claims.

REGISTRY OF ALIENS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2692) relating to the record of registry of certain aliens, which had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments. The first amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "and", to insert "(a)".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from New York explain this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this is a bill to take care of certain Russian refugees who are in this country and who were promised that they would not be interfered with in the arrangements we have made with Russia. But they cannot go back to Russia. They would meet death, I suppose, if they did so. All the authorities here and all the departments have favored this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is another amendment of the committee to be acted on, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 3, after the word "him", it is proposed by the committee to insert the words "or (b) who was in the United States as a bona fide political or religious refugee", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes", approved March 2, 1929, is amended by adding to the end thereof the following:

"Upon application filed with the Commissioner General of Immigration within 1 year after the approval of this act such registry may also be made as to any alien not ineligible to citizenship who entered the United States prior to January 1, 1933, in whose case there is no record of admission for permanent residence and (a) who prior to that date could not be deported to any country to which it was lawful to deport him, or (b) who was in the United States as a bona fide political or religious refugee, if such alien shall make a satisfactory showing to the Commissioner General of Immigration, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, that he—

"(1) Has not been out of the United States since entry;

"(2) Is a person of good moral character;

"(3) Is not subject to deportation under any law other than the Immigration Act of 1924; and

"(4) Did not, before January 1, 1933, withhold from the immigration authorities of the United States necessary information concerning his personal history sought in connection with their application to the authorities of any foreign country for permission to deport him thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is a typographical error in line 8 on the first page, where, after the word "Commissioner", the word "General" should be stricken out, and after the word "Immigration" the words "and Naturalization" should be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed, after the word "Commissioner", to strike out the word "General", and after the word "Immigration" to insert the words "and Naturalization"; and on page 2, lines 5 and 7, to make the same amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATURALIZATION LAWS

The bill (S. 3346) to amend the naturalization laws with respect to records of registry and residence abroad was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes", approved March 2, 1929, is amended to read as follows:

"That (a) the registry of aliens at ports of entry required by section 1 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat.L., pt. I, p. 596), as amended, may be made as to any alien not ineligible to citizenship in whose case there is no record of admission for permanent residence prior to July 1, 1924, if such alien shall make a satisfactory showing to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, that he—

"(1) First entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924;

"(2) Has resided in the United States continuously since such entry;

"(3) Is a person of good moral character; and

"(4) Is not subject to deportation."

SEC. 2. The last proviso in the first paragraph of the seventh subdivision of section 4 of the Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, as amended, is amended by inserting after "American-owned vessels" the following: "or vessels operated under a demise charter by a corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of a State, Territory, District, or possession thereof."

SEC. 3. The second paragraph of the fourth subdivision of section 4 of the Naturalization Act of June 29, 1906, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "except that absence from the United States for a period of not exceeding 2 years shall not break the continuity of residence for naturalization purposes if the alien proves to the satisfaction of the court that he was absent from the United States during such period principally as a representative of American business interests."

BURIALS IN NATIONAL CEMETERIES

The bill (S. 3023) to amend sec. 4878 of the United States Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to burials in national cemeteries, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4878 of the United States Revised Statutes, as amended, be further amended by adding at the end of said section a new sentence reading as follows: "Persons who were members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States at any time during the period between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, may be buried in any national cemetery: Provided, That the interment is without cost to the United States."

CITY OF BALTIMORE

The bill (S. 3272) for the relief of the city of Baltimore was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I will make an explanation, Mr. President. The claim is in all respects just, and why it has not been paid before I do not know. It is money the city of Baltimore advanced to the Federal Government during the Rebellion, or the War between the States. There is no dispute over the facts. We have been paying similar claims from time to time, and this one has just been delayed. The committee could not find any way to keep from reporting it favorably.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the city of Baltimore the sum of $171,034.31, being the balance of the amount incurred and expended by said city of Baltimore to aid in the construction of works of national defense in 1863, at the request of Maj. Gen. R. C. Schenck, United States Army, and as found and reported to the Senate on May 3, 1930, by the Comptroller General of the United States.

BRIDGE OVER NIAGARA RIVER

The joint resolution (H.J.Res. 315) granting consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into by the State of New York with the Dominion of Canada for the establishment of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority with power to take over, maintain, and operate the present highway bridge over the Niagara River between the city of Buffalo, N.Y., and the village of Fort Erie, Canada, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, given to the State of New York to enter into the agreement or compact with the Dominion of Canada set forth in chapter 824 of the Laws of New York, 1933, and an act respecting the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority passed at the fifth session, Seventeenth Parliament, Dominion of Canada (24 George V 1934), assented to March 28, 1934, for the establishment of the Buffalo and Fort Erie Public Bridge Authority as a municipal corporate instrumentality of said State and with power to take over, maintain, and operate the present highway bridge over the Niagara River between the city of Buffalo, in the State of New York, and the village of Fort Erie, in the Dominion of Canada.

ULDRIC THOMPSON, JR.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1382) for the relief of Uldric Thompson, Jr., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitations, to hear, determine, and render judgment under the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat.L., ch. 114, pp. 704, 705), on the claims of Uldric Thompson, Jr., for the use of or the manufacture by the United States without license of the owner thereof or the lawful right to use or manufacture war material under certain inventions of said Uldric Thompson, Jr., described in or covered by Letters Patent Nos. 1237362 and 1255836, respectively: Provided, That the records of the War Department as to such manufacture and use under these patents shall be available to the court and to the claimant: Provided further, That from any decision in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act an appeal may be taken by either party as is provided for by law in other cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLAYA DE FLOR LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO.

The bill (S. 3247) for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co. was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill being the same as House bill 5284, reported from the Committee on Claims on April 25, 1934, without objection the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 5284) for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co. was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the Canal Zone to hear and determine, without intervention of a jury, but subject to the provisions for appeal as in other cases provided by the Panama Canal Act, as amended, the claim of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co. against the United States on account of property taken by the United States in the Canal Zone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GORE subsequently said: Mr. President, just before I reached the Chamber, Calendar No. 770, being the bill (S. 3247) for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co., was displaced and the bill (H.R. 5284) for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co. was substituted in its stead upon the assumption that they were identical. There was one point of difference. I move to reconsider the votes by which the House bill was ordered to a third reading, and passed. Then I desire to offer an amendment to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered. The Senator from Oklahoma may now offer his amendment.

Mr. GORE. In the House bill, in line 4, I move to strike out the words "without the intervention of a jury." That will make it conform to the Senate bill as reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the word "determine" strike out the words "without intervention of a jury", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the Canal Zone to hear and determine, but subject to the provisions for appeal as in other cases provided by the Panama Canal Act, as amended, the claim of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co. against the United States on account of property taken by the United States in the Canal Zone.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was order to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

COMMODITY DIVISIONS IN DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2899) establishing certain commodity divisions in the Department of Agriculture, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "Division of", to strike out "cattle", and insert in lieu thereof "livestock and poultry,"; on page 1, line 9, after the word "hogs", to insert "Division of Dairying and Dairy Products", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following divisions are hereby established in the Department of Agriculture, to which shall be transferred all duties and functions now exercised by the Department in respect of the commodity as to which each respective division is established: Division of Livestock and Poultry, Division of Cotton, Division of Grains, Division of Hogs, Division of Dairying and Dairy Products, and Division of Tobacco. Each such division shall be under the direction of such executive and administrative officers as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary to perform the functions assigned to it. All such officers of each division shall be appointed from that area in the United States in which the major portion of the commodities over which the division has jurisdiction is produced, and such officers shall be persons of extensive experience in the production of such commodity and thoroughly familiar with the processes of marketing the same. Any person appointed to a position in any such division the salary of which is in excess of $2,500 shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 2. The divisions provided for by this act shall be organized, and shall enter upon their duties, at the earliest practicable date after the date of enactment of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS GERRITY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 99) for the relief of Francis Gerrity, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "Fourth", to strike out "Regiment"; and in the same line after the word "States", to strike out the word "Volunteer", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of all laws conferring rights, benefits, and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers Francis Gerrity shall be held and considered as having been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on December 16, 1901, as a private, Troop D, Fourth United States Cavalry: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN NATIONAL FORESTS, IDAHO

The bill (H.R. 7425) for the inclusion of certain lands in the national forests in the State of Idaho, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to consolidate national forest lands", approved March 20, 1922 (U.S.C., title 16, sec. 485), are extended and made applicable to the following-described lands in the State of Idaho.

Sections 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, and the south half section 1; south half section 2; southeast quarter section 3; section 10, except the north half northwest quarter; north half, and the east half southeast quarter, section 15; northeast quarter, and the north half southeast quarter section 16; north half, southeast quarter southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter, section 24, township 40 north, range 5 west.

Sections 29, 30, 31, and 32, township 41 north, range 1 west.

Sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 34, 35, 36, and the north half section 33, township 41 north, range 2 west.

Sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and section 26, except the southwest quarter southwest quarter, township 41 north, range 3 west.

The southeast quarter section 32; southwest quarter, west half southeast quarter, and the southeast quarter southeast quarter, section 33; east half southeast quarter section 34; south half section 35, and section 36, except the northeast quarter, township 41 north, range 4 west.

All foregoing descriptions relate to Boise base and meridian.

SEC. 2. Lands within the national forests heretofore granted to the State of Idaho for educational or other purposes may, under such rules and regulations as the legislature of such State shall prescribe, be offered in exchange for any of the lands described in section 1 hereof which are of nonmineral character and approximately equal value and area, in the ownership of the United States or in other ownership, to the end that the State may acquire holdings in a reasonably compact form for economic administration as a forest property, or for use as an experimental, training, and demonstrational area by the School of Forestry of the University of Idaho, or for any other purposes that the legislature of the State may authorize or prescribe, anything in the enabling act of such State to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 3. The lands conveyed to the United States under sections 1 and 2 of this act (together with the land described in section 1 now owned by the United States, subject to all valid existing rights) shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the national forest within whose exterior boundaries they are located.

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY, FAYETTEVILLE, ARK.

The bill (S. 1358) to provide for the improvement of the approach to the Confederate Cemetery, Fayetteville, Ark., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Mildren Lee Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, the sum of $3,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of a suitable hard-surfaced road from the end of the paved portion of East Rock Street, Fayetteville, Ark., and running along the unpaved portion of said street to the entrance of the Confederate Cemetery in said city, such road to be constructed under the supervision of the Secretary of War. No payment shall be made under this act until the city of Fayetteville has consented to the construction of such road.

JAMES JOHNSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2204) for the relief of James Johnson, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, to strike out "15th" and insert in lieu thereof "19th", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives, James Johnson, who was a private in Company A, Fifty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 19th day of December 1864: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MIKE L. SWEENEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2883) for the relief of Mike L. Sweeney, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "division" to insert "on the 1st day of January, 1919", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army Mike L. Sweeney shall be held and considered to have served without desertion and to have been honorably discharged as a private, Company B, One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, Thirty-fifth Division on the 1st day of January, 1919: Provided, That no pension, bounty, retirement pay, back pay, or allowances shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1757) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mount Olivet Cemetery Co., in the District of Columbia", was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there seems to be an adverse report from Commissioner Hazen, and I think unless it is explained the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

The bill (S. 2044) to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill does not increase the number of general officers, but simply accords those temporarily serving as Army commanders the rank of General while they are so serving, and does not affect compensation.

The country is divided under War Department plans into 4 strategic areas occupied by 4 armies, and the commanding officers should have the appropriate titles while they are in command.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding the following proviso at the end of the first paragraph thereof: "Provided further, That the President is authorized to designate four general officers of the line of the Army for command of armies, and, after being so designated, from the date of assuming such command until relieved therefrom, each shall have the rank and title of general, and shall receive the pay and allowances of a major general, and in addition thereto, the personal money allowance prescribed by law for an admiral. They shall take rank among themselves according to their permanent commissions in the Army. The grade of general is hereby authorized and continued for the purpose of this proviso."

SARAH LLOYD

The bill (S. 2207) for the relief of Sarah Lloyd, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring right, privileges, or benefits upon the widows, children, and dependent relatives of persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, William Lloyd, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have served without desertion and to have been honorably discharged from such service on May 28, 1863: Provided, That no pension, pay, or bounty shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

ROBERT H. WILDER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 426) for the relief of Robert H. Wilder, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the benefits and privileges of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928 (45 Stat. 735), the service performed in France subsequent to August 1, 1917, by Robert H. Wilder while a member of the Veteran Corps of Artillery of the State of New York shall be held to have been performed as an emergency officer in the grade of captain: Provided, That no back pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR EXTRA LABOR AT NAVY YARDS

The bill (S. 3275) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow to the respective persons the respective amounts found by the Court of Claims to have been underpaid to said persons, for labor performed at the several navy yards and shore stations herein named, in excess of the legal day of 8 hours, as set forth in Senate documents herein enumerated, and for which purpose the sum of $332,342.74, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

That the payment of said respective amounts is to be in full for, and receipt of same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final release and discharge of their said respective claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations.

SEC. 2. That where the payment to be made under this act is less than $1,000, and the person who rendered the service is dead, and no demand is presented by a duly appointed legal representative of his estate, payment may be made to the decedent's widow or legal heirs as is provided by existing laws relating to the settlement of accounts of deceased officers or enlisted men of the Army (34 Stat.L., 750): Provided, That in all cases where the original claimmants were adjudicated bankrupts, payments shall be made to the next of kin instead of to the assignees in bankruptcy: And provided further, That wherever under this act it is provided that a payment be made to an executor or an administrator, whether original or ancillary or de bonis non, and such executor or administrator is dead or no longer holds his office, payment shall be made to the successor therein, his title to hold such office being established to the satisfaction of the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 3. That no part of the amount of any claim appropriated for in this Act in excess of 20 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any attorney on account of services rendered in connection with said claim: Provided, That in each case, payment for which is herein provided, the Comptroller General shall deduct a sum equal to said 20 percent and pay the same to the attorney or attorneys who appeared for the claimant in the Court of Claims, as found by said court, and as set forth in the Senate documents aforesaid; and in event of the death of said attorney or attorneys, payment of said 20 percent to be made to his or their legal representatives, upon execution of a full release and a complete discharge to the claimant for all services rendered therein, and after the payment of such fee the balance thereof to be paid to the claimant. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which in the aggregate exceeds 20 percent of the amount of any item appropriated in this act on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 7) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

COMMEMORATION OF FOUNDING OF CONNECTICUT

The bill (S. 1779) authorizing the issuance of a special postage stamp in commemoration of the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Colony of Connecticut, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Colony of Connecticut, the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to issue a special postage stamp of the denomination of 2 cents and have such design and for such period beginning not later than January 1, 1935, as he may determine.

AMENDMENT OF PENAL LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3845) to amend section 198 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended by the acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 198 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended by the acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916 (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 321), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure, tear down, or destroy any letter box intended or used for the receipt or delivery of mail on any mail route, or shall break open the same, or shall willfully or maliciously injure, deface, or destroy any mail deposited therein, or shall willfully take or steal such mail from or out of such letter box; or shall knowingly or willfully deposit any mailable matter such as statements of accounts, circulars, sale bills, or other like matter, on which no postage has been paid, in any letter box established, approved, or accepted by the Postmaster General for the receipt or delivery of mail matter on any mail route, with intent to avoid payment of lawful postage thereon; or shall willfully aid or assist in any of the aforementioned offenses, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not more than $300."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offer certain amendments, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "box", it is proposed to insert "or other receptacle"; on page 2, line 3, after the word "box", to insert the words "or other receptacle"; on page 2, line 3, to strike out the words "or shall"; on page 2, to strike out lines 4 to 12, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof "or shall willfully aid or assist in any of the aforementioned offenses, shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 3 years"; and on page 2, after line 12, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. Whoever shall knowingly or willfully deposit any mailable matter such as statements of accounts, circulars, sales bills, or other like matter, on which no postage has been paid, in any letter box established, approved, or accepted by the Postmaster General for the receipt or delivery of mail matter on any mail route with intent to avoid payment of lawful postage thereon; or shall willfully aid or assist in any of the aforementioned offenses shall for every such offense be punished by a fine of not more than $300.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONEY COLLECTED BY POSTMASTERS ON MAIL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6676) to require postmasters to account for money collected on mail delivered at their respective offices.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee explain that bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. The recommendations in the premises are based on a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Smyer et al. v. United States (273 U.S. 333), in which it was held that moneys collected on c.o.d. mail are not public funds within the meaning of section 3846 of the Revised Statutes. In the same decision it was held also that such moneys are not money-order funds within the meaning of section 4045 of the Revised Statutes until they reach the possession of the person authorized to issue money orders.

Mr. WALSH. Is the bill in line with the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and it was recommended by the Department for the benefit of the Government.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3846 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 46) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Postmasters shall keep safely without loaning, using, depositing in an unauthorized bank, or exchanging for other funds, all the public money collected by them, or which may come into their possession, until it is ordered by the Postmaster General to be transferred or paid out. All money collected on mail delivered at their respective offices shall be deemed to be public money in the possession of the postmasters within the meaning of this section."

SURVEY OF NATCHEZ TRACE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2825) to provide for an appropriation of $50,000 with which to make a survey of the Old Indian Trail known as the "Natchez Trace", with a view of constructing a national road on this route to be known as the "Natchez Trace Parkway", which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "States", to strike out "the sum of" and insert in lieu thereof "a sum not exceeding", so as to make the bill read:

Whereas the Natchez Trace was one of the most ancient and important Indian roads leading from the territory in the section of Tennessee about Nashville in a southwest course, crossing the Tennessee River at Colbert Shoals a few miles below Muscle Shoals, thence passing in a southwest course through the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indian lands in what is now Mississippi, in an almost direct course by Jackson, Miss., to Natchez; and

Whereas the Natchez Trace is located throughout almost its entire length on highlands between watersheds on the most suitable route over which to establish the national parkway through a section of the country greatly in need of such road facilities from a national standpoint to connect the North and East directly with the Natchez, New Orleans, and southwest section of the country; and

Whereas the Natchez Trace was made famous for the service it rendered in affording General Jackson a route over which much of his forces moved to take part in Jackson's famous victory over the British at New Orleans, and also by reason of the fact that General Jackson returned with his army over this Trace to Nashville after the Battle of New Orleans; and

Whereas the Natchez Trace is known as one of the Nation's most famous old roads, and has been marked by handsome boulders with suitable inscriptions by the Daughters of the American Revolution at great expense, these boulders being placed every few miles from one end of the Trace to the other; and

Whereas unusual interest is being manifested in the building of a national parkway by the Government, Natchez Trace organizations having been perfected in almost every county through which the Trace passes; and

Whereas the Government has recently adopted a policy and set up a division in the Department of the Interior, known as the "Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations" to engage in a national way in laying out parks, reservations, and building parkways: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the Treasury of the United States, a sum not exceeding $50,000 to be used by the Department of the Interior through the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations with which to make a survey of the Old Natchez Trace throughout its entire length leading from the section of Tennessee about Nashville to Natchez, Miss., the same to be known as the "Natchez Trace Parkway." The said survey shall locate the Natchez Trace as near as practicable in its original route. An estimate of cost of construction of an appropriate national parkway over this route, and such other data as will be valuable shall be obtained by said survey with the objective of determining matters concerning the construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO CHIPPEWA INDIANS, MINNESOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6166) providing for payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of Minnesota from the funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] explain the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to say that the payments come out of the Indians' own private funds for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the payment is from the Indians' own funds, I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury so much as may be necessary of the principal fund on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, under section 7 of the act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota", approved January 14, 1889, as amended, and to make therefrom payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of Minnesota, under such regulations as such Secretary shall prescribe. No payments shall be made under this act until the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall, in such manner as such Secretary shall prescribe, have accepted such payments and ratified the provisions of this act. The money paid to the Indians under this act shall not be subject to any lien or claim of whatever nature against any of said Indians.

ELEANORA EMMA BLISS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3044) granting a pension to Eleanora Emma Bliss, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the words "rate of", to strike out "$3,600 per year in lieu of all other payments and allowances" and to insert in lieu thereof "$100 per month", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eleanora Emma Bliss, widow of Tasker H. Bliss, late general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is apparent that the call of the calendar under the present order cannot be completed. After consultation with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and other Senators, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of routine morning business tomorrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar, commencing with the calendar number where we left off today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of routine morning business tomorrow the call of the calendar for unobjected bills be proceeded with, beginning with the bill with which the call concludes today. Is there objection? The Chairs hears none, and it is so ordered.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 493) to protect labor in its old age, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions, with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory", so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. When used in this act—
(a) "Bureau" shall mean the Old Age Security Bureau.
(b) "State or Territory authority" shall mean the State or Territory authority charged with cooperating with the bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory", so as to make the clause read:

(c) "Assisted person" shall mean a person entitled to receive assistance under a State or Territory plan approved by the bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 3, line 9, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory", and in line 11, after the word "act", to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to allocate not to exceed $10,000,000 from any funds that may be made available for carrying out the terms of the Emergency Relief Act of 1933 for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1935, and the fiscal year ending July 1, 1936, to be expended as provided under the terms of this act.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000,000, to be apportioned among the States or Territories as provided herein, to aid them in giving assistance to aged persons under the conditions of this act: Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to allocate not to exceed $10,000,000 from any funds that may be made available for carrying out the terms of the Emergency Relief Act of 1933 for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1935, and the fiscal year ending July 1, 1936, to be expended as provided under the terms of this act.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 4, line 19, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; so as to make the section read:

ALLOTMENT NOT TO BE USED FOR LANDS

SEC. 4. No portion of any money allotted under the act for the benefit of any State or Territory shall be applied to the purchase, rental, erection, repair of any building, or for equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 6, line 3, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; in line 5, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; and in line 9, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. In order to receive the benefit of this act, any State or Territory shall, through its legislature—
(a) Accept the provisions of this act;
(b) Empower and designate a State or Territory board or officer as the State or Territory authority to prepare the plan herein provided for, to cooperate with the bureau, and to supervise the expenditure of the funds; and
(c) Appoint the State or Territory treasurer as custodian of any allotment paid it under this act, who shall receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursement of all money so paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 8, line 2, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; in line 4, after the word "State" to insert "or Territory"; in line 8, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; in line 12, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; and in line 17, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory, and"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the bureau to carry out the provisions of this act, and to that end—
(a) To make the necessary rules and regulations;
(b) To examine plans submitted by a State or Territory authority for the disbursement of an allotment to the State or Territory under this act, and to approve such plans and any changes thereof;

(c) To make necessary investigations of the administration of any plan approved by it;

(d) To cooperate with State or Territory authorities and other agencies, public and private, for the purpose of improving the administration of old-age assistance and of studying the problem of old age in the United States;

(e) To withhold from any State or Territory the payment of any allotment or installment thereof when it decides that the money allotted is not being expended as provided in the plan;

(f) To certify to the Treasurer of the United States the amount of allotment to any State or Territory; and

(g) To take any other action necessary to carry out the purpose of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 9, line 22, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. When any allotment or any installment thereof is withheld by the bureau, the State or Territory affected may appeal to the Secretary of Labor, and from his decision to the President of the United States, who may either affirm or reverse the action by the bureau or the Secretary as he may judge proper. The bureau on receiving notice of the opinion of the Secretary or of the President shall take action to accord with it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 5, line 6, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; in line 8, after the word "State-wide" to insert "or Territory-wide"; in line 9, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory"; in line 13, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory", and in line 14, after the word "State", to insert "or Territory", so as to read:

SEC. 10. The bureau shall not approve any plan submitted by the State or Territory authority which does not provide that—

(1) The plan shall be State-wide or Territory-wide, and if administered by subdivisions of the State or Territory shall be mandatory on such subdivisions.

(2) An old person entitled to relief under it:

(a) Is a citizen of the United States and a resident of the State or Territory for a period of years determined by the State or Territory law providing old-age assistance;

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] explain the bill? It seems to be a very important one.

THE AIR MAIL

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

Mr. BLACK obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Hayden	Pope
Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Austin	Cutting	Kean	Reynolds
Bachman	Davis	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the Chair). Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I have asked the Senator to yield because I am advised that his remarks will take some time, and I desire to bring up the conference report on the so-called "sugar bill." If there is to be a discussion, probably that conference report must go over another day. I wish merely to say to the Senators who have made inquiries this morning with respect to the conference report that the most urgent appeals continue to be received from the West for the immediate passage of this proposed legislation so that farmers may be advised how to proceed without further regrettable and costly delay.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. There has been a great deal of talk about an amendment which it seems has been added by the House of Representatives. I do not understand the parliamentary situation. The House seems to have added an amendment while the bill was in conference. I think we ought to have an understanding about that amendment. I do not understand how it got in the bill or what the nature of the claim is going to be for it. There will not be much debate on the report itself.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the conference committee has reported and I desire first to make a motion for the adoption of that report in order that the parliamentary situation may be advanced. I am permitted to make the motion by courtesy of the Senator from Alabama and if some discussion is to ensue this important subject will probably of necessity go over until tomorrow.

Mr. NORRIS. What about the amendment we have heard about?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the House agreed to a certain Senate amendment with an amendment. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I may say to the Senator from Colorado that I am exceedingly anxious, as I said when we were considering this bill, if it is to be passed to have it passed speedily; but I think the amendment to which reference has been made is a pretty serious one. Why could we not dispose of the conference report, reject the amendment, and by joint resolution deal with the subject matter which is covered by the amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think from what the Chair has said there is not any conference report here. It is simply an amendment proposed by the House to the amendment of the Senate, and it comes back here not in the shape of a conference report.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have sent to the desk the conference report. In addition to the conference report the House adopted an amendment to Senate amendment numbered 59. My first motion is for the adoption of the conference report. Thereafter, it is my intention to move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senate concurs in the House amendment to the Senate amendment the bill at once becomes a law. The House amendment to the Senate amendment has never been in conference. I do not know whether the House has even appointed conferees.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There have been conferees appointed on the main bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot see how the conferees can bring in an amendment to a bill and what legal effect it has, if there be such a thing. If the Chair has stated it correctly, we have not any conference report to consider; we simply have an amendment on the part of the House agreeing to our amendment with an amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With all due respect to the Chair, there is a conference report pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not state that there was no conference report pending. The Chair was trying to clear up the parliamentary situation in reference to the amendment to which the Senator from Nebraska refers. The parliamentary clerk informed the Chair that that was in the form of an amendment to a Senate amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. To what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment on the part of the House to a Senate amendment upon which the conferees had not agreed. Agreement to the House amendment to the Senate amendment is a separate proposal, in addition to the conference report which covers all other matters upon which agreement has been entered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the Senate agrees to the conference report, why does not that end it, if there is such a thing as a conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It frequently happens that conference reports are brought in which are not complete conference reports of the whole question in controversy. It seems that is the situation. A conference report has been presented dealing with matters which are in agreement between the conferees and this amendment is an amendment that must be voted on separately and not covered by the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. The conference report, then, is not a complete agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Apparently not.

Mr. BORAH. The conference report shows that it is a complete agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course the Senate can adopt the amendment which will be voted on separately and agree to it and that would end it, provided it agrees to the conference report which has been brought in on other matters.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McNARY. I think it was clearly understood that the Senator from Alabama should speak following the conclusion of the call of the calendar. I am sure that the question now before the Senate will lead to debate, and I implore the Senator from Colorado not to press the conference report at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Before we dispose of it, however, let us have an understanding about it. The amendment which was put on by the House concerns a subject matter which was never in conference; it deals with an entirely new subject.

How can it possibly get back here in a conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conferees, as the Chair understands, did not consider the amendment. It was an amendment on the part of the House to Senate amendment numbered 59, which is now subsequently accepted with an amendment, which is a separate proposition, but one that was not before the conferees. Though it is a part of the bill, it is not embraced in the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the conference report reach an agreement on the Senate amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All except Senate amendment numbered 59, which is involved in this controversy and which is before the Senate for separate action. That is the amendment upon which the Senator from Colorado suggests he will move to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in view of the necessity for continuing the discussion, there is nothing for me to do except to thank the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] at this time for his courtesy and to await a more appropriate moment for bringing up the conference report.

THE AIR MAIL

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is my intention at the present time to discuss the air-mail legislation and certain facts which have been presented in this body, and certain proposals, in order that the Senate may have before it sworn evidence appearing before the committee. I regret that it may take a longer time than I should like to give to the discussion, but it has seemed to me that it is very essential that the matter be presented to the Senate at this time.

There is pending or will be pending a proposal by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and certain of his associates which would require by law, as I understand, a restoration of the air-mail contracts to those companies who held such contracts, certificates, and extensions previous to the cancelation by the Postmaster General.

I desire to preface my remarks by stating that this is not merely an issue as to any individual personality, nor is it an issue as to any group of people. It will be necessary in the course of my remarks, however, to refer to a number of individuals who have participated in the program which was set forth with reference to air mail. Some of the individuals have had a great part in the proceedings, some have had a smaller part; but it would be wholly and completely impossible to discuss what I consider to be a network of intrigue, chicanery, manipulation, and fraud, without bringing into the picture those who have participated from time to time, some to a greater extent and some to a lesser extent, to bring about the results which were accomplished.

It is my intention in the very beginning to discuss the question of the Government canceling contracts. There are certain well-recognized principles of law which I shall mention and with which every lawyer is familiar. There has been a deliberate effort on the part of certain groups in America to mislead the public, not only as to the right of cancelation of a contract for fraud but as to the duty to cancel a contract for fraud. There has been a deliberate effort to pass out information and facts without distinguishing between fraud which is the basis of a criminal prosecution and fraud which is the basis of civil action.

In the first place, I do not believe there is any lawyer in America who has a hornbook knowledge of law who will deny the statement of fact that every individual who enters into a contract with another individual is entitled to cancel or annul that contract if it was entered into as a result of fraudulent conduct on the part of one of the parties. That right which exists on the part of an individual exists by established custom on the part of the Government, whether municipal, State, or Federal.

There has been a consistent effort on the part of certain subsidized editorial writers to confuse the public and to leave it with the impression that something has been done which is out of the ordinary. We have heard the word "un-American" falling from the lips of people who know nothing about law or who, if they do know anything about law, know in their hearts that it is not only the right but it is the duty of any public official to cancel any contract made as a result of fraud. Not only that, but it is the duty to cancel that contract as soon as the fraud is discovered. There can be no vacillation, there can be no hesitation, there can be no delay. According to the several principles of law, if there has been a discovery of fraud, it is the right and it is the duty of the person who would repudiate that contract to do so without delay.

I read from the Supreme Court of the United States, which even those from whose lips fall so trippingly the word "un-American" will surely not deny is a thoroughly American institution. I read from one case only, but there are multitudes of others.

I read from the case of Grymes v. Sanders et al. (93 U.S. p. 62):

> Where a party desires to rescind upon the ground of mistake or fraud, he must, upon the discovery of the facts, at once announce his purpose and adhere to it. If he be silent, and continue to treat the property as his own, he will be held to have waived the objection and will be conclusively bound by the contract, as if the mistake or fraud had not occurred. He is not permitted to play fast and loose. Delay and vacillation are fatal to the right which had before subsisted.

I cannot believe that those who have been so bold in their charges of "un-Americanism" will suggest that the United States Supreme Court is an un-American organization. The United States Supreme Court, along with the courts in every State in the Union, following the settled principle of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, has announced that if there is fraud in the making of a contract it is the duty of the person who would cancel it to do so immediately upon the discovery of the fraud; and if he waits, he abandons his right.

Now let us see, just for a moment, what would be the effect of any other course.

These mail contracts are running contracts. They are executory contracts. In other words, they have not been completed on either side. There are those who say, "Go into the courts before you repudiate your contract"; but there is not a single one of those individuals, if he had been to a mercantile establishment in the city of Washington and had purchased something and later discovered that he had been defrauded, who would have advanced the idea that it would be un-American to go down to that mercantile establishment and say, "You cheated me. You defrauded me. I cancel my contract." According to their theory, the natural thing for him to do, if he had been sold an inferior and shoddy suit of clothes, with moth-holes in it that he knew nothing about, would be to go down to the store and say, "Look here; you sold me an old, worn-out suit of clothes, and told me it was a good one. Now, I want the privilege of going into the courts and bringing a suit to determine whether I shall keep this moth-eaten suit of clothes, or whether I shall continue to pay you what I owe for it."

That is the theory which those who say this cancelation is "un-American" would have us follow.

In other words, here are contracts involving sums which are to be paid from month to month, or from week to week, or from year to year; and those who attack the action of the Postmaster General have been bold enough to assert in the press and in other places that it was his duty to let the contractors keep on carrying the mails, to let them keep on defrauding the Government, to continue paying them more than twice what it was worth to carry the mail, while the rights of the citizens suffered in order that those in whom they were interested might continue to reap the benefits of a fraudulent contract.

What is the remedy? The contractors have a remedy just the same as every other individual. If a contract has been broken on the ground of fraud, section 250 of the Judicial Code gives every one of the companies whose contracts were canceled a right to go into the Court of Claims and sue. When they go there, it is the duty of the Government to prove that the contracts were canceled rightly. It is the duty of the Government to prove that they were conceived and born and executed in fraud.

No suit like that has been filed. Why? The contractors did go into court and file a suit that every lawyer in America knows could not be maintained, and they knew it could not be maintained, but it would not bring out into the court the facts of fraud. They then filed a second suit which they know will not bring the facts out into the court. All the time the doors of the Court of Claims have been open, waiting for them to come in; but if they go there they will go to a court which has jurisdiction. The Government invites them to go there, and if they do so the Government then will assume the burden of proving fraud, and it will prove it to the satisfaction of everybody in America, unless he is a stockholder of the company, or unless he has an improper conception of what amounts to fraud and collusion.

Let the contractors go into the courts. They do not want to go into the courts. They have preferred, up to date, to attempt to try the matter by propaganda—propaganda in some of the very papers owned by the beneficiaries of the fraudulent contracts, as the record shows, and as I shall later point out.

Mr. President, let me repeat: The courts are open. The contractors can go there. They could file suit today if they desired to do so. The day they file suit, the Government is ready to go in and join issue, and prove their fraud out of their own mouths.

We have heard a great deal said to the effect that this cancelation was contrary to precedent, and un-American. That word has fallen from the lips of some whose sires have taken a different viewpoint. This is not the first time contracts have been canceled for fraud. It is not the first time they have been canceled for fraud in the Post Office Department. It is not the first time that a man named Roosevelt, through his Postmaster General, has canceled contracts for fraud.

There have been three major scandals in the United States in the Post Office Department. Strange to say, the machinations, the methods, the means used have been identical in each instance. One of them occurred back 100 years ago, and a Senate committee reported upon that fraud 100 years ago this year. When that Senate committee began its investigation it was hampered and handicapped by those who said it was a partisan investigation. The Senate debates reveal exactly the same arguments that the debates here reveal. There were those who said, "This is but an effort to besmirch an administration."

How did those who were guilty of fraud in that case work it? They worked it by extensions, by expedition—that is, a little more expeditious service, just as they have done in this case—by combinations to bid, and by granting extra allowances; the exact methods that were adopted later, in 1880, and 50 years later in 1930. Fifty years apart the three scandals came.

As soon as that fraud had been turned up over the objection of certain Members of the United States Senate in 1834, as soon as the facts had been developed, a man whose name many Senators will remember, Amos Kendall, who had come into the Post Office Department, without delay cut off the beneficiaries of fraud, and declared that this was a Government run upon an honest basis. There was no trial then.

In 1861 a man was President whom I have heard many Members on the other side extol. I have heard many Members on this side extol the qualities of Lincoln. There is a monument set up for him here in the city of Washington. It was reported to Mr. Lincoln in 1861 that there were a number of mail contractors in the States of Maryland, Virginia, Missouri, and Kentucky who were not loyal to the Union. He did not wait for a trial. He did not wait in order that the question might be determined before a court of justice. Right or wrong, he canceled their contracts by the wholesale; and I have not yet heard any of the gentlemen from whose lips the word "un-American" falls so trippingly condemn that as an un-American action.

A little later a man named Hayes became President of the United States, though not exactly by the regular channels. Mr. Hayes was President for 4 years. During the next administration the Postmaster General under President Garfield made the statement that the postal contracts during the period of President Hayes' administration were the most disgraceful that had ever been made up to that time in the history of the Nation. What did the contractors of that period do? They used expedition, speed, extra allowances, combinations, to defraud the Government of the United States.

On March 4, 1881, Mr. Garfield became President. I desire to read what happened with reference to that President, who came from the State of Ohio. His Postmaster General reported to him that there was fraud and collusion. I desire to commend to those who have heretofore taken a partisan standpoint the position at that time assumed by President Garfield.

On March 9th, 5 days after President Garfield assumed his office, he called in his Postmaster General to discuss with him the postal contracts. He did not wait. He had been told that those contracts were fraudulent; and, believing that, he conceived that it was not only not un-American but it was American to seek to ascertain whether or not they were fraudulent, and to take action with rapidity. So, 5 days after he became President he sent for his Postmaster General. I have a complete report of what occurred. I shall read a few lines. Let me read what occurred, according to the statement of the Postmaster General under oath, a short time thereafter.

First, President Garfield told his Postmaster General to investigate the routes, and to pursue the investigation until there were no more facts to ascertain. He turned it over to the Postmaster General and to the Attorney General. He instructed the Department of Justice to cooperate with the Postmaster General.

Let me read what the Postmaster General said a few days later:

Swift and sure came the conviction that the personnel of the Department, and of some branches of the Service, was intensely hostile to the new order of things, and must be purged. No sooner had this work begun than bitter and malignant attacks appeared in the columns of star-route organs on the President, the Attorney General, the Postmaster General, and whoever else was suspected of a disposition to promote clean, honest, and businesslike methods. Swarms of contractors, their attorneys and beneficiaries raised a deafening clamor, and made common cause against the administration.

Strangely familiar are those words, strangely familiar. On whom did they make war through their partisans and through their subsidized press? On the administration, the Postmaster General, the Attorney General, and on anyone else who they thought had anything to do with trying to promote a clean, honest, and businesslike administration.

There is nothing strange about that. Let us see what position the President of the United States, Mr. Garfield, took in the face of this pressure. President Garfield was from Ohio, and I commend him to modern citizens of this Nation. Remember, this is the statement made by the Attorney General to President Garfield:

Before a final decision remember that these proceedings may strike men in high places, that they may result in changing a Republican majority in the United States Senate into a Democratic majority; that it may affect persons who claim that you are under personal obligations to them for services rendered during the last campaign—and one person in particular who asserts that without his management you could not have been elected. Look these facts squarely in the face before taking a final stand, for neither the Postmaster General nor myself will know friend or foe in this matter.

Let us see what the President said:

The President walked across the room, reflected a moment, and said, "No; I have sworn to execute the laws. Go ahead regardless of where or whom you hit. I direct you both not only to probe this ulcer to the bottom, but to cut it out."

That is the language of a man who placed principle above party. That is the language of a man who, in the face of the most active and hostile press, in the very teeth of men of his party who were seeking to divert him from the course which would lead to honesty and fair dealing, said, "I direct you to go to the bottom and to cut the ulcer out."

There was no hesitation there, and there was no hesitation when the inspectors made their report. They did not wait even for a Senate investigation, where the representatives of the contractors were called before a committee and testified under oath. There was no delay. The parties kept on. They kept hounding Garfield until the very day he became a martyr while President. Their subsidized press, with their charges that he was unjust and unfair to the contractors, made his life miserable, and even on Wednesday before his death on Saturday he was informed, according to the sworn evidence, of the immense hostility and venom which these people and their satellites bore toward him.

Let us see what he did. The inspectors' reports on star routes were examined by Messrs. Woodward, Gibson, and Lyman as fast as they were received, and orders reducing the service were at once issued. There were 93 of them. They did not wait. The martyred Garfield did not think that it was incumbent upon him to treat a criminal, or a man who had defrauded his Government, in any other way than to take from him the benefits of his fraud; so, as fast as the inspectors reported to him, the contracts were reduced, and we find in the next sentence that the total amount of the reductions of star and steamboat service, these inseparable twins in fraud, from March 1, 1881, to December 31, 1881, were $2,004,550, out of $7,000,000 of contracts.

Was that un-American? Was that contrary to the principles of the party followed by those on the other side of the aisle? Was it un-American, that Garfield, in the face of the greatest hostility which had been put up against a man up to that time, stood by his guns, even though the fraud had been perpetrated under an administration of his own party?

I commend this action of the martyred Garfield to those who have sought in every conceivable manner in this country to stir up opposition on the basis that an act is un-American when it was followed in the days of Jackson, was followed in the days of Lincoln, was followed in the days of Garfield, and was followed in the days of Theodore Roosevelt. Not only that, but it has been followed in every administration in this Government since the very beginning of its history. Senators will find the records filled with cases, not only of Post Office contracts, but every other kind of contracts, where, immediately upon the discovery of fraud, the honest official took away the benefits of the fraud.

A report was made upon that action by the assistant to the Attorney General, who was appointed for the purpose of prosecution, and there is one very interesting clause in his report. The report was made by Mr. A. M. Gibson, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, and I should like to have Senators note this in the report, which was dated October 31, 1881. It is rather material in connection with certain incidents which have occurred in the pending proceeding.

SIR: In accordance with the instruction of your predecessor, I submit to you some of the results of the investigation which, at his request, I have made. I have dealt chiefly with the administration of the contract office of the Post Office Department during the term of the late Second Assistant Postmaster General, Thomas J. Brady, and correlative subjects. For manifest reasons it would not be prudent in this report to disclose all the facts discovered by the investigation pursued by the representatives of the two departments, or to indicate a tithe of the evidence, which must be reserved for the courts of justice.

The same thing is true now. The Department of Justice, acting in harmony with the Post Office Department, just as it did under the order of President Garfield, has the right to pursue its course unmolested, unhampered by any other coordinate branch of the Government; and it will, I think.

I now desire to read to the Senate the statement of another Roosevelt, not a member of the Democratic Party, but an honest man, a courageous man, a man who looked at fraud with horror. He knew no distinction between the man who defrauded his Government who bore the label of a Republican and one who bore the label of a Democrat. It was immaterial to him. Let us see what he did, and see if that, too, was un-American.

During the administration of Theodore Roosevelt, he discovered that a considerable number of employees of the Post Office Department were engaged in making contracts with persons for services and supplies in a corrupt manner, and contrary to law. These Post Office officials were purchasing ink, labels, wrapping twine, pads, books, money-order forms, satchels, and other commodities. They and the bidder entered into combinations for the purchase of supplies. The cases were thoroughly investigated by a large number of post-office inspectors, and their report shows that all the contracts where fraud had been discovered had been annulled. These contracts were summarily canceled. There were no hearings held before a Senate committee, where the officers of these companies were placed under oath and were compelled, in the face of destroying the records, to admit facts which showed fraud.

Let us see what President Roosevelt said about such a situation. President Theodore Roosevelt—and I commend this to others who bear his name—said this:

No crime calls for sterner retribution than the crime of the corruptionist in public life and of the man who seeks to corrupt him. All questions of difference in party politics sink into insignificance when the people of this country are brought face to face with a question like this, which lies at the root of honest and decent government. On this question, and on all others like it, we can afford to have no division among good citizens. Self-government becomes a farce if the representatives of the people corrupt others or are themselves corrupted. Freedom is not a gift which will tarry long in the hands of the dishonest or of those so foolish or so incompetent as to tolerate dishonesty in their public servants. Under our system, all power comes from the people, and all punishment rests ultimately with the people. The toleration of the wrong, not the exposure of the wrong, is the real offense.

That was the statement of President Theodore Roosevelt, and he canceled every contract which, according to the reports of his inspectors, was tainted with fraud and with collusion.

Was that un-American? They had no trial. They had a right, however, to go into the Court of Claims and sue, and, like others who up to this date have not dared to file a suit where there can be brought out into the light of open day the slimy and insidious trail which they followed, these contractors did not go to court. They knew that the evidence was sufficient to blast any case they might bring.

So we find Theodore Roosevelt, a man with courage, a man with honesty, a man who placed principle above his party where fraud and corruption and crookedness were involved, summarily canceling the contracts of all of those his inspectors reported to him had been guilty of corruption.

In 1925 Mr. Harry S. New was Postmaster General. There were two bids on an air-mail route between Pueblo and Cheyenne, Wyo. It was alleged to Mr. New that there was an agreement between certain people whereby the Government was deprived of the benefit of competitive bidding. On August 27, 1927, when Mr. New discovered this, he wired—he did not write, but he sent a message by telegraph—annulling the contract without notice and without hearing. Later in the day he was requested not to put the order into effect until he could secure a copy of the agreement between the operators.

In the case now before us we have copies. Of course, we do not have the originals because, unfortunately, they were destroyed by fire; but we have the copies.

Six days later, on September 3, Postmaster General New received a copy of the agreement, and in a long memorandum he planted his feet upon the ground of honesty and decency and canceled the contract. There was no trial. The Government had been defrauded, and he knew it. He would have been unworthy to occupy his office a single day if he had not canceled that contract immediately. He did it. That order has never been revoked.

Mr. President, so much for the precedents. It is not necessary to cite such precedents in this Nation if it is still honest. Of course, if we have sunk to so low a base, if we have descended to such a level of degradation and dishonesty, that it can be said that all one has to do is to raise the cry of "persecution", and dishonesty becomes a noble thing, then we need precedents. But I invite attention to the fact that this is not the first time persecution has been charged. Political persecution was charged in 1833.

Again it was charged in 1884. Every time any man connected with a public office has ever been exposed in crookedness and corruption, he has tried to hide behind the cry of "persecution for political motives." There is nothing new in that. Those who seek to protect him always, through the press and every other conceivable manner, cry "this is a political persecution." I wonder if there is a man here who has ever known of any public official being indicted for violation of the law who did not claim it was political persecution? If it is proved that a man has taken $200,000 or $400,000 or $1,000,000 from the Government, there is the same cry, "this is political persecution." That is what Postmaster General James said was charged when the Department got after the star-route operators in 1882.

I desire to call attention now to some of the evidence which should prove to any fair-minded man that the contracts which were canceled were conceived in iniquity and were executed in crime and corruption.

I call attention first to the fact that before the McNary-Watres Act was passed in April 1930, there were 25 domestic air-mail contracts. At that time 11 of them were owned by the Aviation Corporation of Delaware or its associates and subsidiaries; 4 by United Aircraft; 4 by North American Aviation, and 2 by Western Air Express. At the same time there were 17 nonmail operators who had passenger, or passenger-and-express lines in various parts of the country. They had no mail contracts.

It might be of interest at this point to give the Senate the names of a few of the leading directors of the four companies holding 21 of the 25 mail contracts at that time; and if I had time it would be interesting to show how many aviation companies were organized in the latter part of the year 1928 and the first part of the year 1929. I shall mention a few of the outstanding directors:

Roy D. Chapin, later Secretary of Commerce.
Herbert Fleishacker, banker, San Francisco.
Paul Henderson, formerly Assistant Postmaster General.
Leonard Kennedy, of Hayden Stone & Co.
E. H. Reynolds, Chicago banker.
D. M. Sheaffer, of the Pennsylvania Railroad.
William H. Vanderbilt; and it is very interesting to note that this is not the first time a Vanderbilt has been interested in mail contracts, as shown by the records of previous investigations.

Davis K. E. Bruce, son-in-law of the Secretary of the Treasury under the past administration.
W. W. Crocker, of San Francisco.
J. M. Franklin, of the International Mercantile Marine, in which Postmaster General Brown held stock.
Harry S. New, formerly Postmaster General.
Gen. Mason M. Patrick.
Herbert Hoover, Jr.
Harry Chandler, of the Los Angeles Times.
Henry M. Robinson, of Los Angeles.

Let us see who drafted the Watres Act at that time. A great deal can depend upon how an act is drawn. I read from the evidence of the vice president of the United Air Lines, Mr. Paul Henderson, given under oath; and I call attention to the fact that the United States Supreme Court has held—and I shall read that opinion later—that when a representative of a company comes before a Senate investigating committee, the evidence given there can be used in the trial which subsequently occurs with reference to the contracts.

I read from page 1460, part 4, of the record:

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the McNary-Watres Act was being prepared, will you state whether or not you took part in any conferences in connection with the drawing up of the act?
Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Who participated in those conferences?
Mr. HENDERSON. Practically the same group I have recited as being present in the meetings, except smaller in number.
The CHAIRMAN. Who were there?
Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Hanshue, of the Western. He was in attendance in these meetings.
* * * * * * *
The CHAIRMAN. Who else were there?
Mr. HENDERSON. All the then air-mail operators.

Not only were they all there, but their attorneys were there.

Now, let us see what was the purpose in drawing up this act. I desire to present the picture, if I can, in a consecutive way.

Mr. Hanshue was on the stand, the officer of the Western Air Express. Remember that he is an officer of the company, and I shall later call your attention to the statements he made with reference to these contracts (part 7, pp. 2975–2976).

The CHAIRMAN. Senator AUSTIN asked you a rather long question about the reasons for attempting to pass the Watres bill. I should like for you to state yourself what were the reasons for attempting to pass the Watres bill, and see how it coincides with the answer, "Yes, sir", which you gave him.
Mr. HANSHUE. The reasons for the passage of the Watres bill were because the Kelly bill, under which we were operating, was paying at the rate of—was paying on the basis of poundage, and provided for no extensions or consolidations, and it is my understanding that the Postmaster General wanted legislation which would provide for these things plus——

The CHAIRMAN. Provide for which things?

Mr. HANSHUE. For the extensions and consolidations, plus the authority to negotiate the price which the Post Office Department would pay for carrying the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, can you think of any other reasons? Let us have them all.

Mr. HANSHUE. One of the reasons was he wanted a provision in the Watres bill to put mail on passenger lines without the necessity of bidding.

The CHAIRMAN. Without the necessity of bidding?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, can you think of any others?

Mr. HANSHUE. I don't think I can.

In other words, beginning before the act was passed the plan was, the scheme was, to let the contracts without competitive bidding. Let us see what Postmaster General Brown himself says, under oath, was the reason he wanted the bill passed when it was about to be passed. I quote from him, as follows (hearings on H.R. 9500, p. 110):

So the problem was to find some method of promoting passenger lines.

Note that, because it is very important. He refers to passenger lines as those that were then operating passenger service but were not carrying mail. So, he tells the committee:

So the problem was to find some method of promoting passenger lines. Well, during the last calendar year passenger lines sprang up all over the country, some operated by people who had air-mail contracts and many by those who had not. The impression seemed to get out that it was an industry that was coming very fast, and that there were opportunities for great profit in it.

Without exception, they lost money. There was not a passenger line in operation in 1929 that did not lose money.

When we got to studying this problem in the autumn of last year, the problem of the passenger operators, they were discouraged and about ready to give up.

Note that. Mr. Brown was telling the committee that he wanted to take care of the passenger operators who did not have mail contracts, and I will show later on by his sworn testimony before the committee that he called them all together knowing they could not agree, and knowing that they could not get any contracts, and they folded up and quit.

That perhaps stimulated us to try to formulate a plan which would give them some hope to carry on until the public should be educated to travel by air.

Appearing for that bill before the House committee were Messrs. Brown, Glover, MacCracken, Paul Henderson, formerly Assistant Postmaster General and then connected with the airlines; and other representatives of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware, the Western Air Express, United Aircraft, and North American.

What happened when that bill got there? Postmaster General Brown presented a bill to Mr. KELLY. According to the evidence, he attempted to get Mr. KELLY to offer a bill which would do away with competitive bidding and give him complete power to let the contracts as he saw fit. Mr. KELLY declined to do it. It was then taken to Mr. Watres. I shall not read the bill at this time, but it will clearly appear in section 4 of the bill, as it was originally written, that it did not provide for competitive bidding. While that bill was pending, the matter was submitted to Comptroller General McCarl for an opinion. Comptroller General McCarl called attention to these facts in connection with the bill in which Postmaster Brown wanted to eliminate competitive bidding. Comptroller General McCarl said, in part, as follows:

The provisions of section 3079, Revised Statutes, require generally that all contracts in any of the departments of the Government, except for personal services and except in cases of emergency, be made after advertising a sufficient length of time previously respecting same. Among the apparent purposes of this requirement are:

(1) To give all citizens an equal right to compete for their share in the Government's business;

(2) To prevent fraud and collusion on the part of officers and employees in the awarding of Government contracts; and

(3) To obtain for the Government the benefit of getting its needs supplied at the lowest prices available.

Under our system of government—

Says General McCarl—

it is necessary that there be checks and balances in the administration of the Government, and whenever the Congress fails to control by law the discretion of purchasing and contracting officers of the Government with adequate machinery to enforce that control it opens the door to fraud, favoritism, waste, and extravagance.

We shall show the Senate that every one of these things occurred in connection with the air-mail contracts.

Responsible, loyal, and conscientious administrative heads of the departments and establishments of the Government—drawn for intervals from the body politic to serve their Government—should not be subject to the pressure of would-be contractors, nor should legitimate contractors be required to indulge in questionable practices in order to secure public contracts.

The minority of the committee filed a report against the bill which eliminated competitive bidding. After the bill reached the House a conference was held by Postmaster General Brown with Speaker Longworth and the other members of the steering committee, attempting to get them to pass the bill as it was written without a provision for competitive bidding. After a lengthy discussion it was decided the bill could not pass the House in that form. So they were compelled to insert in that bill a provision for competitive bidding.

The reasons of Mr. KELLY for opposing that bill will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 72, part 7, pages 7376 and 7377. I shall not read them here, but I shall ask at this time unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD at this point a portion of the statement of Mr. KELLY with reference to his opposition to this bill as it was originally written.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 72, pt. 7, pp. 7376–7377]

Mr. Speaker, I could not support the bill as it came from the Post Office Department nor as first reported out of the Post Office Committee. I opposed it as vigorously as possible in the belief that such arbitrary power granted to any man would lead to abuses which would endanger the entire Air Mail Service.

There is an additional feature contained in section 4 of this amendment. It provides for special aid to passenger-carrying lines which now have no air-mail contracts. Where the air mail moving between designated points does not exceed 225 pounds or a required capacity of 25 feet, a contract may be let * * * at a rate not to exceed 40 cents a mile.

The bidders need not have been operating the route on which bids are asked, but operation on a route anywhere in the United States will meet the requirement.

Under this provision every air passenger line will have an equal chance to bid for the carriage of mail by aircraft.

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 72, pt. 7, p. 7376]

(Representative KELLY's substitute and reasons therefor:)

These three laws are those dealing with the Air Mail Service. In every instance Congress has required advertising for bids and award to contractors after competition. In no case has there been an attempt to give power to the Postmaster General to award contracts without bidding. The policy has been to make air mail a respectable postal service and one which would be paid for by those who desire to use it.

It is our thought that the conservative policy of Congress in the past should be retained.

The Kelly amendment to section 4 now contained in this bill is amended to remove the dangers of favoritism and fraud in the award of contracts.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it is sufficient to call attention to the fact that Mr. KELLY said he would not have supported the bill as originally written because it made the Postmaster General practically a czar, as he stated in some of his remarks with reference to air-mail contracts, and he assured Congress that—

Under this provision, every air-passenger line will have an equal chance to bid for the carriage of mail by aircraft.

Note that. Congress had declined to pass the bill. They found out they could not pass it, and Mr. KELLY rose on the floor and told the House of Representatives that he would not have supported the bill in its original form, and assured Congress that "under this provision every air passenger line will have an equal chance to bid for the carriage of mail by aircraft."

Mr. KELLY then had a substitute offered for the bill. The substitute bill provided for competitive bidding. It retained the provision with reference to certificates, which had originally been placed in the Kelly bill, as the evidence shows at the instance of Mr. MacCracken, attorney for the air-mail operators. This certificate feature authorized the Postmaster General to grant an extension of the contract in point of time under certain new conditions for a period not exceeding 10 years. This bill also had in it when it was offered—note this, because it is very important—a very short provision of about three or four lines, being section 7. Remember that it had that provision in it at the time when it did not provide for competitive bids. Here is the provision to which I refer:

The Postmaster General in establishing air-mail routes under this act may, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

Remember that that provision was in the bill at the time Mr. Brown took it to the committee and when it contained no provision on earth for competitive bidding. In other words, it was simply a provision with reference to extensions. The reference to it in the hearings was very short, but the Postmaster General did call attention to the fact in his evidence that certain parts of the air-mail map were illogical and that by slight extensions of service they could be made more logical. Nobody anticipated at that time, according to the sworn evidence before the committee by the officers of the companies themselves, that that little clause would be used to extend, without competitive bidding, more than 8,000 miles of lines throughout the United States. Nobody anticipated that it would be used to extend, without competitive bidding, a line practically from the northern boundary of this country to the southern boundary. I shall show a little later what the officers of the companies themselves said about the method of extensions. We have now the bill as offered. I say that no one contemplated that that should be done.

At this point I am going to read from a letter of the counsel in chief for the Transcontinental and Western Airways with reference to what he thought about these extensions. These are the extensions which we have heard were all legal and in the public interest. I read from a photostatic copy of the letter written on March 3, 1932, by Mr. C. W. Cuthell:

Here is what Mr. Cuthell, the attorney for the company, said:

If Cord had not made the great mistake of making an unfair cut in his pilots' wages, thereby losing the support of several of the Congressmen, it seems to me we would have had an excellent chance of having the Mead bill passed, because, as you know, I have always felt that the Postmaster General exceeded his authority under the Watres bill in respect to the extensions.

That was not only the viewpoint of the attorney for the Transcontinental and Western, but it was the viewpoint of the men who had this conference in May 1930. The vice president of one of the companies stated that he thought it was a joke when they first suggested they would follow any such course. So he went to the chairman of the committee and gave his views, the chairman being Mr. MacCracken, and later on he talked to another lawyer, and that night he and the members of his company talked to a second lawyer. So much for the original extension.

At that time the air-mail operators got busy. They were having trouble getting the bill through the House. They later had trouble getting it through the Senate. The record is filled with telegrams and letters telling them to bring people here and to continue their activities in connection with the bill. They were not satisfied with their regular paid lobbyists in Washington, and they had a number of them, but they had numerous special representatives come to Washington. They were not satisfied with Mr. MacCracken, Mr. Henderson, Mr. Brittin, Mr. Woolley, and all of the numerous other representatives the air-mail operators had, but they sent out in the field a Macedonian call for help. Help came in the form of telegrams; it came in the form of letters; it came in the form of personal solicitation. It came in the form of letters and memoranda from prominent newspaper people throughout the Nation.

It was impossible for us in the beginning to find out who all the people were that were employed. In answer to our first questionnaires we did not get the facts, and perhaps we have not yet obtained the names of all who represented them in Washington. It has been difficult to extract the information, but we obtained here and there a bit of evidence as the days and months wore on.

I desire to call attention, however, to the method by which they worked in connection with the Watres Act. This was the work of no $50 a month lobbyist. It will be noted that there has been a great deal of talk about what was done for the schedule operators by a lobbyist who was drawing the munificent sum of $50 a month. These gentlemen were drawing $15,000 a year, $20,000 a year, $3,000 for 2 days, and various other sums. Here is the way we find one of them was acting who was here in connection with the Watres bill. I read part of a letter dated May 16, 1930, from Mr. C. R. Smith, general manager of the Southern Air Transport, to Mr. Graham B. Grosvenor, president of the Aviation Corporation.

We have received your letter concerning the expenses incurred by Mr. Henry Zweifel while engaged in Washington working on the passage of the Watres bill, and atttached hereto is a statement amounting to $5,639.93, which represents the amount we have expended to date on his expenses.

The whole history of this transaction is as follows: Mr. Barrett and Mr. Zweifel went to New York in January, and upon their return I was informed by Mr. Barrett that the Aviation Corporation had contracted with Mr. Zweifel to represent it in Washington. The question as to who was to pay the expenses incurred by Mr. Zweifel was raised. We were anxious to relieve our division of as much expense as was possible, and suggested that we either secure the money for the expenses from the New York office or that we charge such expenses paid by us to the Aviation Corporation, but Mr. Barrett informed me that the employment of Mr. Zweifel having been authorized by the executive committee of the Aviation Corporation and that company having control of the Southern Air Transport, it did not make any difference who paid the expense, and that it would probably expedite matters for us to handle the expense through this office; and this was done.

You are no doubt familiar with the requirements of this company concerning expense accounts in the ordinary course of business; our requirements being that practically every cent of money advanced being accounted for by receipted statements and accounts. In connection with a mission such as that undertaken by Mr. Zweifel, we thought that it would not only be impossible to secure such statements but would be very poor policy to have an itemized statement of such expenses in our files, due to the fact that some committee of the Congress might ask us to produce them in connection with an investigation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what was the date of that letter?

Mr. BLACK. May 16, 1930, shortly after the passage of the Watres bill, and immediately before the conference was called in the Post Office Department in Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BONE. If my memory serves me right, one of these officers, who was among those made into multimillionaires as a result of some of these activities, was spending $60,000 a year to maintain a representative in Washington to secure the contracts or continuations of them.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes; some of them had more than $60,000 a year. Of course, it has been impossible to learn the names of all of them. We have obtained the names of a large number of them. Sixty thousand dollars a year was very moderate for some of them. Of course, the damage seems to have been done by this $50-a-month man. He was the dangerous man.

However, I shall call attention, before I finish, to some of the prominent figures who appear upon the scene, who enter into this sordid picture of corruption and collusion. I do not mean by that that every person whose name I shall mention took an active part in anything that involved fraud or collusion. Some of them, owing to the system that had been built up, felt they were playing a very patriotic part, perhaps, in the affairs of the Government. Some of them knew it had been customary to hire people to come to Washington and saw nothing wrong in it.

At this point I desire to express my own strong approval of the action of the War Department in the last few days in connection with War Department contracts. It shows the necessity for legislation, as I expect to show it before I have finished with reference to what has been done in connection with these contracts to prevent activities which have been denounced by the Supreme Court of the United States as destructive of the very fundamentals of government.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. LONG. These lobbying activities have been going on since time immemorial. There is nothing new about them, is there?

Mr. BLACK. No; there is not. They ought to be antiquated.

Mr. LONG. When we had some measure before the Senate a while back, when I first came to the Senate, the outer chamber was practically black with representatives of the big oil companies, sending into the Chamber for men almost at the clap of the bell. This matter of lobbying is the most pernicious thing that has ever gone on around Congress. I have seen less of it in the last month than in any other time since we have had the stock-exchange investigation.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator is correct. There has been less of it, and there ought to be still less. It ought to be eliminated and cut out like a cancer.

In that connection I desire to show what it was expected that the Aviation Corporation would get. What I am about to read is taken from the record of a meeting of the executive committee on April 29, 1930. Then I will show what they did get. Remember, this is the company that had a man up here to get the Watres bill passed. They would not put down their expenses, because they were afraid a committee might come along and inquire into the matter, and they might not be able to burn the records, as some of the others have done.

This is the way the expense accounts were kept—I give this as a sample:

> April 29, 1930: Vice Chairman Grosvenor reported that the Watres bill had now become a law, but that a large part needed interpretation. Schedule of compensation not definitely fixed, but it would appear the operating subsidiaries would benefit to the extent of $100,000 additional revenue per month; that instead of receiving 11 percent of the total air-mail revenue of the United States, the operating subsidiaries under the new law would receive approximately 22½ percent of this revenue, based on 1929 operations, which produced $1,586,000, and it is estimated that the new law would yield $3,000,000.

Remember, that was after Mr. Brown had been up here telling the Congress that he wanted to benefit the nonsubsidized passenger operators. Here was this company on April 29, at the time the Watres bill was passed, predicting exactly what would happen with reference to the Aviation Corporation.

Let us see what did happen.

After the conference was held, and after the extensions had been worked out, we find that in 1931, the next year, the Aviation Corporation, which had predicted that it would get 22½ percent, had fallen short. It received only 21.38 percent; but it had been low on the amount. It had predicted that it would receive $3,000,000, and it actually received $3,622,848.80.

The Aviation Corporation sent that man to Washington. They concealed their expense account. They predicted exactly what they would get under the Postmaster General, and they fell short less than 1 percent of the total amount so far as the percentage was concerned; and they exceeded their fond expectations by $600,000 on the total payment.

That is what happened with reference to that company.

Now let us see what happened next.

At the time this was going on, there were in Washington, from time to time, Mr. William P. MacCracken; D. M. Shaeffer, of the Pennsylvania Railroad; and J. G. Nettleton, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who had formerly been secretary to Representative Martin Madden. There were various others. Mr. Henderson also was here; and it is interesting to note that along about that time there appeared in the RECORD a statement made by Mr. Henderson's secretary to him in writing, which I will read. Mr. Young was Mr. Henderson's secretary, and here is the statement he made:

> Also, a man very close to the President told another man over there whom we are very close to that Mr. Glover had better watch his step, or he was going to get himself in hot water, owing to the fact that he was favoring the National Air Transport to too great a degree.

Bear in mind, not only were the representatives here, but down in the Post Office Department from time to time were those who had been advanced money by some of these people. Mr. Gove, the assistant to Mr. Glover, it has been shown in the record, had been advanced by Mr. Henderson more than $10,000; and a note for this money was torn up down in one of the hotels in this city on the theory, as Mr. Henderson said, that if Mr. Gove ever got the money he would pay him back. Another stock transaction was going on for the wife of a member of the interdepartmental committee in the Commerce Department, Mr. Hainsburg, at the expense of Mr. Henderson, according to the record.

So we have these transactions with two members of the interdepartmental committee. We have the statement of Mr. Henderson's secretary that Mr. Glover would have to be careful; he was going to have to watch his step, or he was going to get himself in hot water because he was favoring the National Air Transport.

It was under these circumstances that the Watres bill started on its way to enactment. About that time the bill passed the House. When it came over to the Senate, Mr. Henderson became disturbed. He wanted to employ someone, as he said, to expedite the bill. Before I get to his statement on the subject, let me call attention to this letter appearing on page 3160 of volume 8, from Colonel Henderson to Mr. D. M. Sheaffer, chief, passenger transportation, Pennsylvania Railroad:

> DEAR DAN: I have moved my office—

This was February 8, 1930, just before the Watres bill passed, shortly before the conference.

> I have moved my office to room 828, Investment Building, telephone National 6835. Please change your records.
> I should like to be able to tell Glover on Monday that his nephew is fixed up some place on the western division of T.A.T. as per my wire to you of Friday. I think this is extremely important. Glover will have more to do with the mail-subsidy allocations than any other one man.

And I call attention to the fact that the young man received the job. Mr. Henderson testified, immediately thereafter, that the young man was given the job. I asked him if he knew anything about the boy's experience. He said, "Have never seen him." I said, "Did you know anything about his qualifications?" He answered, "No, sir; I have never seen him, and know nothing about him."

That is the picture before the Watres bill was passed.

At the same time Mr. E. B. Wadsworth was Superintendent of Air Mail. He had been superintendent of air mail for quite a while. It developed that later, at some period which is not exactly identified, he secured a plane from the American Airways. He says he paid $50 for it, and that everybody flew in it. On being shown a letter about insurance carried by Mr. Hinshaw, of the Aviation Corporation, who had been an assistant in Mr. Hoover's preconvention campaign, Mr. Wadsworth said, in substance, "Yes; that insurance was taken out by Mr. Hinshaw because he flew in the plane, and he was protecting himself."

So we have a plane being purchased for $50 by the superintendent of air mail; we have the nephew of the Second Assistant up to that time in the employment of T.A.T.; we have a loan to Gove, and stock transactions with the wife of a member of the interdepartmental committee in the Commerce Department. See how the picture grows; and we have all of them here with expenses that it was difficult to trace.

All right.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator, if he will, indicate for the purpose of the RECORD the connections of Mr. Henderson, to show with what company he was connected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Henderson was connected with the United Air Transport.

Mr. BONE. What lines did they fly?

Mr. BLACK. They were flying the northern transcontinental route at that time. There had been a combination of the Boeing Co. and Pratt & Whitney, including the National Air Transport, and Mr. Paul Henderson had previously been an assistant to the Postmaster General. At the same time Mr. Woolley was here representing the Western Air Express. Mr. Shaeffer was here. Let me refer to the reports that were being made.

Mr. Nettleton was the agent here for the Pennsylvania Railroad. Here is a letter which appears in the record, from him to Mr. Daniel M. Shaeffer, whose name will later appear in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad. Here is what Mr. Nettleton said happened about the Watres bill on the other side of the Capitol (part 8, p. 3142):

DEAR DAN: I thought perhaps you might like to have a brief history of the inside relative to the air-mail bill. Here it is:

After the bill was introduced by Mr. Watres, several members of the Post Office Committee expressed opposition to it, their objections being that it put too much power in the hands of the Postmaster General. The chairman of the committee was one of those who opposed it; and with his opposition, it seemed that it would not be possible to get it reported favorably from his committee. The Speaker (Longworth) and the Republican floor leader (Tilson) were interviewed by Congressman Sproul, and they both stated that they did not think the bill should pass.

Mr. Sproul then called on the Postmaster General and told him of the opposition. The Postmaster General then asked for a meeting between himself on the one side and Longworth, Tilson, Snell (chairman of Committee on Rules), and Sanders (chairman of the House Post Office Committee), and a few others. This meeting was held last Friday afternoon, and it was decided to let the bill be reported and brought on the floor. A meeting was held yesterday afternoon by the full Post Office Committee, and they instructed Mr. Watres (chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge) to prepare it for reporting to the House. I expect that will be done today. It hasn't been decided yet what procedure will be followed, but I have suggested to Mr. Sproul that they should get a special rule reported providing for its consideration. * * *

Here was the representative of the Pennsylvania Railroad—bear that in mind—reporting on his activities, a man who had previously been secretary to a prominent Representative, stating that he had suggested how the bill should be gotten up before the House; and then he said, in the closing part of the letter:

There is going to be opposition on the floor, but it is impossible at this time to tell how strong it will be. * * * In other words, I feel that the bill has a chance to get by the House. What the Senate will do with it remains to be seen. I will keep you advised.

J. G. N.

The bill did get by the House, but it got by with a clause added providing for competitive bidding. It also got by after having had stricken out of it a provision which had originally appeared in it—this is an important feature—which provided that the equities of pioneers should be observed. That provision was stricken out.

At that time the bill came over to the Senate. On March 1, 1934, Mr. Hanshue testified before our committee that Mr. Lehr Fess and Mr. Philps, son of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, represented the National Air Transport at a meeting in the Post Office Department in February 1931. Thereafter a letter was written by Mr. Lehr Fess which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 9, 1934, at page 4091.

At that time the only evidence which appeared in the RECORD with reference to Mr. Fess was in connection with the meeting at which he represented the National Air Transport in 1931. The letter is as follows:

TOLEDO, OHIO, March 5, 1934.

Hon. S. D. FESS,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR FATHER: Were it not for the endeavor to poison the public and indirectly injure you, the Hanshue testimony would be amusing. The Watres Act was passed April 29, 1930, as I recall. I resigned as United States attorney August 1, 1930, and a few weeks later I was asked by some Pittsburgh people to represent them before the Post Office Department in connection with their proposed bid on a coast-to-coast mail contract.

I stop the reading for a moment to observe that that was the company which was opposing the bid of the Transcontinental & Western, of which the Pennsylvania Railroad was a part.

I spent a day in Pittsburgh, went with them to Washington, and attended the opening of the bids. Walter Brown was not in town that day, as I recall. When I discovered that the Pittsburgh group was not qualified to bid, and strongly suspicioned they did not have the finances to operate successfully even though they should be awarded the contract, I immediately withdrew and returned home. This was about the middle of August 1930. Neither United Aircraft nor N.A.T., as I recall, bid or were interested in these particular contracts. Sometime after the bid of the Pittsburgh Co. had been rejected and the contract awarded to T.A.T. & Western Air was approved by the Comptroller General, our firm was employed during the latter part of October 1930 by N.A.T. at a modest retainer and the usual per diem for court work and out-of-town business.

I digress long enough to say that the Comptroller General finally ruled, in January 1931, that the bid should go to the high bidder, which was the Pennsylvania Railroad controlled company, and not to the Avigation Co., which was the low bidder.

The retainer was terminated by mutual consent in November 1931 because of the decrease of the work and the necessity of the company to reduce expense.

The remainder of the letter appears on page 4091 of the RECORD of March 9, 1934.

I call attention to the fact that, on March 7, Paul Henderson testified before the committee as follows (part 7, p. 3030):

Colonel HENDERSON. In 1930, in early April, the Watres bill had passed the House. It had passed the Senate committee, but it had not been voted on, on the floor of the Senate. The route certificate of National Air Transport would have to be issued before a certain date in April or it could not be issued. The contract would have expired because of its time limitation, and at some date just in there—I cannot tell you the exact date—I became greatly concerned about the passage of the bill, because this passage was apparently necessary if National Air Transport, and its route no. 3, was to secure its route certificate. I discussed the question as to how something might be done that would expedite its passage. I remembered that Mr. Fess was at one time employed, I believe, as parliamentarian of the Senate, and he was in Toledo practicing law——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). You mean the House, do you not?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes; I beg your pardon. And he was probably more familiar than anybody I might know with methods of doing business in the legislative branch. I sent for him and asked him if he would undertake, as a lawyer, to expedite the passage of this Watres bill. He did, and I paid him a fee for it when he returned to Toledo. That occasion and the other one I have just described to you are the only times Mr. Fess did any business for me or any company I was ever associated with in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Was his firm not at that time, or Mr. Fess individually, on a regular retainer for your firm?

Colonel HENDERSON. Not at that time; no, sir. He was put on a regular retainer probably late in the fall of 1930 and remained in that status for at least a year, and perhaps longer.

The CHAIRMAN. How long did he stay here on the Watres bill?

Colonel HENDERSON. Two days, as I recall it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it pass while he was here?

Colonel HENDERSON. It either passed while he was here or the day following his departure. I am not sure which. It passed in time to permit our route certificates being made.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the fee?

Colonel HENDERSON. Three thousand dollars or five thousand dollars, I have forgotten which.

The CHAIRMAN. For just that 2 days' service?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

On March 7, 1934, Mr. Fess reported by letter to the committee that in April 1930 Paul Henderson employed him with reference to legislation then pending before Congress, "for which I received a fee of $3,000."

Mr. Fess stated in a letter dated March 8, 1934, which is in the record on pages 3138 and 3139, that—

The instance of April 30, relating to the Watres bill is that before leaving for Toledo it was agreed that I should receive $5,000 in the event the bill should pass within a few days.

Mr. Henderson also testified, with reference to this transaction, as appears on page 3151, as follows:

May I ask, Mr. Henderson, if you agreed with Mr. Fess before he came on a $5,000 fee?

Colonel HENDERSON. No; I had no knowledge of what the fee would be, none whatever. * * *

Question. Why did you give the check to Mr. Nettleton?

Mr. Nettleton was the representative of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Colonel HENDERSON. Because he made the arrangements for Mr. Fess.

I might state that when Mr. Nettleton was asked about the subject, in the examination on pages 3128 and 3129, he said that there was no definite amount agreed on. Nettleton claims to have paid a fee to Mr. Fess by check April 25, 1930. That appears in the transcript of the evidence before the committee on page 3136.

The Watres bill was signed April 29, 1930. The Nettleton check and stub were not produced.

Reference to page 3139 will show that Mr. Nettleton testified that his canceled checks were all destroyed, but he did have checks showing payments to D. M. Shaeffer in 1928 and 1929.

Mr. Henderson also produced his check to Mr. Nettleton; and as to the check stub, the following evidence of Mr. Henderson and Mr. Young shows what happened:

Mr. HENDERSON. You mean the check?

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the same account?

Mr. HENDERSON. Apparently it is; yes, sir. The number of this check, which is apparently the check I gave to Mr. Nettleton, because the date corresponds, is 146, but it is scratched out by somebody and written in with red-lead pencil "260", and it is a green check.

The CHAIRMAN. See if you find the check stub there.

Mr. HENDERSON. This check book is yellow, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I know; but I just wanted to see if you had a number in the check stub corresponding to that number.

Mr. HENDERSON. No; there is no check stub here. There could not be a check stub, Mr. Chairman, in this book—it is yellow, or whatever color it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Look at the place where that number would be.

Mr. HENDERSON. I just did, and there is nothing there at all.

At that time Mr. Henderson had before him the check book, looking for the place where he said the stub should be. He said the check numbers jumped from 257 to 261.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, what has happened to the page of the check stubs there?

Mr. HENDERSON. I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Has it been cut out?

Mr. HENDERSON. I can't tell, sir. Perhaps you can. Yes; there is a page cut out.

It was so difficult to find where the check stub had been cut out that Mr. Henderson had to take the check book and bend it back. It is shown by his evidence he said at first he could not tell and later he said:

But may I call your attention, sir, to the fact that this check—I don't know who changed the number from 146 to 260, which is done with a red-lead pencil.

The CHAIRMAN. Which number is cut out?

Mr. HENDERSON. The checks, nos. 258, 259, and 260, would have been on that page.

Then we called the secretary of Mr. Henderson to ascertain whether or not the checks cut out, nos. 258, 259, and 260, would correspond with the check which had been given to Mr. Nettleton to be paid to Mr. Fess. I read further:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Young, have you figured out those three checks there with the balance to see whether the amounts of those checks represent the same amount that should be represented on the three checks?

Mr. YOUNG. I have not figured it, only in my mind, that from this fact the reconciliation shows that they must be there and must reconcile it.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, that those three checks there are the ones that were represented on the page of which the stub has been cut out?

Mr. YOUNG. There seems to be, because there would be no other way in which the amounts could be put in there which would make the account reconcile.

The CHAIRMAN. What are your initials, Mr. Young?

Mr. YOUNG. C. W.—Charles W.

The CHAIRMAN. You are the secretary of Colonel Henderson?

Mr. YOUNG. Trying to be; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And have been for how long?

Mr. YOUNG. I think May 24, 1929.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know how that particular stub there happened to be cut out?

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir. I have no recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you do it?

Mr. YOUNG. No, sir.

So that we had the fact that, up to that time, for some reason the stub for the check which was given to Mr. Nettleton by Mr. Henderson, paying money out of the funds, as he said, of the National Air Transport and the Transcontinental Air Transport, for Mr. Fess, was gone.

With reference to the question of having representatives here in order to expedite legislation, I desire to read one paragraph from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Tool Co. v. Norris (2 Wall. 54):

It was not claimed, on the trial, that the plaintiff had rendered any other services than those which resulted in the procurement of the contract for the muskets. We are of opinion, therefore, that the proposition of law is fairly presented by the record, and is before us for consideration.

The question, then, is this: Can an agreement for compensation to procure a contract from the Government to furnish its supplies be enforced by the courts? We have no hesitation in answering the question in the negative. All contracts for supplies should be made with those, and with those only, who will execute them most faithfully, and at the least expense to the Government.

I skip a little:

That agreements like the one under consideration have this tendency is manifest. They tend to introduce personal solicitation and personal influence as elements in the procurement of contracts; and thus directly lead to inefficiency in the public service, and to unnecessary expenditure of the public funds.

I desire to read a paragraph from Trist v. Child (21 Wall. 451), with reference to expediting legislation as viewed by the Supreme Court of the United States. It will be remembered that there were numerous representations here in connection with the Watres bill, seeking to push it through, and push it through rapidly. The Court said at page 451:

The agreement in the present case was for the sale of the influence and exertions of the lobby agent to bring about the passage of a law for the payment of a private claim, without reference to its merits, by means which, if not corrupt, were illegitimate, and considered in connection with the pecuniary interest of the agent at stake, contrary to the plainest principles of public policy. No one has a right, in circumstances, to put himself in a position of temptation to do what is regarded as so pernicious in its character. The law forbids the inchoate step and puts the seal of its reprobation upon the undertaking.

Listen to this:

If any of the great corporations of the country were to hire adventurers who make market of themselves in this way, to procure the passage of a general law with a view to the promotion of their private interests, the moral sense of every right-minded man would instinctively denounce the employer and employed as steeped in corruption, and the employment as infamous.

If the instances were numerous, open, and tolerated, they would be regarded as measuring the decay of the public morals and the degeneracy of the times. No prophetic spirit would be needed to foretell the consequences near at hand.

Yet this record is filled from the very beginning to the end with evidence that the air-mail companies and ocean-mail companies have employed their agents to come to Washington to have passed general legislation in order that they might get special and pecuniary benefits.

In the main I might state that it has been with the utmost difficulty, and only after months and months of effort, that we have been able to obtain the evidence with reference to such employment. In the first questionnaire that went out, each one of the companies was asked to tell us whom they had employed in Washington, and they did not give us 0.1 of the names of the special representatives who have been in Washington.

As yet we have not secured them all. We have more, I might state, than have yet appeared in the public records, but we have not yet secured them all.

I have now reached the point where I want to call the Senate's attention to the evidence of the conference at the office of the Postmaster General. I shall first show the Senate at whose instance it was called. I shall show it by a photostatic copy of a letter dated May 21, 1930.

This conference was called May 15, 1930. The Watres bill had passed. The Postmaster General had had a bill passed which included competitive bidding. The companies and the Postmaster General had been lobbying to keep away from competitive bidding, but the bill passed with a provision in it for competitive bidding. The meeting was called at the instance of one of the strongest political groups whose names appear in the entire record of intrigue and chicanery. May 21, 1930, Mr. C. W. Cuthell wrote a letter to Mr. C. M. Keys of Savannah, Ga. Mr. Cuthell was at that time the attorney for the T.A.T. T.A.T. was largely controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad. The Pennsylvania Railroad is largely controlled by its officers and by Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who are the bankers. This is a part of the company that got the contract, with which Colonel Lindbergh and Mr. Rickenbacker are connected.

On May 21, 1930, Mr. Cuthell wrote as follows:

My dear C. M. The air-mail contract—

Note this is May 21. It is two days after the conference began. It is six days after the conference was called. Mr. Keys was the banker, and we shall show later the copy that went to the bankers.

The air-mail-contract situation has taken practically all of my time lately. It is likely to continue to do so for several more weeks. The bill, as it was finally passed, shows that Paul did not aggressively represent T.A.T.

In other words, he is complaining there that Paul Henderson did not represent the T.A.T. as aggressively as he could, Henderson at that time being the representative of the T.A.T. and the N.A.T. I continue reading from the letter:

The 40-cents-a-mile provision was, of course, intended to aid passenger lines which did not have mail contracts. There are only two such in the country—

Note this— .

Halliburton and T.A.T. The bill as finally passed permits any of the old-line air-mail contractors to bid even on the lines established by these two companies, but because of the route-certificate provisions in the rest of the bill these two companies cannot bid for the extensions of the old lines.

If Paul had actually been hostile to us, he could not have shown his hostility in any more effective way. Captain Doe, Cheever, and, I think, Dan Shaeffer are all now of the opinion that, as a result of their inquiries around Washington, Paul could have gotten a provision in the new law which would have limited the competition for the 40-cent contract to those companies which had been operating over a particular route, such as T.A.T. and Western Air between Kansas City and Los Angeles.

It was reported to Cheever and myself early last week that the P.M.G. would do nothing about a T.A.T. contract until after he had completed all of his negotiations with the old companies in connection with through-route certificates. We were not at all satisfied to remain idle. Consequently we insisted that Maddux proceed to Washington and associate Furlow—

Who, I might say, was getting $15,000 a year, as the record shows—with him to do the work that Paul—

That is, Henderson—

used to do.

Mr. Furlow is a former Congressman.

They had one extended talk with Brown, taking as the particular occasion a newspaper report that Brown had extended the Western Air route from Los Angeles to San Diego, a route over which Maddux had been flying for 3 years and Western Air for 3 months. Maddux and Furlow handled themselves very well and showed Brown clearly that if all of the old air-mail contracts had their routes extended the appropriations would be quickly exhausted and there would be no more routes open. The effect would be to put T.A.T. out of business, unless the passenger revenues increased tremendously and costs were further reduced.

The following day—

Note this—

Dan and I saw the P.M.G. and I was just as specific in my questions as I could be.

"Dan" is Dan Sheaffer of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

At the end of the meeting he stated that he would not sign the Western Air-San Diego extension and he forthwith called a meeting of all of the old lines, as well as the passenger operators who are now without mail contracts.

We have here the call of the operators. At whose instance? At the instance of the most powerful of all the picture, outside of the Mellon group in Pittsburgh, with which they were later associated, and with which they were associated then by interlocking directorates. I read further:

The following day Maddux and Lindbergh went to see him, so that by the end of last week Brown understood clearly that T.A.T. was very definitely being excluded from the picture.

I politely pointed out to Brown the embarrassments of our situation due to the fact that our representative had joined up with our opponents and asked that we be given a full opportunity to be heard. * * *

I shall stop reading the letter at that place, although I shall recur to it later to show to the Senate exactly what the lawyer for the T.A.T. said about this meeting 2 days after it started. I shall later show to the Senate that he said it was illegal.

We have the calling of the meeting. The call of the meeting appears in the memorandum printed in volume 5 of the hearings, pages 2323 and 2324. The memorandum is for Mr. Wadsworth, and is dated Washington, May 15, 1930, 6 days before Mr. Cuthell's letter. Note this call and it will be seen how it fits in with Mr. Cuthell's report.

Memorandum for Mr. WADSWORTH:

The Postmaster General is desirous of having a conference with representatives of the companies mentioned below; by this, I mean a substantial representative like Wheat for the United Aircraft; Hanshue, Western Air, and Maddux, of the T.A.T. He sees the feeling that is developing among the passenger-carrying lines.

Note that interest in the passenger-carrying lines—

Who have no mail contract and have no way of getting into the picture unless it is by competitive bidding, and he wants to have a meeting with these representatives, on next Monday, May 19, at 2 p.m., in his office, and desires to have a talk with them along the lines of just the best way for them to approach the question of giving aid to passenger lines. In other words, he wants them to come to some understanding so that it will not all be thrown into the pot and the passenger-line operators left entirely outside, due to the fact that the air-mail operators would have the inside and would have the territory covered.

Thrown into the pot! What do you do, Mr. President, when you have competitive bidding, honest competitive bidding? You throw it open and let the man who bids the lowest win.

The companies he desires at this meeting * * *—

Says the memorandum, are as follows:

United Aircraft Corporation, Wheat; Aviation Corporation of America, Coburn; Western Air, Hanshue will be there; T.A.T. Maddux—

Note this in parenthesis—

(Saw Dan Sheaffer and Cuthell; they will get Maddux here.)

There is the letter I have just read showing that the meeting was called at their instance. Here is the notice which says: "You need not notify Cuthell and Sheaffer; they will be there. I saw them"—and then he tells them how to get in touch with the rest.

What was the purpose of that meeting? Remember that up to the time this had occurred the Postmaster General had tried to get a bill passed which would eliminate competitive bidding, and had failed. A bill had passed providing for competitive bidding. What was its purpose? Let me see what Mr. Brown said about it under oath.

I shall read his three different versions of his reasons. The purpose of the meeting, according to Mr. Brown, is found on page 2550, in his written statement, dated February 19, 1934.

There will be considerable progress made by Mr. Brown and his reasons as the days go by and as the conferences continue. Mr. Brown's written statement was before the committee. Here is what he said was the reason:

The two meetings of air-passenger operators and air-mail operators, held at the Post Office Department May 19 and June 4, 1930, to which attention has been directed, were called and held for a purpose entirely legal and proper, to wit: To find if possible some method under the provisions of the McNary-Watres Act of aiding the passenger-transport operators who had no mail contracts and whose losses were compelling them to abandon their passenger operations. There was nothing clandestine or secret about these meetings. * * *

And so forth.

Note that he said under oath in his written memorandum, when he had ample time to think and consult with his advisers, that the meeting was called for the purpose "of aiding the passenger-transport operators who had no mail contracts and whose losses were compelling them to abandon their lines."

Now, let us see what he gave out to the press as the reason for the meeting. I quote from a memorandum from the New York Times in the record at page 2585, as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Plans for a network of passenger and mail air routes throughout the United States were requested today by Postmaster General Brown from representatives of various large air carriers.

"Plans for a network."

The New York Times article continues:

Mr. Brown is known to have in mind the consolidation of various routes so as to cover the country with air-carrier service. He asked the airmen to prepare a map showing in detail the various routes they would recommend, with the idea of taking it up with him at a future conference.

To recommend routes; not to recommend who should have the routes. No notice such as that appeared in the public press.

These representatives came here principally—

Said the news item—

to confer with Postmaster General Brown and Assistant Postmaster General Glover relative to the new pay basis provided in the Watres bill. * * *

That is important because it is the only time I have seen any purpose such as that being indicated.

Remember that the first sworn statement of Mr. Brown was that he wanted to aid the passenger operators. Listen to the next statement on the morning of February 20, 1934 (part 6, p. 2437):

Mr. BROWN. There was no purpose ever to divide up the air-mail operation. The purpose of the meeting was just as was stated in the reports, just as was stated by Mr. WADSWORTH'S minutes, to try to find a way under the Watres Act to give some mail pay to the passenger operators who had no mail contracts and who were starving. * * *

Note his solicitude there for the passenger operators. That was the purpose of the meeting.

Now, I called the meeting. I called it to order and I addressed it, and I know what I said. I told them the history of the adoption of the Watres Act and the history of the elimination * * *—

And so forth.

Subletting additional daylight mail schedules to the regular operators and subletting those to the passenger people; the other plan was to give extensions to the regular mail operators on certain parts of their routes and have those sublet. I stated that to be the plan that had been proposed by somebody or other of them, I think, and then I said to them I would be very glad to see if they could agree among themselves as to who had the pioneer equities that were referred to in the Watres Act.

There were no pioneer equities referred to in the Watres Act. That provision had been taken out of the law; it had not been adopted.

Note he still says for the benefit of the passenger operators. Now look at his next statement. The same day in the morning—volume 6, pages 2441, 2443, and 2444:

Mr. BROWN. No; I don't. What I mean is this: That if the plan of subletting was put into effect, that their recommendation was that these people had the equities, which ought to be observed.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; which ought to be observed?

Mr. BROWN. Which ought to be observed.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean which ought to be observed and that they ought to have the lines?

Mr. BROWN. That these equities ought to be observed.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean by saying "observed" that the observation would require that those companies get those lines?

Mr. BROWN. No; but in the language of the original Watres Act, that proper consideration should be given to these equities.

The CHAIRMAN. For the purpose of getting the lines; is that it?

Mr. BROWN. That, and just exactly what I say: That the Postmaster General should give proper consideration to these equities.

The CHAIRMAN. For them to get the lines or for somebody else to get the lines.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, the purpose would be to try to work out something for them.

At last he got down to a final statement where it was no longer possible to wiggle out. I quote further from his testimony on the morning of February 20:

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, it had no connection whatever with who should get the lines?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; it did. It was their recommendation that these people had equities.

The CHAIRMAN. In that line?

Mr. BROWN. In these lines that they had been operating and in the opinion of the committee that operation entitled them to consideration in anything that was done.

(Page 2444:)

The CHAIRMAN. In awarding that contract?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; that is correct.

Let us see what was the next reason for calling the operators together. I quote from the testimony on February 20, in the afternoon:

[Vol. 6, p. 2448]

The CHAIRMAN. So that the plan discussed by the conference which has already been testified to, and the names of the representatives placed in the record, was with reference to the ways and means whereby what you class as the equities of companies on various lines could be considered?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Could be recognised and contracts awarded to them, or certificates, without competitive bidding?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct. That was the plan.

Mr. Brown, further in the afternoon, testified as follows:

[Vol. 6, p. 2449]

Mr. BROWN. No; I did not say that. What I said was that the purpose of this meeting was to see if a plan could be worked out under the Watres Act that had just been enacted whereby mail pay could be given to the passenger lines by subletting operations from the mail contractors without competitive bidding. That was what it was all about.

That is what he tried to get the right to do, and Congress denied it. Here is the second reason given by Mr. Brown. Note this philosophical reason. Remember that Mr. Brown has been exercising himself with solicitude for the passenger operators. On February 22 in the afternoon, Mr. Brown had advanced to this reason (vol. 6, p. 2579):

Mr. BROWN. No one. The fact is this, that I called the conference merely to convince the operators if I could that I played fair with them in the enacting of the Watres Act. Then I talked about the other things because I had to talk about something besides that, but there was not a thing done by those operators that influenced the Department in the smallest part.

Note where he had advanced. On February 22 he has reached the point where all that he called them together for was to convince them that he had played fair in the passage of the Watres Act. Up to that time he had insisted, first, that he simply wanted to take care of the passenger operators; next, that it was to consider the equities and give them contracts. This time he wanted to show them that he had played fair with them in having a law passed. Mr. President, has the time come when the Postmaster General of the United States is compelled to call the operators together in order to convince them that he had played fair in the passage of a law? In the first place, it is not his business to pass a law; it was the business of Congress. Next Mr. Brown says on February 23 in the afternoon, page 2646:

Mr. BROWN. No; you are mistaken about it. The whole purpose of the meeting, so far as I was concerned, was to convince these passenger-carrying operators that had no mail contract that I had played fair with them.

There he has taken the second step toward an attempt to escape from what the facts show are the inescapable reasons for his action.

Now let us see his third reason. This is the most important of them all.

February 20, 1934, morning, page 2437:

Mr. BROWN. It was my belief that they could not agree, and if they did not I would not be further embarrassed by the plan.

On February 20, in the afternoon, page 2449:

Mr. BROWN. They were trying to state to me, if they could as among themselves, who they believed had the pioneer rights, and that was all they were trying to do, and I knew they could not do it and was satisfied that that would give me the best excuse in the world to chuck the whole thing, which I did.

Note how he has advanced. He wanted to take care of the operators at the time when he was talking to Congress; he wanted to take care of the passenger operators, he said, when he came in with his prepared and signed statement; but now he has advanced to the position where he admits under oath and asserts that it was his object not to take care of them, but to get them in a meeting where they would disagree, and he could throw the whole thing out of the window.

Again, on February 22, morning (p. 2555):

Well, to be very frank about it, I had very little faith in our ability to work out any plan under the provisions of the law that would save the passenger operators who had no mail contracts. * * *

However, I stated it to the meeting, believing that they could not reconcile their views with respect to that. I did not want them to reconcile their views.

No; he did not. Let us see whether he did or not. He has now advanced to the point where he called them by deception, according to his own statement, telling them he expected them to agree, but believing, as he said, that they could not agree. Now he has advanced to the very manly and honorable position wherein he says:

I did not want them to reconcile their views.

Why not?

I was looking for an easy way out of the situation.

Out of what situation? Was he not the Postmaster General armed with the power of that office? Did he have to find any easy way to get away from the air-mail operators? What hold did they have upon him whereby it was necessary for him to call them together, expressly stating he was doing it for one purpose, when he said that in his mind he was doing it for another purpose and knew the result of the meeting would be futile and useless.

I was looking for an easy way out of the situation. * * * I put that problem up to them, which I did not believe they could solve, and then I put another one up to them, which was to see if they could agree among themselves as to whom the equities properly belonged, the pioneers' prescriptive claims, based upon having done the pioneering in the territory—put that problem up to them, believing they could not agree on that, and they did not, and then I thought I would be relieved from pursuing the matter, as I finally was.

We will see a little later whether he finally was or not.

Now let us see what he said further. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] asked some questions which brought out very pointedly and definitely his statement that he called them for one purpose when he intended to do nothing at all in line with the purpose for which he called them. I read (p. 2646):

Senator McCARRAN. Are we to understand from that you called them together with the idea of agreeing that they should disagree?

Mr. BROWN. I called them together for the purpose——

Senator McCARRAN. Won't you answer that question?

Mr. BROWN. No; I did not.

Senator McCARRAN. That is the way I construed your last answer, and also your answer to Senator AUSTIN. In other words, if I caught it correctly—and I want to catch it correctly—you called these airline operators together on the 19th of May here in Washington, knowing that they would disagree. Am I right so far?

Mr. BROWN. Believing that they would.

Senator McCARRAN. Believing that they would?

Mr. BROWN. Believing that they would.

Senator McCARRAN. Disagree as to what?

Mr. BROWN. Disagree, first, as to subletting additional mail schedules. Now, in that respect, I was correct. N.A.T. refused to do it. Believing they would fail to agree with respect to their pioneer claims—and they did. And when they brought in the proofs of their disagreement on that I filed the report, and never gave it another moment's consideration.

Senator McCARRAN. In other words, you believed when you brought these operators together they would disagree on these two primary questions?

Mr. BROWN. I did.

Senator McCARRAN. How were you going to settle it after they disagreed?

Mr. BROWN. How was I going to settle it?

Senator McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. There wasn't anything to settle. That plan of giving relief to the air-passenger operators who had no mail contracts failed, and they all went out of business.

There is the statement of Mr. Brown. Remember that every time he opened his mouth he said he was going up to the House and get a bill through to take care of those operators, and yet now he says he called them together in order to let them disagree, in order to let them fail, that they did fail, and that all of them after failing went out of business. There is the way he was taking care of those operators whom he said were "starving to death." The Aviation Corporation of America did not starve to death. United Airways did not starve to death. North American and General Motors did not starve to death. Northwest Airways did not starve to death. Oh, no, those starved to death whom he said he brought in there with the hatchet over their heads, believing they could not agree, were called for that purpose and then they folded up, he said, and went out of business.

Let us see what Mr. Brown said he called them together for, as shown in the report of that meeting made by Mr. Wadsworth:

The Postmaster General opened the meeting by discussing the general provisions of the Watres bill and invited suggestions from those present as to the ways and means of assisting the passenger operators, inasmuch as it is understood none of the so-called "strictly passenger lines" are breaking even, and it is apparent that they will need some assistance if they are to continue. The Postmaster General expressed the desire to know whether it is going to be possible for the so-called "pioneers" to agree among themselves as to the territory in which they shall have the paramount interest.

That is from the stenographic report of the meeting dated May 20, 1930. He said when he got them there together he wanted to see if they could agree. Remember that in connection with his sworn evidence four times given before the committee that he was not telling them the truth as yet. He stated in his evidence that his object was to get them there together because he knew they would not agree and he could then throw the thing out the window, and it was thrown out the window and they all went out of business.

Immediately following that, on page 2325 of the hearings appears a statement of all the operators where they said they wanted to do anything in the world except to have competitive bidding. Remember the bill had passed providing for competitive bidding after the Postmaster General had failed to get the other bill passed, and there on the record appears the statement of the operators that they believed that plan was better than competitive bidding. After that the Postmaster General rose and said:

The Postmaster General asked everyone to speak if there were any objections to the plan suggested and said this was the appropriate time to express their opinions or objections thereto. No one rose in objection to the plan.

Why, of course not. Of course they did not raise any objection to the plan. The plan was to do away with competitive bidding and to give more to him who had something and to take away from him who had not, and that plan was followed.

Mr. President, at this time I ask to have inserted in the RECORD the full and complete statement signed "E. B. W.", appearing on pages 2325 and 2326 of the record of the hearings, which is Mr. Wadsworth's report of the meeting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter is as follows:

The Postmaster General invited representatives of passenger air lines to meet with him in conference at 2 p.m. on May 19 for the purpose of discussing the provisions of the Watres bill insofar as it offered aid to the passenger lines.

The following persons were present: Messrs. Russel, Hanshue, Woolley, and Bishop, of Western Air Express; Messrs. Mayo and Patterson, of Stout Air Lines; Messrs. Maddux, Shaeffer, Cuthell, Furlow, of T.A.T. Maddux Air Lines; Messrs. Coburn and Hinshaw, of Aviation Corporation; Messrs. White and Johnson, of United Aircraft Corporation; Messrs. Doe and Elliott, of Eastern Air Transport; Mr. Henderson, of National Air Transport; Messrs. Marshall and Denning, Thompson Aeronautical Corporation; Messrs. Robbins and Hann, of Pittsburgh Aviation Industry; Mr. Van Zant; Mr. Lou Holland, of United States Air Transport; Mr. Ted Clark, representing Earl Halliburton; and Lawrence King, of Detroit.

The Postmaster General opened the meeting by discussing the general provisions of the Watres bill and invited suggestions from those present as to the ways and means of assisting the passenger operators, inasmuch as it is understood none of the so-called "strictly passenger lines" are breaking even, and it is apparent that they will need some assistance if they are to continue. The Postmaster General expressed the desire to know whether it is going to be possible for the so-called "pioneers" to agree among themselves as to the territory in which they shall have the paramount interest. He outlined certain prospective routes that were in contemplation somewhat as follows: A southern transcontinental route from Los Angeles to San Diego, thence to Fort Worth and Dallas; also a route from New York to St. Louis and Kansas City and Los Angeles; from St. Louis to Tulsa and Fort Worth; from St. Paul to Winnipeg; possibly from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Omaha; possibly a route south from Cheyenne, and possibly one from Albany to Boston. He referred to the plan mentioned below.

Colonel Henderson said: "I believe it is quite possible for this group to work out a plan." He asked for instructions from the Postmaster General as to some policy. He mentioned extensions and then assigning such extensions to some operator who has no mail contract. He indicated the air-mail contractors would be willing to agree to such a plan.

Mr. Maddux feels that if they do not receive an air-mail contract, they could not live, and he hoped the bill would take care of this. He would rather see the plan worked out as mentioned above than competitive bidding. He said: "That is the view of T.A.T."

Mr. Mayo said: "I think the suggestion is a good one rather than to have competitive bidding." He thinks the routes we have worked out with the directors on their certificates are fair, and so forth.

Mr. Clark said: "I would prefer the plan suggested rather than competitive bidding."

Mr. Lou Holland said: "I think it should be worked out by agreement, as I am afraid that competitive bidding will result in wild promotions."

Mr. Hanshue: "We are willing to do anything within reason to work out the plan rather than to go into competitive bidding."

Mr. Coburn: "I believe there is a community of interests among the operators in the Department, and they are ready to cooperate and find out how to do it."

Mr. WHITE. "I feel sure that the entire group would be delighted to go into such a conference and work it out along the lines suggested."

The Postmaster General asked everyone to speak if there were any objections to the plan suggested, and said that this was the appropriate time to express their opinions or objections thereto. No one rose in objection to the plan.

Mr. MacCracken suggested grouping the representatives together according to locality in order to work out the details of the plan or any other plan that might be gotten up, suggesting they might even have four committees, or an eastern and a western committee.

Colonel Henderson thinks those who have air-mail contracts should be organized into one committee and those who have no air-mail contracts should be organized into another committee.

Mr. Cuthell suggested that certain members of this group present to the Postmaster General a grouping of companies to deal with southern and midcontinent transcontinental routes.

The Postmaster General decided to permit the operators to use the room in which the meeting was held for the purpose of organizing themselves into such groups as may be agreed upon and to report back to the Postmaster General when they had reached a conclusion with regard to the suggested plan. He suggested that they stick to the routes outlined.

E. B. W.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, is that a report of what happened at that meeting?

Mr. BLACK. It has been approved by Mr. Brown on the stand. There is no question about it being a part of what happened. Mr. Wadsworth did not take full stenographic notes of the entire proceeding.

In that connection I call attention to the fact that title 39 of the Code of Laws of the United States expressly prohibits combinations to prevent competitive bidding. I shall not read it into the RECORD at this time, but I call attention to the fact that for the first offense the person so offending shall be disqualified to contract for carrying the mail for 5 years and for the second offense shall be forever disqualified.

I call attention to the fact that we need no statute to make that illegal. The courts themselves have said that efforts to prevent competitive bidding constitute a nefarious offense. It is a fraud on its face. It is contrary to every idea and conception of fundamental morals and ethics this country has ever known. If the time has come when the people have reached such a low level that they could have glossed over such a nefarious thing as the preventing of competitive bids to give justice to citizens, then this country has reached a sad state in public morals. I do not believe it has. I believe that today, as in the past, the people of the Nation believe in fundamental honesty, fundamental justice, and fundamental fair dealing.

I wish to read at this point from the case of McMullen v. Hoffman (174 U.S. 649). The court said in that case:

Therefore, when it is urged that these parties had no intention of bidding for this work alone and that unless they had combined their bids neither would have bid at all, and hence the agreement between them tended to strengthen instead of to suppress competition, this answer to the illegality of the contract is insufficient * * *. If there had been competition, the bid of each for the contract that was obtained might have been lower than the one that was accepted. It is not necessary to prove that fact in order to show the nefarious character of the agreement.

The Supreme Court of the United States has stamped its disapproval upon every movement that is intended in any way to do away with competitive bidding and prevent justice being done to the people of the country.

Before I go further into the evidence of the officers of these companies, and their testimony as to what they were there for, I desire to call attention to the case of Crocker v. United States (240 U.S. 81). The Supreme Court said in that case:

Of course, the secret arrangement with Machen operated to vitiate the company's contract and justified the Postmaster General in rescinding it on discovering the fraud. * * *

Note that this was a mail contract, and the then Postmaster General had done exactly what was done by the present Postmaster General. He had canceled the contract, and the Court says:

Of course, the secret arrangement with Machen operated to vitiate the company's contract and justified the Postmaster General in rescinding it on discovering the fraud. * * * And this is so, even though the company was without actual knowledge of the corrupt arrangement. It was made by Lorenz and Crawford while endeavoring to secure the contract for the company and was a means to that end. They were the company's agents and were securing the contract at its request. It accepted the fruits of their efforts and thereby sanctioned what they did and made their knowledge its own.

In other words, Mr. President, the company is bound by the acts of its agents; and when it comes here, even if its officers themselves did not know of these acts, the company is still bound by the fraud which was perpetrated. The loan of $10,000 by Henderson to Gove, the stock transaction of Henderson with Hingsburg, make invalid every contract made with United Aircraft under those conditions. There can be no sort of question, from the decisions of the Supreme Court from the beginning of its history, that if there were nothing else in this record but those two things, United Aircraft would not have a single valid contract. It is not necessary that they should have known about these things.

Now let us see what they did know. Let us take first the Northwest Airways, whose contract was canceled. Let me read from a memorandum of May 26, 1930, by their representative. He was their representative here for years. He was really the Northwest Airways in Washington. He was their spokesman. By his action in obtaining those contracts they are bound. By his testimony before the special committee under oath they are bound. I shall later read a case from the Supreme Court of the United States to sustain that point.

Let me read from his memorandum of May 26, 1930, found in volume 7, page 3102:

It appears that the Postmaster General was not able to get sufficient authorization in the recent Watres bill to enable him to put air mail on passenger lines without competitive bids. In order to avoid putting of air-mail contracts over these routes to competitive bidders, he has called the principal passenger operators together and advised them that if they would agree among themselves on an equitable apportionment of routes he would grant the air-mail contracts under the power given him to extend air-mail contracts of lines already carrying mail.

What does that mean? It means what it says. Here is the statement made in this communication of May 26 by the representative of the Northwest Airways. It was not only made by him in this memorandum which the committee had, but he declared under oath before the committee that it was the truth. He swore that the Postmaster General called the operators there, according to what he said in this memorandum, and that every word in it was true.

What did the memorandum say?

That if they would agree among themselves on an equitable apportionment of routes he [the Postmaster General] would grant the air-mail contracts under the power given him to extend air-mail contracts.

What was that?

The Postmaster General, as this agent said, had failed to obtain authority to avoid competitive bidding; and here was the Postmaster General, according to the agent of this company, its alter ego, doing exactly the thing which Congress had declined to permit him to do, and telling the boys, when they got there, "You agree among yourselves on an equitable apportionment, and I will grant you contracts by the extension method."

What was that for? Is there any question about that? There certainly can be no question so far as the Northwest Airways is concerned, because the Northwest Airways was represented by the man who made the statement and by the man who swore to it before the committee.

Was it wrong to cancel those contracts when their own representative came before the committee and swore that he made a report to the company 5 days after the meeting started that the purpose was to divide up the air-mail map; the purpose was to thwart and circumvent competitive bidding?

Not only did Mr. Brittin say that there but in a letter dated June 2, which he also swore was true, found on page 3109 of the record, he said:

Thanks for yours of the 29th. The air-mail contractors are having a desperate session in Washington. The Postmaster General was not able to get the necessary legislation in the Watres bill to enable him to grant air-mail contracts to passenger-carrying lines without competitive bids. He has made up his mind to do this anyway and has hit upon a plan that is causing the operators no end of trouble. He has conceived, probably in iniquity, a plan for three main transcontinental routes competitively operating and several north-and-south lines as well. To work things out, he called the operators together, handed them this map, and instructed them to settle among themselves the distribution of these routes.

Is there any question about that? Can there be any doubt about what the Postmaster General told the operators so far as the Northwest Airways were concerned? He handed the operators the map, showed them the routes, and said, "You agree among yourselves as to the distribution of the routes." Could there be any competitive bidding after that? Would a man who was half-way a man, a man who had left the slightest vestige of honor or integrity, after he had participated in that meeting, feel free to go out and bid against his competitor for one of the lines, when he had sat at this meeting and made the agreement?

So far as the Northwest Airways were concerned, can there be any question about them? Their contracts were canceled. Their representative wrote them what was going on. They knew it; and they got the extensions called for in the written agreement which was reported to the Postmaster General, a copy of which only we were able to get. Unfortunately, the original was destroyed, evidently by fire. It never has been produced. No one knew that the copy could be located, but it was. These things have a way of turning up, and even the best-laid plans of those who would hide and conceal their nefarious practices oft go wrong, so we got a copy of the agreement.

Now let us see whether that was a public or a private meeting. Let us see how much the public was to know about it. I read what the news statement said about it, and I have shown what was really the purpose. Colonel Brittin on June 6, 1930, sent a telegram, which is found in volume 7 of the record, at page 3117, in which he says:

Warn everybody working on the Omaha-Sioux City situation that the operators' conference here and the Postmaster General's plan for rearranging air-mail lines is supposed to be confidential, and if it were treated as common property in our territory he would get sore and take it out on us. All our friends can say is that everyone wants the Omaha air-mail line, but insists that the contract be awarded to us, giving the reasons from local viewpoint. Permit no newspaper stories of any kind and have this matter handled, so far as possible, confidential regarding the general public.

It is true that when Colonel Brittin got on the stand he said that Mr. Brown did not tell him to say that; that he made up his mind himself that it was wise to tell these people that he wanted them to keep the matter confidential. Colonel Brittin had been here for weeks, however, attempting, as he said, to get action along this line, sitting in on these conferences where, as he says, the parties to the conferences were to agree on the exact lines which were to be delivered to the individual companies, and he wired back and said, "Keep this matter confidential, because if you do not, if it were treated as common property in our territory, the Postmaster General would get sore and take it out on us."

Every badge of fraud which the courts have recognized since the beginning of human history appears somewhere in this record, and this is but one of hundreds, there being entirely too many for me to cover.

That is the Northwest Airways. I think perhaps at this time I had better read from Two Hundred and Seventy-third United States Reports, page 498, because what is there stated applies not only to the Northwest Airways but to every other company.

I stated that the companies are bound by the statements made before the investigating committee. I shall now read my authority for that statement:

The finding that Doheny caused the $100,000 to be given to Fall is adequately sustained by the evidence. Early in 1924, during the investigation of these contracts and leases by the Senate committee, Doheny voluntarily appeared as witness and there gave testimony for the purpose of explaining the money transaction between him and Fall at the time the initial contract was being negotiated.

At the trial of this case, over objections of the companies, his statements before the committee were received in evidence. Petitioners insist that they were not admissible. But Doheny acted for both companies when the contracts and leases were negotiated. He controlled the voting power of one that owned all the shares of the other. He was president of the Petroleum Co. up to July 24, 1922, and then became chairman of its board. He was president of the Transport Co. until December 7, 1923, when he became chairman of its board. He was chairman of both when he testified. There is no evidence that his control over or authority to act for these companies was less in 1924, when he appeared for them before the committee, than it was in 1921 and 1922, when he negotiated and executed the contracts and leases. The companies were much concerned as to the investigation lest it might result in an effort to set aside the transaction. The hearing before the committee was an occasion where it was proper for them to be represented. Doheny had acted for them from the inception of the venture. The facts and circumstances disclosed by the record justified the lower courts in holding that, when he testified before the committee, he was acting for the companies within the scope of his authority.

His statements on that occasion are properly to be taken as theirs and are admissible in evidence against them.

As to Colonel Brittin, I will state that that case would not apply to his evidence before the committee, but it does apply to his memorandums sent to them while he was in Washington under the case which I previously read. That case does apply to the Transcontinental & Western, because Mr. D. M. Sheaffer, one of their officers, has testified that it applies; as to the United Airways, because Mr. Paul Henderson has so testified.

Let us see about Mr. Sheaffer. Bear in mind, now, that the Transcontinental & Western Air is a combination of two companies, one of them the Western Air Express, on the west coast, and I shall later show that their president has testified that they had prominent politicians who aided them in getting a contract, and who figured that they were of so much more assistance than the other companies that they should be taken into consideration in the combination.

The eastern company was the T.A.T., backed largely by the Pennsylvania Railroad. There horned into this combination the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, through the political influence of its directors and officers, as I shall later show.

Let us see what Mr. Sheaffer testified with reference to this meeting, this little harmless gathering, where they were meeting as they would at a tea party, simply to let them disagree and then go home (p. 1534):

The CHAIRMAN. That is your company?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Transcontinental Air Transport is the company I am representing, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it not distinctly understood when Mr. Brown called you gentlemen together that you were to divide up and see which company would get which line across the continent?

Mr. SHEAFFER. The operators were to consider the air-mail map, as I understand, and work it out to the best interests of the service from an economic standpoint.

Senators will find that Mr. Sheaffer is a very intelligent witness. We will find later that he knew all about the fact that combinations to prevent competitive bidding might result in the cancelation of a contract. He swore that before the committee (p. 1544).

The CHAIRMAN. Were you in a conference where the air-mail map was divided up?

Mr. SHEAFFER. I was in several conferences, Mr. Chairman, where it was considered, but my recollection of the matter is that the air-mail operators could not get together, and they left without reaching any definite conclusion.

I will show, not only by Mr. Sheaffer's memorandum, but by various other evidence, that they did get together on a number of lines, and as to the others they did not agree immediately, but they later carried out the recommendation. Note that he says he was in conferences where they had considered dividing up the air-mail map. He is an officer of the Transcontinental & Western, and that company is bound by his statement. He was their officer, who aided in putting over these nefarious contracts, and he is their officer who testified before this committee under oath that he was there when these matters were discussed (pp. 1544–1545).

The CHAIRMAN. Who presided over these meetings?

Mr. SHEAFFER. My recollection is that Mr. MacCracken presided. * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what happened was, Mr. Sheaffer, that they did come in there together, and the air-mail operators found it very difficult to agree on which line would go to which company. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. There was considerable controversy among themselves as to which company would get various lines when they were finally to be awarded. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. SHEAFFER. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And not being able to agree, they finally reached the conclusion to let Mr. Brown act as umpire in awarding out the lines throughout the country, didn't they?

Mr. SCHEAFFER. I think this is a matter of record, Mr. Chairman, as to how that was done.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, is that true?

Mr. SHEAFFER. I am not just sure how he was left as referee.

The CHAIRMAN. But is it not true that you know he was left as the umpire to decide who would get these lines?

Mr. SHEAFFER. I think he was in some instances. I am not positive about that, though.

Senators will notice that Mr. Sheaffer's memory was not very good. We later refreshed it as to some of the things by some memoranda (p. 1560).

Mr. SHEAFFER. There was a discussion in regard to extensions, Mr. Chairman, and as a result of the meetings held in the Postmaster General's reception room, there was a memorandum filed, as the result of those meetings—you asked me this morning and I could not recall the memorandum. I understand such a memorandum was filed.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he state to you that he both could and would award your company a contract if you consolidated with the Western Air?

Mr. SHEAFFER. I believe that was his intention or idea, if we could extend and consolidate, as he thought he possibly could.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he state to you along about June 1930 that the Postmaster General could and would award your company a contract if it consolidated with the Western Air?

Mr. SHEAFFER. I do not recall that specifically, that he would definitely do it. He asked the operators to get together and utilize the various set-ups for the air-mail transportation lines and passenger-carrying lines.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. In the statement that you made in this report, that we now have, that the Postmaster General could and would, do you still state that you had an idea that you would have to bid at that time?

We had the memorandum then. I call the Senate's attention to the fact that in the meantime we had gotten the memorandum in which Mr. Sheaffer had reported to the directors of his company that if they would consolidate with the Western Air Express, the Postmaster General "could and would" award them this contract for a route across the continent. As another evidence of the difficulty of securing the testimony in proper form I will state also that originally we had been supplied a different memorandum which did not contain the "could and would" statement. With reference to all the other features of the memorandum it was the same. I have the photostatic copies showing exactly how the change was made, for those who are interested enough to look at them. It is another evidence of the difficulty of securing the facts, and it indicates the methods used to conceal (p. 1562).

Mr. SHEAFFER. No, sir. As I previously stated, I believe there was in the Postmaster General's mind the idea that an extension might be made under the——

The CHAIRMAN. Not only that, but he told you that, did he not?

Mr. SHEAFFER. He inferred that he assumed it might be a possibility.

Mr. Sheaffer, after having told the directors of his company, in a formal memorandum, that the Postmaster General both could and would award them a contract, when he finally got down to testifying said he inferred that he assumed that it might be a possibility. The interesting part about that is that the possibility developed into a probability, and the probability developed into a certainty, and the contract was awarded to these companies after they combined, involving the prospect of a cost to the United States of America of more than $16,000,000 over a 10-year period if they should run that long. It was at the cost of $16,000,000 over and above what it would have cost if it had been awarded to the low bidder, and all of this grew out of the little acorn where he said that he inferred that he assumed that it might be a possibility. Then—

Senator MCCARRAN. Did he tell you that?

Mr. SHEAFFER. He inferred that if we had the proper set-up that might be worked up.

It was worked up. It was worked up, but not until that company and the Western Air Express had been compelled to permit to come into that combination a Pittsburgh company, which had never flown a mile in all of its history, but had prominent directors in it, a company in whose interest the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States had talked to Mr. Brown at Cabinet meetings and had written a letter to Washington urging that they be granted an extension. Yet it is un-American to cancel a contract where it is agreed in advance that they will get it.

Mr. President, that is not the only bad thing about that story. I shall show later that the Western Air Express did not want to combine, that they were compelled by the Post Office Department to combine, and that they stated that they combined only because there was no other way in which they could get a contract, and that the Post Office Department made them do it; not only that, but that they lost $600,000 by this coercion on the part of the Post Office Department.

Let me now read the words of the Sheaffer memorandum. Bearing in mind that he said that the Postmaster General said that he assumed that there might be a possibility that if this were done they would get a contract, I want to read what he reported to his directors on July 13, 1930. Before I read that, however, I wish to call attention to the fact that, first, there was submitted to us a memorandum like the one I hold in my hand, with no notes on it. That memorandum did not say the Postmaster General "could and would." It said he might. But later on we extracted another memorandum, and here is what it says (p. 1550):

The present Postmaster General, the Honorable Walter F. Brown, called the operators together early this spring—asking that they endeavor to work out among themselves three transcontinental air lines, namely, the present northern route, a central route via St. Louis, and the southern route by Atlanta and Dallas, those three routes to be operated by independent companies separately owned and managed and competitive in service.

This is Sheaffer, of the Transcontinental—

For the central transcontinental—New York to Los Angeles-San Francisco via Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Tulsa, Kansas City-Amarillo—it was the desire of the Post Office Department that this be operated by one company, and, as T.A.T.—

That is the Pennsylvania company—

and the Western Air Express—

That is the company which said it had the prominent politicians to assist them in getting the contracts—were the two important factors operating large mileage on this route, it was the Postmaster General's suggestion that these two lines consolidate or in some manner work out an operating arrangement to that end.

* * * * * * *

The Postmaster General having indicated that he could and would arrange so that an air-mail contract award would be properly made to the central transcontinental, providing the two companies organized for the operation of the service, T.A.T. got together with the Western Air Express on a plan to form an operating company on the following basis, namely:

I shall not now go into the formation of the operating company. The memorandum from which I just read is taken from the files of the company which got the contract. Yet we hear this editorial whining of a subsidized press, just as they whined in 1882 against Garfield, that it is un-American, that the companies have had no hearing. They had a hearing. Their officers came and testified under oath. They did not dare deny the truthfulness of that statement.

Before any bid was ever advertised, they arranged among themselves a consolidation over the protest of the Western Air Express. They knew in advance who would get the contract, just as Paul Henderson swore before the committee, verifying a statement he had made to his officers. It was the highly political line in the West, with Mr. Chandler, of the Los Angeles Times, with Mr. Fleishhacker, the banker, with the others who have been mentioned, with the Mr. Mellon, who was with the P.A.I.C., with the other Mellons, with Mr. Henry M. Robinson, who made a contribution to the National Republican Committee 2 days before the time the contract was to be let. All of them were there, and they knew in advance who would get the contract, and they got it. I shall show later just how they did get it.

So much for this evidence. This is the company, the company with the "could and would" memorandum, which has been sending out memoranda to all the Senators and all the Representatives, and to everyone else whom they could reach for the past month. Why? Because they do not dare to go into the Court of Claims and file a suit where the evidence of fraud can be placed for all the world to see and all the world to read. The court is open to them, and the burden will be on the United States Government to prove the fraud, and it will prove it if they ever dare to file a complaint in a court that has jurisdiction.

Let us see about the other part of the evidence. Let us take the Western Air part of it. I have given the part of the evidence as it affects the East. We had their memorandum and Sheaffer's evidence. He is an officer of the company.

Here is some evidence from Mr. Hanshue on the West coast. His company had been doing pretty well. It made 305 percent profit on its original investment in 1930. It was doing reasonably well; not as well as some of the companies, but it was doing so well that it did not want to sell out to these other companies.

Let us see what Mr. Hanshue said. We are talking now about what happened at the conference. I read from page 2912 of the record:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you state that you objected to bidding in this meeting?

Mr. HANSHUE. No. I stated that when Mr. Brown said he thought he might be able to help out some of the passenger operators who had no mail, by extension from lines that did have mail, that I would be willing to do whatever was reasonable along that line to avoid their having to bid.

What was that? That was terribly un-American, I presume, when we consider that he, an officer of the company, who helped them to get the contract, stated to the committee under oath that he was telling them that he was there willing not to bid. What did he tell them that for, if he did not mean it; and if he did not mean it, what was the object? It was to get contracts for certain companies, because, if they had competitive bidding, they would have to compete with their neighbors.

I read from page 2977 of the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I want to be sure about another thing. You testified here yesterday, as I recall it—if I am mistaken, I want to know it—that you knew of the MacCracken report, and agreed that it should go in, making recommendations as to those lines that had been agreed upon, and submitting to the Postmaster General the question of arbitrating the other lines?

Mr. HANSHUE. I believe that is substantially correct.

Un-American! Un-American to cancel the contract of a company which says that so far as they could agree they agreed, and then they agreed to let the Postmaster General arbitrate to see which one of the other companies should get the contract without a bid. Terribly un-American! It is un-American to those who believe that there are certain powerful interests in this country that should have special privileges and that should be paid more for their work than the work justifies them in having. It is not un-American to those who believe that the citizens of this country should be honest with their Government and that those who make contracts with the Government should come in with clean hands, honest hands, and operate with the Government the same as an honest man would operate with another honest man.

The CHAIRMAN. And you accepted that report as a part of your report, did you not? You participated and agreed to that report, did you not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. In line with the fact you were leaving it up to him to negotiate, in your letter of June 2, did you not state:

"Representatives of Western Air Express have tried diligently and in good faith to reach an accord with other air transport companies with a view to composing the differences which exist over occupancy of these transcontinental routes."

You stated that, did you not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes. That, of course, was meant to compose their differences with T.A.T.

That is the Pennsylvania company.

The CHAIRMAN. You stated, Mr. Hanshue, "with a view to composing the differences which exist from occupancy of these transcontinental routes"?

Mr. HANSHUE. That is right.

What did "occupancy" mean? It meant who should get the routes. Why was it necessary, if they were going to have competitive bids on the routes across the continent, for the Postmaster General to be in there consulting with the two companies which would seek to agree among themselves as to the occupancy of the routes? Is that a great dream and a noble vision that will build up the honor and integrity of the aviation industry of this Nation? Aviation did not grow by reason of any such collusion as that. Aviation grew because it was destined to grow. It is destined to become a great and integral part of the commerce of this Nation. It did not grow on account of any meetings with operators to divide up the air-mail map and distribute the spoils among those who were there. It grew in spite of those meetings. It did not grow on account of any subsidized editorials that ever appeared, written by those who have been whining about the cancelation of contracts conceived in iniquity and fraud. It grew because it is a part of the great progress of this Nation, and, just as the railroads supplanted the stagecoach, so is aviation marching forward.

Aviation is being used and has been used for the purposes of stock promoters and manipulators. I shall show the Senate before I finish the millions and millions and millions of dollars that have been taken by the stock promoters. I will show the Senate how the money has been taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers and diverted from the taxpayers into the pockets of and for the enrichment of a few favored individuals through the activities of their political favorites and their newspaper supporters. I am not saying this about all the press.

There is some part of the press which is independent. There is some part that cannot be led astray. There are many editors, honest in their viewpoints, who write the facts as they see them; but, just as happened in 1833, there have been newspapers that have been the beneficiaries of the corrupt arrangement; just as happened in 1832, there have been newspapers that have been beneficiaries of the corrupt arrangement. Their voices are not raised in the interest of honesty and integrity. Some of them have not raised a voice of protest even when it was brought out that the employees of the Post Office Department had accepted $10,000 from the aviation companies' representatives in Washington; they did not raise their voices in protest when it was brought out that two members of the interdepartmental committee had stocks paid for by a representative in Washington of the aviation corporations. They did not raise their voices at all in protest against such actions.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. I inquire if the Senator from Alabama has concluded?

Mr. BLACK. No; I have not concluded.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to permit me to call up the conference report which I presented this morning?

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I will say that I desire to bring up the conference report on Senate bill 2999, being the Home Owners' Loan bond bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I believe we can adopt the conference report on the sugar bill without any but the briefest discussion. If the Senator will do that, I shall appreciate the courtesy.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am anxious to secure action on the conference report on Senate bill 2999; but if the matter in which the Senator from Colorado is interested can be disposed of without undue delay, I am glad to yield to him.

Mr. COSTIGAN. My understanding is that we have a practical agreement to dispose quickly of the conference report. I believe the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] wishes to make a very short statement, and we can then proceed with the measure in which the Senator from Ohio is interested.

Mr. BULKLEY. The Home Owners' Loan bond bill has already been so long delayed that I do not like to have it further postponed; but on the assurance of the Senator from Colorado that the conference report which he has in charge is not going to take much time, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If it involves prolonged discussion, we will not proceed with it.

Mr. President, I presented this morning a conference report on the so-called "sugar bill." I ask that it be laid before the Senate at this time, and I move its adoption.

I will say, for the benefit of the Senate, that there is also pending an amendment adopted by the House on yesterday to an amendment adopted by the Senate. The amendment is set out on page 7246 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is on the desks of Senators. After the conference report shall have been approved, if it shall be approved, I should like to move a substitute for the amendment adopted by the House to Senate amendment numbered 59. It is my understanding that the proposed substitute is acceptable to Senators who have been considering it during the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Is there objection to consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. Do I understand that the House of Representatives has undertaken to adopt a conference report with an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House of Representatives has agreed to a certain Senate amendment with an amendment, the conferees having failed to agree thereon.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the conference report to which the Senator from Colorado refers includes an amendment respecting the minimum wage, does it not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It does.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to make a statement in just a few sentences respecting the action of the conferees in this particular respect.

Mr. President, this is not the ordinary minimum-wage situation. If it were, I should heartily support it, because I emphatically believe in the industrial minimum wage; but this minimum wage, applying to the labor on the farm in respect to the cultivation of sugar beets, enters fundamentally into the mathematical equation which fixes the parity price and the fair exchange value that has been promised to the farmer.

The parity price, the fair exchange value, going back to the period of 1909 to 1913, does not contemplate an increased cost of production in respect to the cost of producing an agricultural commodity, and this wage factor has not been injected into the fair-exchange price of any other farm product that has been made a basic commodity under the triple A. Manifestly the injection of any new cost factor destroys the parity and will be charged squarely to the farmer unless we take cognizance of this matter. Therefore, unless the Secretary of Agriculture, in fixing the parity price on sugar beets, in fixing the fair-exchange value, shall take into consideration the fact that increased costs of production are contemplated under the minimum-wage provision and offsets them, the beet sugar farmer will not have the parity price which has been promised him under the bill and under the triple A act.

Therefore, since it is obviously impossible to change the conference report in this respect, much as I should like to do it, I content myself with making the warning statement that the Secretary of Agriculture in fixing the parity price for sugar beets must include in his consideration any increased cost of production as a result of any new minimum-wage requirement, or the parity price which otherwise has been held out as a compensatory promise to the American farmer will not actually reach him except in a very small and inadequate degree. The minimum-wage power in this farm connection, let it be plainly understood, can be misused to wreck the entire domestic sugar industry.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before we dispose of the conference report, I wish to understand the situation. As I understand, if we adopt the conference report, then, the question about which the controversy arises will still be left open for determination; and I understand further that the Senator from Colorado proposes to offer a substitute for the amendment adopted by the House to the amendment of the Senate? Would the Senator from Colorado mind stating what that substitute is?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Idaho holds a copy of it in his hands.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have just received it at this moment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In substance, it seeks to provide that any sugar imported prior to the effective date of a processing tax on sugar beets and sugar cane; also any sugar now held or heretofore agreed in good faith to be delivered to a manufacturer for use in production of other articles than sugar; also any articles, other than sugar, processed from sugar beets and cane shall be exempt from the processing tax; also certain sugar in customs control which will have paid the present tariff duty.

The amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate would exempt only those sugars on which a duty of 2 cents a pound has been paid, representing the effective present sugar tariff. The amendment widens the field to include all sugars held for use in production of other articles than sugar.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will not delay action on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I still am in confusion as to the parliamentary situation. Here is a conference report; it is incomplete. The conferees have agreed on certain things, and we are voting on that part, are we?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the conference report is complete.

Mr. FESS. Then, in what form is the amendment of the House of Representatives? Is that a point of difference on which the House has offered an amendment?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, amendment numbered 59 was inserted in the bill by the Senate. The House has accepted that amendment with an amendment. That is the question that is in controversy.

Mr. FESS. Are we going to act upon the suggestion of House, accept the amendment of the House with an amendment, or are we going to adopt a substitute and send it back to conference?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first motion is to adopt the conference report.

Mr. FESS. I understand that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Following that, a motion will be made to adopt a substitute for the House amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and the substitute, if adopted, will be transmitted to the House for further action.

Mr. FESS. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. If the conference report shall be agreed to, the only remaining matter in dispute will be involved in the amendment to which reference has just been made?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Arkansas has accurately stated the situation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was one of the conferees in the consideration of the bill to which reference has been made. During the conference—and I do not think it improper for me to state my position—I opposed the motion that the Senate recede from the provision embraced in the amendment numbered 35 in the bill as presented for consideration, and which was under consideration by the conferees. I believed that the Senate conferees should follow the instructions of the Senate and support its action. After the conferees, aside from myself, had agreed upon all matters in dispute, and I perceived that further delay would prove injurious to the sugar industry, I reluctantly joined in the report. I did it only because the situation of the growers of sugar beets was so serious, indeed, so precarious, that it was imperative, if any legislation was to be enacted at this session, that it be enacted quickly. I feared that if delays were had by reason of the continuation of the controversial features of the bill some of the advantages expected from this measure would be lost.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] has just adverted to the fact that this is the first of the basic agricultural crops where the Department has reached out its powerful hands for the purpose of fixing the minimum wage with respect to an agricultural crop. It seemed to me that it was unfair to select the sugar-beet industry and the sugar-cane industry of the continental United States, as the first one upon which to assert this great power, which, if improperly and unwisely exercised, will seriously affect the industry. I repeat, if the Secretary of Agriculture shall capriciously or unfairly exercise the conferred authority, or shall proceed without reference to the peculiar conditions incident to the sugar-beet industry, a very grave injustice will result to this industry—an injustice so great that it will exceed in its evil consequences any benefits that may be derived.

As stated, I signed the report reluctantly, not free from apprehensions as to the benefits which may be derived from the proposed legislation.

I have heretofore stated that, in my opinion, with the large consumptive need for sugar, it was not opportune to restrict the production of sugar in continental United States. I should like to see this important industry developed. Our efforts to impose restrictions such as contained in the measure before us do not meet my approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House on the amendment of the Senate numbered 59.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the following message from the House, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 24, 1934.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59 to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, and concur therein with the following amendment:

In the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, after the letter "(c)" insert "Any sugar, imported prior to the effective date of a processing tax on sugar beets and sugar cane, with respect to which it is established (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) that there was paid at the time of importation a duty at the rate in effect on January 1, 1934, shall be exempt from taxation under this title."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I move to concur in the House amendment to the Senate's amendment no. 59 with an amendment in the nature of a substitute which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the House for the amendment of the Senate no. 59 it is proposed to insert the following:

(1) Any sugar, imported prior to the effective date of a processing tax on sugar beets and sugar cane, with respect to which it is established (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) that there was paid at the time of importation a duty at the rate in effect on January 1, 1934, and (2) any sugar held on April 25, 1934, by, or to be delivered under a bona fide contract of sale entered into prior to April 25, 1934, to, any manufacturer or converter, for use in the production of any article (except sugar) and not for ultimate consumption as sugar, and (3) any article (except sugar) processed wholly or in chief value from sugar beets, sugar cane, or any product thereof, shall be exempt from taxation under subsection (a) of this section, but sugar held in customs custody or control on April 25, 1934, shall not be exempt from taxation under subsection (a) of this section, unless the rate of duty paid upon the withdrawal thereof was the rate of duty in effect on January 1, 1934.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. Does this affect the proviso that the year shall begin on January 1?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The calendar year is not affected in the computation of quotas.

Mr. LONG. That is what I desired to know.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, to make the record clear, may I ask the Senator from Colorado if the effect of the substitute is to put floor stocks of domestic sugar on the same basis as floor stocks of imported sugar in respect to floor-stock taxes?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Colorado want to submit a motion to send this action to further conference?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, ask for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, is it expected that the body at the other end of the Capitol will accept the amendment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is hoped that it will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then if it becomes necessary to have a further conference, the House will ask for it. I suggest that the Senator from Colorado withdraw his motion.

Mr. NORRIS. The adoption of the motion now offered by the Senator from Colorado will not prevent the House accepting the amendment if it wants to do so. If the Senator's motion shall be agreed to, we will get final action on the sugar bill much more quickly than if it had not been presented. It merely means taking a step in advance.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will ask for a vote on my motion, including the appointment of conferees by the Chair, assuming, without urging, that the Chair will appoint the same conferees who have been deliberating on the sugar bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. COSTIGAN, Mr. REED, and Mr. COUZENS conferees on the part of the Senate.

BONDS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BULKLEY submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That (a) section 4 (c) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this section, or exchanged as hereinafter provided. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods of not more than 18 years from the date of their issue, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall be issued in such manner and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds of the Corporation issued under this subsection which are guaranteed as to interest and principal, and for such purposes the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves and surplus, and its loans and income, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation; except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed. No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same. The Corporation shall have power to purchase in the open market at any time and at any price not to exceed par any of the bonds issued by it. Any such bonds so purchased may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be sold or resold at any time and at any price. For a period of 6 months after the date this subsection, as amended, takes effect, the Corporation is authorized to refund any of its bonds issued prior to such date or any bonds issued after such date in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on such date, upon application of the holders thereof, by exchanging therefor bonds of an equal face amount issued by the Corporation under this subsection as amended, and bearing interest at such rate as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; but such rate shall not be less than that first fixed after this subsection, as amended, takes effect on bonds exchanged by the Corporation for home mortgages. For the purpose of such refunding the Corporation is further authorized to increase its total bond issue in an amount equal to the amount of the bonds so refunded. Nothing in this subsection, as amended, shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from issuing bonds in compliance with commitments of the Corporation on the date this subsection, as amended, takes effect.

"(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section (except with respect to refunding) shall not apply to any bonds heretofore issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under such section 4 (c), or to any bonds, hereafter issued in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on the date of enactment of this act.

"SEC. 2. Section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(l) No home mortgage or other obligation or lien shall be acquired by the Corporation under subsection (d), and no cash advance shall be made under subsection (f), unless the applicant was in involuntary default on June 13, 1933, with respect to the indebtedness on his real estate and is unable to carry or refund his present mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply in any case in which it is specifically shown to the satisfaction of the Corporation that a default after such date was due to unemployment or to economic conditions or misfortune beyond the control of the applicant, or in any case in which the home mortgage or other obligation or lien is held by an institution which is in liquidation.

"'(m) In all cases where the Corporation is authorized to advance cash to provide for necessary maintenance and to make necessary repairs it is also authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed; and in all cases where the Corporation has acquired a home mortgage or other obligation or lien it is authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds to provide for the maintenance, repair, rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed and to take an additional lien, mortgage, or conveyance to secure such additional advance or to take a new home mortgage for the whole indebtedness; but the total amount advanced shall in no case exceed the respective amounts or percentages of value of the real estate as elsewhere provided in this section. Not to exceed $200,000,000 of the proceeds derived from the sale of bonds of the Corporation shall be used in making cash advances to provide for necessary maintenance and necessary repairs and for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of real estate securing the home mortgages and other obligations and liens acquired by the Corporation under this section.'

"SEC. 3. The sixth sentence of section 4 (a) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows: 'The Corporation may at any time grant an extension of time to any home owner for the payment of any installment of principal or interest owed by him to the Corporation, if in the judgment of the Corporation, the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension.'

"SEC. 4. Subsection (g) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(g) The Corporation is further authorized to exchange bonds and to advance cash to redeem or recover homes lost by the owners by foreclosure or forced sale by a trustee under a deed of trust or under power of attorney, or by voluntary surrender to the mortgagee subsequent to January 1, 1930, subject to the limitations provided in subsection (d) of this section.'

"SEC. 5. Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(j) In addition to the authority to subscribe for preferred shares in Federal savings and loan associations, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to subscribe for any amount of full paid income shares in such associations, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for such full paid income shares upon the request of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Payment on such shares may be called from time to time by the association, subject to the approval of said Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, and such payments shall be made from the funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (g) of this section; but the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury for shares under this subsection and such subsection (g), together shall at no time exceed 75 percent of the total investment in the shares of such association by the Secretary of the Treasury and other shareholders. Each such association shall issue receipts for such payments by the Secretary of the Treasury in such form as may be approved by said Board and such receipts shall be evidence of the interest of the United States in such full paid income shares to the extent of the amount so paid. No request for the repurchase of the full paid income shares purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be made for a period of 5 years from the date of such purchase, and thereafter requests by the Secretary of the Treasury for the repurchase of such shares by such associations shall be made at the discretion of the Board; but no such association shall be requested to repurchase any such shares in any one year in an amount in excess of 10 percent of the total amount invested in such shares by the Secretary of the Treasury. Such repurchases shall be made in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Board for such associations.

"'(k) When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, any Federal savings and loan association or member of any Federal home loan bank may be employed as fiscal agent of the Government under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary and shall perform all such reasonable duties as fiscal agent of the Government as may be required of it. Any Federal savings and loan association or member of any Federal home loan bank may act as agent for any other instrumentality of the United States when designated for that purpose by such instrumentality of the United States.'

"SEC. 6. Section 5 (l) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"'(l) Any member of the Federal home loan bank may convert itself into a Federal savings and loan association under this act upon a vote of 51 percent or more of the votes cast at a legal meeting called to consider such action; but such conversion shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter the converted association shall be entitled to all the benefits of this section and shall be subject to examination and regulation to the same extent as other associations incorporated pursuant to this act.'

"SEC. 7. (a) The first sentence of the eighth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the semicolon, after the words 'Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act', a comma and the following: 'or by the deposit or pledge of bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended.'

"(b) Paragraph (b) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting after the words 'bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months', a comma and the following: 'bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, and having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months.'

"SEC. 8. The Federal Reserve banks are authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

"SEC. 9. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is authorized to buy bonds or debentures of Federal home loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon or to loan money to Federal home loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon but not to exceed $50,000,000 shall be invested or advanced under this section.

"SEC. 10. The first sentence of section 10 (b) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'unless the amount of the debt secured by such home mortgage is less than 50 percent of the value of the real estate with respect to which the home mortgage was given, as such real estate was appraised when the home mortgage was made.'

"SEC. 11. Section 6 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: 'For the purposes of this section the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to allocate and make immediately available to the Board, out of the funds appropriated pursuant to section 5 (g), the sum of $500,000. Such sum shall be in addition to the funds appropriated pursuant to this section, and shall be subject to the call of the Board and shall remain available until expended.'

"SEC. 12. Subsection (e) of section 8 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(e) No person, partnership, association, or corporation shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge or receive, or attempt to solicit, contract for, charge or receive any fee, charge, or other consideration from any person applying to the Corporation for a loan, whether bond or cash except ordinary fees authorized and required by the Corporation for services actually rendered for examination and perfection of title, appraisal, and like necessary services. Any person, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.'

"SEC. 13. Subsection (k) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended by inserting a new sentence after the second sentence of such subsection as follows: 'All payments upon principal of loans made by the Corporation shall under regulations made by the Corporation be applied to the retirement of the bonds of the Corporation.'

"SEC. 14. The eighth sentence of section 4 (a) of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the establishment of a Corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes', approved January 31, 1934, is amended to read as follows: 'No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same.'

"SEC. 15. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agree to the same.

ROBERT J. BULKLEY,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
ANNING S. PRALL,
ROBERT LUCE,
CARROLL L. BEEDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the House struck out all after the enacting clause of the bill as it passed the Senate and inserted new matter. Necessarily, therefore, the conference report is, in the form submitted, an entirely new bill. The conference report has been before the Senate for a week. I believe the only matter in controversy will be the so-called "Norris amendment" which undertook to provide that in the appointment and promotion of employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation there should be no preference given on account of partisan or political reasons. I shall not undertake to discuss the merits of the amendment, but only to state to the Senate what the problem was before the conferees.

It will be remembered that in the Senate the Norris amendment was adopted by a rather close vote, and later on the same date a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted was defeated by only a single vote. After the House had passed the bill not containing anything equivalent to the Norris amendment, a motion was made to instruct the House conferees to concur in the Norris amendment. A record vote was had on that motion in the House and was lost by a majority of almost exactly 2 to 1. Under the circumstances the House conferees felt that they should not be asked to yield in conference. On behalf of the Senate conferees I am obliged to say that we had to agree with that view.

I therefore submit, inasmuch as the amendment does not relate to the original subject matter of the bill and contains a proposed method of employment and promotion of the employees that is not generally applicable to all branches of the Government service, but would make an exception of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and inasmuch as the House has very emphatically refused to accede to the amendment, that the constructive thing to do now is for the Senate to yield on the matter and permit the proposed legislation to be enacted.

I have nothing further to say; and, unless the Senator from Nebraska desires to say something, I ask for a vote.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Brown	Coolidge	Erickson
Ashurst	Bulkley	Copeland	Fess
Austin	Bulow	Costigan	Fletcher
Bachman	Byrd	Couzens	Frazier
Bankhead	Byrnes	Cutting	George

King	Norris	Sheppard	Wheeler
La Follette	Nye	Shipstead	White
Logan	O'Mahoney	Smith
Lonergan	Overton	Steiwer
Long	Patterson	Stephens

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this conference report ought to be rejected.

As the home loan bill passed the Senate, it contained an amendment reading as follows:

> In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of agents or employees, no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of the Board who is found guilty of a violation of this provision by the President of the United States shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any agent or employee of the Corporation who is found guilty of a violation of this section by the Board shall be removed from office by said Board.

That amendment was disagreed to by the House, and the bill went into conference; and while there were some other amendments of minor importance, there was no difficulty in agreeing upon the conference report except in the case of that amendment.

The conference report has obliterated that amendment from the bill; and because I believe such action is fundamentally wrong, and that it would be to the best interests of the Government and the taxpayers of the United States that the amendment should be retained, I am opposed to the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am in entire accord with the Senator with regard to selecting these men for efficiency. I think the Senate amendment which was not agreed to by the House would have been clearer, however, and probably would have been agreed to by the House, if the Senator had made one addition to it; and I say that in all seriousness.

In my own State, for instance, 90 percent of the appointees under the National Recovery Act are not only Republicans, but what might be termed "active Republicans", because most of them have held office under Republican administrations, and have been members of Republican committees. I think possibly if the Senator had added to the amendment at the time the statement that service as a Democrat should not be prima facie evidence of inefficiency, the amendment might have been agreed to in the House. I wish to say now, however, so far as my State is concerned, that the fact that a man has affiliated with the Democratic Party, even though not in the capacity of a politician, is an indication of inefficiency. I wish to say, further, that any recommendation by myself or by the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], or by the Representative from the State of Nevada is taken as prima facie evidence that the appointment is a purely political one, and is not based upon efficiency.

I really think that the House, in construing this amendment, has taken the definition of efficiency as adopted by the various branches of the Government under the N.R.A.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator from Nevada, I realize that his interruption is not a question; it is a speech, and a very good one, from his point of view. While in the course of my remarks I will yield for interruptions, I prefer that Senators shall not interrupt me to make an argument on this subject. They can do that in their own time. I shall answer the suggestions made in the interruption of the Senator from Nevada, but I probably should have done so without any interruption, because he has made the argument which has been made over and over again in the discussion of this question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I realize that I may be entirely wrohg in my views of government. Perhaps I am mistaken. Perhaps I have been laboring under a delusion for years, when I have advocated efficiency in government; but, if I am right in my belief, this amendment is fundamental.

I think the vote we are about to take is more important than any vote this Congress has taken heretofore. I feel very deeply about this amendment. It involves my political religion. I am in earnest about the matter. I am not guilty of what is charged in some of the insinuations that have been made by Members of Congress and people outside of Congress in the discussion of this amendment which has gone on for the past 10 days. I am standing for a principle of government which I believe will purify our Government, or tend to do so, and put it on a higher plane.

This bill is an amendment of the Home Loan Act. Under its provisions the principal of the loan, as well as the interest, is guaranteed by the Federal Government. The bill undertakes to save thousands and thousands of homes which now are about to be lost under foreclosure proceedings. It uses the taxpayers' money to do it. The bill is entirely a business proposition. It involves the appointment of attorneys, agents, and employees all over the United States. There is not a city or a village or a hamlet under the flag of continental America where employees will not be appointed under the provisions of this bill.

While I have always advocated, and still do, that every Member of the Senate should vote his conscientious convictions, and while I may say some things in the course of my remarks which are harsh, I want no Senator who is listening to me to think for a moment that I am intending any criticism of any Senator for voting as he pleases, and as he believes to be right, either upon this question or upon any other.

What I am about to say I want to have those who listen to me construe as an honest attempt on my part to do my duty here without the intention of injuring the feelings of any Senator or any other individual. Nor do I want anything I say construed as a criticism of one political party more than another. I am advocating here nonpartisanship. I am advocating efficiency in government.

A few nights ago I listened to a speech made over the radio by young Mr. Couzens, mayor of Detroit. In that speech he said that what we need is more business and less politics in government.

I wish I could burn those words into the brain of every citizen of the United States. I wish every man and woman, regardless of politics, might realize that the Federal Government is confronted with a business proposition, the proposition of using taxpayers' money to save the homes of millions of our poor, and that politics never ought to enter into the appointment of anyone in connection with that activity.

Mr. President, it was said, shortly after I offered the amendment, and after it had been agreed to by the Senate, that the real intention of the amendment was to give offices to Republicans. We could draw the same conclusion, justly, perhaps, from the interruption of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. President, with all the vigor I possess, I deny that insinuation. I assert here and now that there is no such idea in my mind, there never has been, and I object to being put into the category of being a pie-counter politician. "More business and less politics in government!"

We are the trustees of the fund we are about to appropriate. We are to appropriate over $2,000,000,000—billions—to carry out the provisions of this law. We are going to employ thousands and thousands of employees, and it is beyond my conception of honest government that all these jobs should be given out with politics in mind. I am opposed to that.

As I said a while ago, I may be wrong, but I honestly believe what I am stating, and I object to any man, here or elsewhere, trying to put me in the attitude of one offering an amendment in order to get jobs for any political party. I deny that. I am emphatic about denying it. I mean it.

Mr. President, in the consideration of this amendment, through the clouds of doubt, through the mists, there is one shining light; there is one voice we can hear through it all, and it is the voice of Roosevelt, pleading for the adoption of this amendment, his voice falling on Democratic ears deaf to his appeals. We also have the appeal of the man who is at the head of this corporation, Mr. Fahey, asking for this kind of legislation.

Do not forget, my Democratic friends, that if the people of this country think as I do—and I believe the majority of them do—our vote upon this conference report is going to be regarded all over the country as a fundamental vote. We are going to be held responsible by the American people for the laws under which we permit $2,000,000,000 of their money to be expended.

We are trustees of that fund. It is a sacred fund. We are dealing with the homes of our poor. We are trying to save the homes of our poor. It seems to me that we ought to remember at all times, in connection with this amendment, which has nothing to do with politics, which has to do with nothing but business, which is nothing but an act of charity to our poor, that we ought not to have this fund used to build up the policies or the machines of any political party on earth. That is the only aim of the amendment.

It ought to be said, I think, because it is true, that the Democratic Party is in the majority in both the House and the Senate, and that party cannot escape, it ought not to escape, whatever criticism may come from the action taken here upon the conference report.

Mr. President, already some of the agents of the Board, under the law as it stands now, have been guilty of the grossest crimes of political action. Already, with the machine only half built up, before this law passes, under which it will be enlarged, politics has crept in, with its corrupting influence, and has nominated many of the appointments which have been made under the law.

The amendment aims at freeing the hands of the men now in charge of this great piece of constructive and humanitarian legislation. Bear that in mind. We are called upon here to free the hands of the men who shall administer the money which is to come out of the Treasury of the United States to save the homes of our brethren. These men are honestly attempting to do their work in a disinterested way. Many of them at great personal sacrifice to themselves are trying to translate into reality the idealism which was in the minds of the Congress and the President of the United States when the original act was passed.

Has any Senator any doubt as to what these men are struggling against? Is there any doubt as to what they are listening to, in the gossip which is going about in so many of the localities where the representatives of this Corporation are engaged in the refinancing authorized?

Recently the newspapers carried the information that in California the local State manager had acquiesced in and was probably a partial beneficiary of an organized attempt to assess employees of the Federal Home Loan Corporation.

From Illinois comes similar word. Read some of the statements made in the House of Representatives by some of the Representatives from Illinois, in which State some of the most corrupt things were divulged. Some of the men involved have been discharged, or have resigned. The Department of Justice is now engaged in investigating, with a view to bringing criminal action against some of those men.

Pennsylvania is another instance. I could use names, if I thought it were proper, to show that in that great State, in order to get an appointment, one has to have the favor of a certain politician. The Democratic chairman of every county committee in the United States is going to have in his hands the giving out of jobs, if we turn this matter over to politics.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I was hoping the Senator would not leave out the fact that the head of the national organization, Mr. Fahey, has shown 65 cases of rotten corruption in the State of Louisiana, and has condemned them, but we still have them, and I cannot find anything here that is going to get them out of the way.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Fahey is but a human being; he is an honest man, engaged in a stupendous task. He has to look after all parts of the United States, and he is only human. We can appreciate his difficulties if we put ourselves in his place and imagine a political machine bearing down on us. In many places it is in the power of the local people to make the movement a success or a failure. Mr. Fahey does not want to turn these men down. He wants to have a law so he can say, "You cannot make these appointments. These appointments shall not be measured out as political plums." It is the same with all the others.

Mr. President, we cannot conceal the fact that in many localities now political bosses have in their hands the appointment of officials ready to go into office as soon as this law is enacted. The painters who want jobs to paint houses, the men who want to sell lumber, the men who want to furnish the bathroom and toilet facilities, realize that they must cross the palm of some political leader or they will stand no show of getting the job. It is going to percolate clear through the entire system.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can say to the Senator so far as one bureau of the Government is concerned, that the Alcoholic Beverage Bureau has recently made some 15 or 20 appointments in my State, and I am advised that every single one of the appointees is a Republican. So I am wondering how the thing is going to work.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; let us consider that illustration. If Democrats who are hunting for jobs are complaining now that they do not get any jobs, that Republicans are getting them all, the Democrats ought to be for this amendment, for then perhaps they would stand some show, unless they admit, which I do not charge, that they cannot get efficiency in the Democratic Party. It seems to me that Democrats must take one horn of the dilemma or the other.

Those who complain that they are not getting patronage ought not to object to the amendment. It does not mean, Mr. President, as I look at it, because a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives or the chairman of the State committee does not get what he wants, that this proposed law is to be passed against them. Under existing law, such a thing has happened. I read in the public press, in an Associated Press dispatch which was sent all over the country, that corruption is already rife in connection with a great many of these appointments. It cannot be otherwise.

In the little towns of four or five hundred people it will be known by everybody there that somebody is a political boss, and that he controls the patronage. The school children will point him out as they go to school, "There is the man." Perhaps the father of the little children had said the night before around the fireside, "I have got to cross his palm", or he could not get a job as a carpenter, or he could not sell this material or that material.

Mr. President, it reminds me of an incident in my own life. I remember one time, a great many years ago, when I was busy in my library working on some problem, my daughter came into my study asking some favor that she thought was necessary in her childish life. Perplexed and annoyed as I was somehow, I said, "Why, Marian, why do you bother me with that? I do not know anything about it. Why do you not go to your mother?" She said, "Well, papa, I did intend to go to mother, but I found she had just dropped a custard pie upside down on the kitchen floor and she looked awful sad." [Laughter.]

The children are going to know about this matter, and they will grow up to be voters some day, and this action, which, if it shall be taken, will come as a party action, will condemn the party in the future. I do not want to condemn it for that reason. I have an interest in the administration—personal, I think. Supporting a man creates that kind of an interest. I have no other interest. I do not want to see the head of the administration drawn down by the failure of this Congress to enact such wholesome legislation as this. The world is going to see through the silly idea that "we are going to get good men but they must all be Democrats." That is an old story. Why try to fool each other here? We know better than that. We know that will not happen. To paraphrase a quotation from Lowell:

> Would you build your thrones and your altars then
> Upon the bodies and the souls of innocent men?
> Think you that temple will endure
> That feeds the boss and starves the poor?

The judgment will come some time. It will come surely. This fundamental principle of government is going to be put into force by those who are children now and who see the evil that will exist if such a provision as the one under discussion shall not be put into the law.

Mr. President, I could continue at some length to show what is happening now, and honestly draw the conclusion that it will be multiplied when the offices are multiplied. I am not a prophet, and do not desire to be one, but if my experience is worth anything those who have taken this amendment out of the bill, if they keep it out, are going to rue the day they took such action. They will find that their President, when he runs for reelection, although not to blame himself, is going to meet the charge that his party has organized a corrupt machine and sacrificed the poor of our country for the sake of building up a political machine. That time will come. It cannot be escaped any more than we can escape the rising of the sun in the morning. I do not want the President to suffer in that way. It is not right that he should, but he will, and if it is a close contest it may be decisive of the result.

Mr. President, if I were President of the United States today I would issue an order to the head of every department, to the head of every bureau, and every commission that has any Federal appointments to make, and I would say in that order "You shall henceforth pay no attention to recommendations for office made by Members of the Senate or Members of the House of Representatives." Then I would send a message to Congress and I would quote the order to them, and I would say, "This does not mean that I do not have confidence in you, but this means that I am trying to carry out my sworn duty under the Constitution of the United States which provides there shall be executive and legislative and judicial functions of Government, and that the meaning has always been construed to be that they should be separate and kept separate, and, therefore, there would be no trading between the executive department and the legislative department based on patronage and political plums and pie, especially where no policy of Government is involved, especially where we are only going to save some homes in a business way, and particularly where we are using the taxpayers' hard-earned cash to do it."

I would favor a law, and I think we ought to have such a law on our statute books, which would take away from every Representative and every Senator any influence, direct or implied, in the appointment of any Federal official. Keep the two functions of Government separate. Keep them separate now. Keep them separate forever.

We have executive departments of Government and we provide in the law that the head of this bureau or that bureau shall appoint these men. We do not mean that. We mean that the head of that bureau shall appoint men who are recommended by Senators or Representatives. If we are in earnest, if we think these political plums ought to fall into the laps of Senators and Representatives, why do we not have the courage to put it into the law? Why do we not provide in the law that all appointments shall be made by Senators and Representatives and chairmen of political committees and chairmen of county committees? Why do we not have the courage of our convictions and let that be the law?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not only the law, but the Constitution provides that the President shall make the appointments by and with the advice and consent of one of the legislative bodies, namely, the Senate. Is not that true?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the President is not going to make appointments by and with the consent of this body of one of these employees, not one out of a thousand, none of them. They are not going to be appointed by the President. The bill says—I presume it says, if I am not mistaken—Mr. Fahey shall make these appointments. Does the Senator want to make them? If he does, why not say in the law, "The appointments shall be made upon recommendations from Senators, recommendations from Representatives, recommendations made by the chairmen of the Democratic county central committee, and the Democratic State committee, and the Democratic National Committee"?

Why not say in the law itself, if that is what is meant, that Mr. Farley shall make these appointments? Why not put the head of the whole organization right in power and let him decide what shall be done? I do not say he would do poorly at the job. He would do the best he could, probably. I am simply saying that ought to be in the law if he is going to do the work. We ought to give the authority to the men who are going to try to make the appointments.

Do Senators want to hold up the hands of this man Fahey, pleading as he does and has for days for this kind of an amendment? Are Senators going to uphold him on the ground that the appointees are not going to be Democrats, anyway? If not, why not adopt the amendment? If it is harmless and not going to do any harm, why is any Senator afraid of it? Why not put it on the statute books?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the great anti-Democratic parade again passes in review preparatory to another desperate effort to deprive deserving members of the party of Jefferson of the fruits of their victory of 2 years ago.

In the last general election an overwhelming majority of the American voters solemnly declared that they desired the affairs of this Government administered by members of the Democratic Party during the 4 years succeeding the 4th day of March 1933. A vote in favor of the adoption of the pending conference report on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill will be responsive to the heart's desire of the American people as recorded in the last election. A vote against the adoption of the report, or, in other words, a vote in favor of the Norris amendment will be in defiance of the Nation-wide verdict of 1932.

The Norris amendment is based upon the erroneous premise that there are not enough intelligent and honest Democrats in the United States to administer properly and efficiently the affairs of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Against this unwarranted and offensive premise the vigorous protest of every Democratic member of the Senate ought to be registered.

The persistent and heroic efforts of the Senator from Nebraska to force his anti-Democratic amendment into the law have produced at least one glorious consummation. They have wrought the miracle of solidly uniting, for the first time in history, all on the Republican side of the Senate aisle under a single leader and under a single banner. That banner bears this legend, "United we stand forever and ever against the administration of governmental affairs by members of the Democratic Party." With a singleness of purpose and a patriotic devotion to duty never surpassed in this or any other legislative body, all of the reactionaries, Progressives, Farm-Laborites, and unclassified members on the Republican side of the Senate are now following the leadership of the peerless Progressive from Nebraska with as great enthusiasm as the rats and mice followed the Pied Piper of Hamelin town.

Let me very emphatically acquit the Senator from Nebraska of any suspicion of political hypocrisy or partisan intention in this matter. His motives are undoubtedly pure. So are the motives of a few of the others who are supporting the amendment.

For example, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and three or four others on the Republican side, undoubtedly, favor the amendment for reasons that are untainted by political ambition or partisan desire. But the majority of those who voted to incorporate the amendment in the bill before it was sent to conference were, in my opinion, actuated by a single impulse, and that was to obtain appointments from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for reactionary Republicans which rightfully belong to Democrats according to the rules of political conduct which have been highly honored and implicitly obeyed ever since the administration of John Adams.

It is argued with more heat than logic that the amendment is nonpartisan and that those who favor it are politically as pure as the icicles that hang from Diana's temple. Not by way of challenging the sincerity of the argument in favor of the amendment but solely to point out an extraordinary coincidence in nonpartisanism, let me invite your attention to the manner in which Republican Senators in the first instance voted on the proposal.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, how many Republicans did vote for it?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the able Senator from Oklahoma will find that a list of the Republican members who supported the amendment is identical with the census of the Republican side of the Senate chamber. The Republican Senators who voted for it, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, are as follows:

Austin, Barbour, Capper, Couzens, Cutting, Davis, Dickinson, Fess, Frazier, Gibson, Goldsborough, Hale, Hastings, Hatfield, Johnson, Kean, Keyes, La Follette, McNary, Metcalf, Norris, Nye, Reed, Robinson of Indiana, Schall, Steiwer, Townsend, Vandenberg.

In other words, you grinning Republicans under the leadership of the great progressive from the West voted your politics a hundred percent on this thoroughly nonpartisan measure. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. [Laughter.]

You ought not to injure the progressive cause of this country by attempting to use the progressive from Nebraska as a stalking horse for your war upon democracy and your partisan skulduggery.

Nonpartisanism (!), what unspeakable crimes are committed in thy name!

You have noted upon the rollcall that General HASTINGS, the chairman of the Republican senatorial committee; Colonel FESS, the outstanding nonpartisan ex-chairman of the Republican National Committee; Lieutenant Colonel DICKINSON, the nonpartisan keynoter for the last National Republican Convention; Captain REED, the nonpartisan progressive from Pennsylvania; Top Sergeant BARBOUR, the nonpartisan progressive from the State of New Jersey, and, indeed, all the great progressives like HALE, of Maine, and METCALF, of Rhode Island, down to the Republican lance corporals and buck privates, are heroically helping the beloved General NORRIS to fight his battle against Democratic officeholders. And who can ever sound "the depths and shoals" of the devotion of those we have just mentioned to nonpartisanism and progressivism in this country, or appreciate the sincerity of their affection for the Nebraska leader whom they are now following with a fervor exceeding that with which the Mussulmans follow Mohammed?

Is it not fair to assume that the illustrious nonpartisan from Delaware, General HASTINGS, is typical of that large group of progressives who, by actions that speak much more impressively than words, now attest the virtues of the Norris amendment and the inestimable value of the leadership of its author? If so, a miracle as amazing as any recorded in Holy Writ has occurred on the other side of the aisle since the 7th day of February 1934, for on that day, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, General HASTINGS on this floor spoke of his recently accepted leader, the able Senator from Nebraska, as follows:

I might say * * * that while I love the Senator from Nebraska much, I fear him more. If I may be permitted to explain what I mean by that, I would say that his notion about what ought to be done to make the country a better place in which to live is so different from mine that I have always been afraid that if his ideas prevailed it would be disastrous to the country. I am sure he is just as certain that if the ideas I entertain shall prevail the country will be worse off than it is now.

The point I am making is that we have different views. Heretofore my views have pretty generally prevailed, or, putting it another way, my own opinions have pretty generally agreed with what has been done. But during the whole of this time, I repeat, I have been afraid of men like the Senator from Nebraska, and I am more afraid today than I ever was before, because I remember that now there is in the White House an Executive, popular indeed, who, so far as I am able to observe, sees eye to eye with the Senator from Nebraska.

The Senator from Delaware, at the time he made that speech, did not see eye to eye with the Senator from Nebraska, but a few weeks later, when the Senator from Delaware was called upon to vote on the Norris anti-Democratic amendment, he was not only eye to eye but heart to heart and soul to soul with his great progressive leader.

Our sympathy goes out to the Senator from Nebraska because we fear that the company that has voluntarily surrounded him will ruin him for life. When the Senator from Nebraska returns to the plains of his native State and his constituents discover that the Senators from Delaware, Ohio, Iowa, and New Jersey, have become his devoted disciples, and are washing his feet, the "sons of the wild jackass" will literally bray and laugh themselves to death, and there will not be enough of the progressive cause left in Nebraska, or the Nation, over which to hold a coroner's inquest. [Laughter.]

Let me implore you Republican reactionaries not to destroy the great progressive from Nebraska by forcing yourselves upon him. Do not embarrass him by compelling him to defend himself against the charge that he has been the political leader of Senators like FESS, of Ohio; HASTINGS, of Delaware; and REED, of Pennsylvania. Let me appeal to Senators on both sides of the aisle to show their generosity this afternoon by voting down the Norris amendment and thereby saving from disaster the deserving members of both the Progressive and Democratic Parties.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from West Virginia ought to show his generosity by reading into the RECORD the names of the Republicans who voted with the Democrats on this occasion. He has read into the RECORD those who voted for nonpartisan government. Now I think it would be only fair to read the names of the Republicans who voted on the other side.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator's suggestion is accepted. The whimsical Van Troil entitled one of his famous chapters "On the Snakes in Iceland." That chapter simply says "Snakes in Iceland—there are none."

Let me inform my friend from Oklahoma that the number of the Republican Senators, who voted with the Democrats on the Norris amendment, is exactly equal to the number of the snakes in Iceland. [Laughter.] They all voted nonpartisan; and consequently voted the straight Republican ticket.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator recall, during the 12 years of Republican control of the Government, any such amendment as this being offered from the other side on the part of anybody?

Mr. NEELY. Never; and since the distinguished Senator from Nebraska recently said that he had written to various Departments during the 12 Republican years that preceded this administration, recommending that their appointments be nonpartisan, I have searched the record and had it searched for the full period that the Senator has served in this body, in a vain effort to find where he, under a Republican administration, ever attempted as vigorously as he is attempting now to have a great governmental department made nonpartisan.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I do not say that the Senator has not made such an attempt, but I do say that I have been unable to find proof of the attempt in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator did not look very closely, for he will find that it is on the statute books now. If the Senator will take the bill which I introduced over and over again, and which is now the law, where there was nothing involved but a business matter—the Muscle Shoals legislation—he will find that it always had in it a provision on this subject, and he will find in the statutes the very words I have offered here as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. I join in the expressions of utmost confidence in the sincerity of the Senator from Nebraska, as I have done over and over again. It is true that in the law which is now on the statute books with reference to the Tennessee Valley Authority the language which is now in dispute in this bill is included; but in the bill which the Senator succeeded in passing through both Houses during the Hoover administration, which Mr. Hoover vetoed, there is no such language at all, because I have it here, and it is not in the bill. On the contrary, the bill merely authorizes the board to be set up for the control of Muscle Shoals to make all appointments. Nothing whatever is said about any partisan considerations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. In one of those bills I introduced—I do not remember which one now, because they followed one another every year for 12 years—I went a great deal farther than I went in using the language I have offered as an amendment to this particular bill, and which is now incorporated in the law. I proposed to set up a machine by which every recommendation made to that authority should be kept in the files, and a notation should be made upon the record of every recommendation that was made orally, and all letters asking for appointments should be given to the public. I put in that bill quite a number of things which I had to put in, I thought, in order to avoid a Presidential veto, but which it was not necessary to put in when Mr. Roosevelt became President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to permit me to read the provisions of the Norris joint resolution which was passed in the Seventy-second Congress, and vetoed by President Hoover, with reference to appointments in the Tennessee Valley under the Muscle Shoals Board, as it was then called?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is as follows:

The general manager—

Prior to that language, the bill authorized the appointment of a general manager.

The general manager shall appoint, with the advice and consent of the board, two assistant managers, who shall be responsible to him, and through him, to the board. One of the assistant managers shall be a man possessed of knowledge, training, and experience to render him competent and expert in the production of fixed nitrogen. The other assistant manager shall be a man trained and experienced in the field of production and distribution of hydroelectric power. The general manager may at any time, for cause, remove any assistant manager, and appoint his successor as above provided. He shall immediately thereafter make a report of such action to the board, giving in detail the reason therefor. He shall employ, with the approval of the board, all other agents, clerks, attorneys, employees, and laborers.

That is all there is about it.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, regardless of what has been in the legislation in the past——

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator in his remarks stated, and truly, that this administration had been elected by an overwhelming vote at the last election. I have just received news from the plurality vote yesterday in the city of St. Paul which indicates that at least St. Paul is returning to sanity. There were 93,000 votes cast, and the Republican candidate for mayor won by 249.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, then there is still one benighted community in the United States in which the people desire to return to Hooverism. [Laughter.] Happily no such desire has been manifested in West Virginia. A recent preliminary poll by the Literary Digest shows that approximately 75 percent of the people of the United States are thoroughly satisfied with the Roosevelt administration. There is no doubt in my mind that they intend to retain Mr. Roosevelt in the White House for another term. And no one is more enthusiastically for him than I am. I appeal to the Democratic Senators who want Mr. Roosevelt reelected to help deliver him from his friends who are trying to compel him to appoint still more Republican partisans, who are opposed to this administration, to administer the affairs of one of the most important instrumentalities of the Government.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The vote will be on the conference report, and the Senator is going to make it very difficult for a Senator like me to vote the way I had intended to vote.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Ohio, I assume, will as usual vote a straight Republican ticket.

Mr. President, the party system of government operated successfully under Thomas Jefferson. It operated successfully under Grover Cleveland, Woodrow Wilson, and old Andrew Jackson, who would have caned from the White House anyone who would have attempted to control his appointments to office by the Norris amendment.

The party system operated successfully under Mr. McKinley, a Republican President. It operated to the entire satisfaction of our Republican friends under a former Roosevelt.

And during the last 12 years of Republican administration, regardless of the wishes or principles of the Senator from Nebraska, it was as impossible for a Democrat to obtain a place on the Government's pay roll in any department in Washington as it is for a leopard to change its spots, for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, or for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven.

Democratic Senators, let us now adopt this conference report and thereby protect our party and those who deserve to administer the important affairs of the Government during the remainder of the Roosevelt administration from irreparable disaster.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I regret much more than I can say that in the debate on the conference report and upon the amendment when it was originally offered my friend the Senator from West Virginia should take the bitter attitude he has taken. He speaks of the wonderful majority which went, as he said, to the Democratic Party. He speaks of those who are in favor of this amendment as being moved by partisanship, and calls the names of men who are known to be partisans, and who, he says, are influenced in their voting by partisan considerations.

Let me tell the Senator that, if that is all true, it will not save his bacon. Nor will it save any other Democrat. You cannot get anywhere with the people of the United States by yelling yourselves hoarse at the bad things one party has done, and ride into office on the strength of your plea and your promise that you are going to do better, and then say, "We will do just the same as the men did whom we were condemning", and say to the people, "We are no worse than the other fellows." That will not do.

There were millions of people who supported President Roosevelt who were Republicans, and are now Republicans, because they were disgusted with just that kind of maneuver on the part of the Republican Party; and now you are going to say that the Democratic Party will do the same thing, and you make a partisan appeal to Democrats to stand by the party.

Who is the party? The Senator from West Virginia did not say anything about Roosevelt, in the White House. I conceded to begin with, and I concede yet, that if I sat on the other side, and believed this amendment to be wrong, I would vote against it, no matter where the President stood. But when you appeal for political support and try to drive Democrats into the harness on the theory that they are supporting Democratic principles, let me ask you, where is your leader? Who is supporting Roosevelt now? Who is the leader of the Democratic Party who has cried out in vain for Democratic support for this very amendment?

Will you get anywhere with that kind of an argument? Do you have any regard for the millions of men who voted for Roosevelt, who want to see him succeed, who admit always that every man, here and everywhere else, should have his own opinion and do as he pleases?

Criticize if you will, but constructively. Are you going to respect them? Are they all silly, as the Senator from West Virginia says these people are? Were they moved by a spirit of partisanship? Were they not moved by the same spirit which he now condemns as nonpartisan?

If the question were the selection of a Secretary of the Treasury or a Secretary of State, I would not be saying what I am saying. I admit that in such a case, whether the man is a Democrat or not, the man chosen should be someone who believes in the policy of government he is to carry out. But here is something that has no politics in it unless you put it in. It should have none in it.

As the mayor of Detroit said, we need more business and less politics in government. Here is a proposition which is 100 percent business, and it is bound to be put in a partisan light.

Senators may laugh now, and I know that it is nice to have someone get up and make a spread-eagle speech about the great party, and its wonderful influence, but the people of the United States do not care a damn about it. They are not interested in it. They do not care. They want honest and efficient government. They do not care whether it is Republican or Democratic or something else. Senators are not getting much of a following among the people of the country. They may think they are. The speech made by the Senator from West Virginia will bring plaudits to him. Some people will pat him on the back and tell how he lined up the Democrats to vote against Roosevelt. That is what it is. He will line them up to vote down one of Roosevelt's cherished propositions because, forsooth, somebody he did not like voted for it.

That is no argument. That is not the argument of an eighth-grade school child. Everybody knows better than that. It is a flamboyant plea intended to line men up on a false issue. It will not work with the common people.

It makes me think some of the man who went to a hotel in one of our cities and said to the proprietor, "I have some frogs to sell. I understand you need a lot." The hotel man said, "Yes, I do." He said, "I want a contract with you to sell you 1,000 frogs." He made a deal with the hotel man. He was to bring the frogs in the next day. The next day he came in with two little half-starved frogs and the hotel man said, "Why I contracted with you for 1,000 frogs." The man said, "Yes, I know, but I drained my pond. These are all there were in it. I thought from the noise they made that there were at least a thousand of them there."

The Senator from West Virginia, when folks say "Amen" to his speech, which I think was unjustifiable and unbecoming in him, will find, when the pond is drained, that there are only two frogs in it.

I said that I am in earnest about this matter. If I am wrong, then all my principles of government are wrong. If I am wrong, then I have sinned against my people when I supported Roosevelt for President. If I am wrong, I will be condemned for that attitude; and when I see the attitude of Democrats who went into office on his coat tails, I almost feel that I am already condemned.

I do not believe we ought to take the taxpayers' money and use it to pay bosses and to organize political machines for the sake of getting offices. The party will not get them. The people will see to it that it will not get them. The people will know better than that. Senators cannot even have the approval of their leaders on such action. When the Senator from West Virginia mentioned leaders over on this side of the aisle, he should at least have been fair and said, "I am against my leader, too. I am not following Roosevelt. I am going into my State against him on this proposition. He is wrong." Maybe he is wrong and the Senator is right; but, if that is true, then honest, progressive government has sunk beneath the waves; it is gone. If we are going to organize this Government on the old theory that to the victors belong the spoils, we might just as well throw up the sponge.

Why do we have a Civil Service Commission? Why do we provide by law for the examination of men and women who are applying for office outside of the particular offices to which it is conceded the President ought to appoint? Why? Everyone knows that if we did not have a safeguard of that kind this country could not live. It could not sustain itself. Senators who privately are complaining every day of the thousands of men who are applying for jobs, who are applying for offices that cannot be filled, ought to be statesmen instead of job hunters, ought to help the President of the United States to place a business, like the one involved here, above and beyond the grab-bag of partisan politics. Senators ought to rise to the emergency. They are able, and wise enough to do it. They might just as well be statesmen making laws for the country as be grabbing at a political pie counter for political jobs.

Do not Senators want the Government to be efficient? Do they not want men appointed on the basis of efficiency? Do they not want their party above complaint? Do they not want it to be so that in a year from now or 2 years from now, when Roosevelt comes to run again, and perhaps they come to run again, they can point to the statute and say, "I helped to put that law there. I helped make this great machine efficient. I helped to put it on an honest basis. I helped to take it out of partisan politics."

Senators might better be doing that than spending their time here ridiculing and belittling the men who, like me, may be fools, and who have been fools all our lives, but at least I thought I was doing the right thing. By this action, presumably about to be taken, Democratic Senators will make it impossible for some men to support their standard bearer in the next fight that comes.

Mark my words, these chickens are going to come home to roost.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who has been called away on official business, and who, if present, would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACK. I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. If the Senator from Florida were present he would vote "yea", and, if permitted to vote, I should vote "nay".

Mr. FESS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Therefore, I refrain from voting.

Mr. WAGNER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired on this vote with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. Has that Senator voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WAGNER. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BULKLEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]; and

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON].

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] are necessarily absent.

Mr. BARKLEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], which I transfer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

I regret to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—40

Adams	Byrnes	George	Overton
Ashurst	Caraway	Harrison	Reynolds
Bachman	Clark	Hatch	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Connally	Hayden	Russell

So the report was agreed to.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD AND THE POWER TRUST

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. For several days I have sought an opportunity to have read from the clerk's desk a letter received by me from the president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad commenting on some remarks made by the Senator from Nebraska a few days ago with reference to an alleged connection between that railroad company and some gas company. I ask that the letter may now be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the letter, as follows:

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO.,
Louisville, Ky., April 9, 1934.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: My attention has been directed to certain remarks made by Senator NORRIS (appearing at p. 5853 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Monday, Apr. 2, 1934) in a speech attacking the so-called "Power Trust", wherein he made certain derogatory references to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.

In discussing the efforts of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. of New York to purchase the city-owned electric-light plants of two small Tennessee towns, Paris and McKenzie, he read from a letter of that company's Paris representative, a Mr. Fitch, to a Mr. Magee, his superior officer in New York, wherein Mr. Fitch told Mr. Magee that in the course of his negotiations at Paris he had been assisted by certain information he had received from the superintendent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. located at Memphis. He described the latter as "a former citizen of Paris", stated that he had secured for him a contract for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. shops at that place, and was very friendly.

Based solely upon this chance circumstance of a subordinate official of the railroad company making certain statements to a man who evidently was his friend, about a matter in no way connected with his official duties, he assumed there was a reprehensible conspiracy between the two companies, and proceeded to denounce it in the following language:

"That shows the connection between great corporations. The superintendent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. gave this information, which was passed on to the vice president of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., of New York City.

"It does seem to me, Mr. President, that this ought to bring the blush of shame to an American's face. Here was a great railroad company, which ought to be outside this contest, ought to have nothing to do with it, ought to have no interest in it. We find from the evidence, however, that there was some coordination between the power trust and the railroad company."

Further along, referring to the same matter, he said:

"What kind of a Government is it in which railroads and Power Trust officials can combine in this way to help each other out of difficulties, to the detriment of the common people of the United States? What does it mean when these high officials undertake to charge the toilers of America an exorbitant price for gas and electricity because it is necessary to use the money in making the various combinations and buying out and driving Government and State officials into doing their bidding? Is it not a sad commentary that there should be a general tendency on the part of these great institutions to help each other out of dishonorable, disreputable, and dishonest difficulties?"

Senator NORRIS' attempt in the above-quoted statements to make it appear that there was or is a community of interest between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. and the Associated Gas & Electric Co., that there was some coordination between the Power Trust and the railroad company, and that the latter was trying to help the utility company out of dishonorable, disreputable, and dishonest difficulties, merely because the railroad superintendent had given certain information to a like subordinate official of the utility company who evidently was his friend, is so unwarranted and the conclusion he announced is so unreasonable that it would hardly seem necessary to enter a denial. However, in order that there may be no doubt as to what are the facts, so far as the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. is concerned, I desire to state that the conclusion which he reached and announced is utterly without foundation in fact. I am now and was then the chief executive officer of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., and not only was this superintendent not authorized to represent the railroad company in the matters herein under discussion, but neither I nor any other officer of the railroad company, so far as I can learn, ever knew or even heard of the transactions referred to in his statement, and whatever the superintendent in question may have said to his friend was not the action of nor in anywise related to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. Neither I nor any other executive officer of this company has ever been aproached, directly or indirectly, by the Associated Gas & Electric Co. of New York, or any other corporation which Senator NORRIS is pleased to group under the term of "Power Trust", to aid it or any of them in any of their business undertakings or alleged political activities.

I am unable to see how he could feel justified, in the light of the facts he himself states, in reflecting as he has upon the Louisvill & Nashville Railroad Co. and dragging its name into a discussion of these matters, in the absence of any evidence that it had any part in them or that the executive officers of the company had any knowledge concerning them. In view of the fact, however, that he has seen fit to do this I feel that I am justified in requesting that you read this letter to the Senate in order that this statement of mine, in which I have sought to correct Senator NORRIS' conclusions, may reach the same hearers.

Thanking you in advance for this courtesy, I am

Yours very truly,

W. R. COLE, President.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to add a postscript to that letter.

The letter complains of the remarks I made in the Senate at a time when I was reading into the RECORD quite a number of contributions and letters and memoranda which were developed in the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission. I have not examined the quotation, but I assume that the gentleman who wrote the letter quoted me correctly.

The writer of this letter is the president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. After I had read some of the disclosures about what happened at Paris, Tenn., when they were having a municipal election about electric-light plants, I bemoaned the fact that a railroad company like the Louisville & Nashville should be mixed up in such a local fight, and said there was a tendency for people of that kind to get together when it came to their defense.

Now let me read the letter which is the basis of this complaint. It will be remembered that at Paris, Tenn., the people owned their electric-light distributing, and perhaps generating, plant. I do not remember now as to that. Anyway, they sold it to the Associated Gas & Electric Co., or to a subsidiary of that company and at the meeting of the council to vote on the matter there was a great contest. The district judge afterward, in his decision setting aside this action, told of the corruption that occurred. The city attorney had been bribed. There was no direct evidence of bribery of members of the council, but the city attorney had been bribed. I think this disclosure came after the election.

That was the cause of my remarks. In the first place, I expressed regret that the L. & N. officials were guilty of mixing in such a fight. In the next place, the evidence taken in court showed that their master mechanic was paid $800 in that election. I am going to read now, as I read then, a letter from one of the power officials to the parent association in New York:

Mr. S. J. MAGEE,
New York—

He was the vice president or manager, or some other official, of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., the parent company, in New York City—

There is beginning to crystallize at Paris a movement to compromise our difficulties with the city. Under the lease contract, the ultimate price which the city would have received at the time of the deeding of the property to us and the payment of the $45,000 [was] the sum of $704,500.

In the political mix-up, Jim Porter, the present owner of the opposition ice plant, is a dominant factor in the new council. We have set up a very severe ice competition with his property, and he is beginning to squeal.

When the subsidiary of the Power Trust could not get this man's vote in any other way, they bought out the man who was his competitor, and who, I suppose, was doing a perfectly legitimate ice business, and they went into the ice business. That is, the great Electric Light Trust in New York, through its subsidiary in Paris, Tenn., went into the ice business in that town and put down the price of ice so low that they could make Jim Porter squeal, as this letter says. They drove him out of business.

Continuing the letter:

In the political mix-up, Jim Porter, the present owner of the opposition ice plant, is a dominant factor in the new council. We have set up a very severe ice competition with his property and he is beginning to squeal. He is now anxious that the council effect a compromise of the matter and suggests that the city ought to receive about $600,000 for the property. This information comes—

Now listen—

This information comes from the superintendent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.—

The same railroad company whose president now writes the letter which the Senator from Kentucky has had read at the desk.

I will read that clause again.

This information—

What information? The information that "Jim Porter * * * is beginning to squeal", and he is ready to compromise. He thinks now that the city ought to get $600,000 instead of something over $400,000. Then the writer of the letter says:

This information comes from the superintendent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., Memphis, a former citizen of Paris, and who was helpful to us—in securing the original contract. He also secured for us the power contract with the shops at Paris, and is otherwise very friendly.

That is, to the Power Trust—

That refers to the superintendent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., the president of which is now complaining that I commented in the Senate that I was ashamed of a railroad company that would permit its officials to mix in that kind of a deal and try to help the Power Trust secure a contract which the courts set aside, and said was so unjust as to be unconscionable.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I did not have the letter read for the purpose of getting into any controversy with reference to the contents of the letter which the Senator from Nebraska read on the former occasion. Neither am I in a position to deny, and I do not undertake to deny, the statements in the letter which the Senator has read.

I do desire to say, however, that I know Mr. Cole. He was formerly a resident of Nashville, and he was president of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway when he was promoted to the presidency of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. I know him, as the people of Kentucky know him, as an honorable man, a man of integrity, and, I think, a man who is entitled to credit when he makes a statement.

The point is, admitting that the superintendent at Memphis who formerly lived at Paris did all these things, Mr. Cole insists that he did them without his knowledge or consent and without the consent of the company.

Mr. NORRIS. I never said that these things were done by the superintendent with Mr. Cole's knowledge or consent.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know that; but the Senator's condemnation was against the officials of the road.

Mr. NORRIS. It was against the railroad corporation itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the superintendent of a railroad division in Memphis or anywhere else, in his individual capacity as a citizen, may do a lot of things that are wrong; but I say that the railroad company as a whole ought not to be condemned unless the things complained of are done with the company's knowledge and authority and by their direction.

Mr. NORRIS. How is their consent to be obtained?

Mr. BARKLEY. I take it that Mr. Cole's letter stated that he knew nothing about the matter criticized by the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; he said he did not know anything about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. I assume that that is true. I take it to be true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to say that I have known Mr. Cole for many, many years, and he is a very highly honorable man, and I do not believe he would make any statement unless it was correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator. I should like to invite the rest of the Senators to make their contributions to this discussion. Is there anybody else here who wishes to testify to the character of Mr. Cole?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I would call attention to Mr. Cole's predecessor as the head of the L. & N. Railroad. The Senator will remember the part he took in the Goebel murder, and how Governor Taylor remained over in Indiana, and could not be extradited. The matter is pretty well written into the history of the L. & N.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is an incident which occurred 30 years ago.

Mr. LONG. Yes; he has had a chance to get religion since then.

Mr. BARKLEY. The president of the L. & N. Railroad took quite a prominent part in politics in Kentucky, and by reason of the prominent part he took the L. & N. Railroad became an issue in a campaign for the Governorship, and the intimation of the Senator from Louisiana is, of course, true, as those of us know who remember the unfortunate Goebel incident in Kentucky. That is one thing. But Mr. Cole's activity, or his alleged connivance, or direction, as president of the L. & N., in an election in Paris, Tenn., is an entirely different thing, and I cannot to save my life understand the connection between the L. & N. politics in 1899 and Mr. Cole's letter of the 9th day of April which has been brought forward by the Senator's speech.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not know Mr. Cole and I do not make any imputation against him at all, but since the Senator from Nebraska is basing his statement on the L. & N. Railroad participation in the instant matter, I just wanted the Senator to know that that is not different from what happened 30 years ago, and I imagine this superintendent might have acted at the instigation of someone else.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about that, but I can say, as an active participant in politics in Kentucky in recent years, that I have no knowledge that that railroad has engaged in politics in the last quarter of a century in any way. I doubt whether it has since that unfortunate tragedy in 1899.

Mr. NORRIS. That ought to have been lesson enough to keep them out.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think so.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt that, if we should go to wherever this man lives, we would find he is a member of the church, and I am surprised that somebody here has not brought that out.

No one charged that he told a lie. No one contended that he had any personal knowledge of this matter. No one said that he took any part in the election at Paris; but it was said that the officials of the L. & N. Railroad were in mighty small business when they engaged in that kind of a controversy, especially to help out the Power Trust in Wall Street, New York.

I commented on the peculiar fact that when one of these great corporations is attacked, one of the others always comes to its relief. They always help each other out. But I am not through with the evidence yet. The Senator from Kentucky interrupted me; he was so anxious to defend this man. I had not finished reading the letter, and I have testimony to read besides that which has a direct bearing on officials.

I do not remember now where I was in the letter, but I think I read that the letter said that "he was instrumental in getting us the power contract with the shops at Paris."

He must have been quite an influential official. He was influential enough to get the electric power for this corporation. He was very friendly in other ways; the writer says he "was helpful to us in securing the original contracts."

It is peculiar, too, that when the information about this man they were holding up by going into the ice business trying to control his vote on the council came as to how he felt, how he was beginning to be hurt by this unfair competition, that information came to the Power Trust from the official of the L. & N. Railroad, according to this letter which I have already read. So when he says in his letter that he knew nothing about it, he is denying something which nobody asserted. He does not have to know anything about it.

Does he say in that letter that he discharged this official for doing that? Does he say that he put out of business the other man, about whom I shall read in just a moment? No. For all his letter says, they still hold their jobs, and when the president of the railroad finds that his general superintendent is engaged with the Power Trust in putting that little plant out of business, that he is engaged with them in a crime by which they went into the ice business even, to get the vote of a man on a council, when he tells him, too, that he has been friendly in other ways, gave him his power contract, does he say he found fault with that man? Has he ever written him a letter and said he must stop that kind of dirty business? No. He does not even claim any such thing. If he is as pure and holy as he thinks he is, and as pure and holy as this railroad company is, he would have written a letter to this man and would have said, "You are discharged. You cannot take this corporation into that kind of a disgraceful business. You cannot help the Power Trust put an ice plant here to compete with a man in order to bribe him for his vote." He does not do anything of the kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In fairness, I will say that all the matters about which the Senator has been talking are matters about which I know nothing, but I take it from the letter of Mr. Cole that he never knew anything about this superintendent's activity until he saw the Senator's speech. What he has done since then I do not know, but he did write me this letter as soon as he read the Senator's speech in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that if he is trying to keep his organization above reproach, before this time that man has been discharged, and another fellow has been discharged about whom I am going to read something in a moment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no knowledge on that subject.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to bet that he has not been fired. I should just like to have it understood that I make the statement, although I may be proven incorrect, that he has not been fired.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course he has not been fired.

Probably he has been complimented for his very efficient work, without referring to this particular thing.

I have not yet finished reading the letter, on account of these interruptions. Let me read a little further from this same letter, written to the Power Trust in New York, the gas company, from their agent out at Paris, Tenn. He said:

> The real seat of the trouble at Paris lies in the lease contract, which was so complicated the ordinary citizen could not understand it; and there was a growing belief that in some way not explicable the city would finally get a sum considerably less than $400,000 for its property.
> I feel we will finally make some settlement with the city that will even be better than the present contract.

I ought to say that when this case was brought before the Federal judge, he said in his decision that this contract was purposely made, evidently, so that nobody could understand it. It purported to give $400,000. It did not do anything of the kind, as one would see if he went into the contract. The judge set it aside for fraud and bribery, and one of the officials of this railroad company was helping in carrying out that fight. He must have been in the confidence of the Power Trust, or he would not have conveyed the information that this member of the council was beginning to squeal on account of that ice competition.

I could read a great deal more than I have read, but it is very late. I am sorry the matter did not come up earlier in the day, because there are some other things I wanted to say that I will not have time now to say.

The trial was had before a Federal judge. I will now read some of the testimony. The question was asked:

> How much did he say Mr. Fryer got?
> Fryer was the attorney who was bribed, as the judge found.
> He said his information from Mr. Rankin was $2,000. He told me he put that much in Rankin's hand. I think Rankin was the one.
> Q. How much did he say Mr. Hogan received?

This was the municipal election they were talking about. One of these power officials contributed some money to a church down there on condition that the sale went through, and I suppose paid the contribution because the sale did go through by bribery. This testimony says:

> How much did he say Mr. Hogan received?
> A. He told me he put between $700 and $800 in the hands of another party, who paid it to Mr. Hogan.

Just remember that name now.

> Q. Mr. Hogan, I believe, is the foreman in the L. & W. shops at Paris?—A. Master mechanic.

I will not read any further from that man's testimony.

He is another official of the L. & N. Railway at Paris, and in his testimony, quoted by the judge himself in his decision, we find this evidence: First, the letter, which I read, to the general superintendent who knows about the $800 that went into the hands of Hogan, the master mechanic. Is not that pretty near enough to carry an election in a little city like Paris? That was not all. Those contributions are traced directly to the officials of the L. & N. Railway.

The Senator from Kentucky says that probably this president never knew about that before. This evidence was taken several years ago. It has been public property for years. This election in Paris was an old event. The State legislature was persuaded to enact, without knowing its true effect, I suppose, a statute that made valid this sale that the court had held was corrupt and obtained by bribery.

Now, how can the L. & N. Co. get out of that situation with clean hands? There is only one way. The president ought to have said, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, "When I first learned of this affair I discharged this official. I also discharged the master mechanic for taking $800 in that contest. I do not want such men working for my railroad company."

But instead of that he said, "I do not know anything about it. The railroad company did not know anything about it. We are as pure as the angels."

That is the way with a good many of these institutions. One member of the corporation does the dirty work and another one does not know anything about it, but goes to church instead and is himself elected superintendent of the Sunday school.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator understands why it is that all these various activities have to be played by these corporations.

Mr. NORRIS. They play them anyway.

Mr. LONG. They cannot omit one step. They have to have their representative in the Sunday school and in the churches and in the red-light district and in the gambling institutions. They must be represented in every place.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST—ARTICLE BY CHARLES BROOKS SMITH

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial by Charles Brooks Smith appearing in the Wheeling (W.Va.) Intelligencer of April 1934, on the subject of Senator HENRY F. ASHURST, of Arizona.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wheeling (W.Va.) Intelligencer, April 1934]

The press gallery viewpoint is that veteran Senator HENRY F. ASHURST (D.), of Arizona, is colorful copy. There are two kinds of colorful copy. ASHURST's kind is good taste.

Poor Sadie Thompson's affectionate salutation to her sailor rescuer and lover (and didn't it rain!) fits ASHURST—"tall and handsome." He's consummate courtesy in debate; a graceful gesticulator. He is master of a gentle sarcasm, which never scratches skin, and the exponent of a decent humor which sparkles like a flawless white diamond.

Which goes to prove that you can make a gentleman and a statesman out of an old-time cowboy; rather, he can make himself that if he wants to give up cows for college, has the will and the stuff in him to rise above the thundering herd.

The refreshing thing in him is that he does and says things differently. He can be—and inherently is—original; he's no stereotype, no copycat—which is enough in itself to set him apart as "not like them." And he can be like this—be himself—within the scope of propriety.

This strikes us as rare and unusual. We don't know why—we can't make ourself clear about it—but somehow it does.

An incident of the Senate proceedings yesterday, typical of the subject of our sketch, gives a key to an understanding of him. It illuminates our struggling picturization of the Arizonian like a klieg light. We quote him:

"Mr. President, I fondly believed, for some years, that I was sterilized and vaccinated against the vicious habit of reading letters into the RECORD, but it now appears that the habit has recurred.

"My most constant and most savage critic is a leading Democratic daily newspaper in Arizona, to wit, the Arizona Daily Star. I have received a letter from the editor of that journal; and his arguments in opposing my views on certain public questions are so well stated that I telegraphed to him securing his permission to have the letter read into the RECORD.

"I now read my telegram to the editor:

APRIL 15, 1934.

Mr. W. R. MATHEWS,
Editor and Publisher the Arizona Daily Star,
Tucson, Ariz.:

Your letter of April 10 received. You are one of Arizona's leading journalists, and your letter ably argues for your views on seven subjects of legislation now before Congress. Inasmuch as I am at variance with you and do not agree with your conclusions therein expressed, except that I do concur with your opinion that the President should be granted the power to negotiate the reciprocal treaties, I hereby request permission to print your letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Please do not be thin-skinned but imitate me as I am pachydermatous. If you grant me such permission, I shall, of course, print your letter without any deletion. Please write me. Kind regards.

ASHURST.

Request granted, the editor's letter was sent up to the desk, read to the Senate by the Chief Clerk. And a strong constructive criticism of Senator ASHURST's position on seven legislative propositions it was. The Senator delivered no speech in reply.

And wasn't that a decent, fair, just, and honorable thing to do? If it was ever done before during our two decades' observation here, we missed it.

Nothing more need be said to explain ASHURST to you. He explains himself fully and clearly, by doing unexpected, unconventional but admirable deeds like this one.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR KEAN TO YOUNG REPUBLICANS OF NEW JERSEY

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the speech of my distinguished senior colleague from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], delivered at the annual convention of the Young Republicans of New Jersey at Asbury Park, on Friday, April 20, 1934, be spread in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR KEAN. I am very happy to be here tonight to speak to the Young Republicans of New Jersey.

I shall be brief, not merely out of consideration to others on the program, but more especially because the day of long-winded oratory is past, and no one is more capable of discounting flowery generalities or puncturing the empty rhetoric of a spellbinder than the young man and young woman of today.

Youth is a marvelous thing. We need your fresh enthusiasm, your frankness, your sincerity, and your courage to help us restore the Republican Party to its rightful place in the State and in the Nation. Your convention, assembled here today, may well prove to be the starting point for a new era in the Republican Party in New Jersey.

Speaking frankly, we need a new spirit in our party and I, for one, believe you are ready to supply it.

The Republican Party believes in that sturdy old document, the Constitution. If that seems a simple, dogmatic statement of faith, let me point out that the Constitution guaranteed to the individual citizen certain fundamental rights, and the most precious of these was freedom.

The Republican Party still believes in freedom.

Under the Constitution the individual was free to exercise his own initiative in the pursuit of a livelihood and the building of a competence. The Constitution did not endow him with character and courage—no document could do that—but if he possessed those qualities, he was free to utilize them in working out a happy destiny for himself and his family.

The Constitution has had to stand some pretty stiff battering during its time. No professor in Washington worthy of his salt could ever admit that he could not have written it better. No reformer who ever saw a break in the asphalt but had to tell us that the whole system was wrong. But somehow the Constitution, which embodies the wisdom of the centuries that went before us, has a fashion of resisting the professors and the reformers, and it remains with us when their names are forgotten.

This simple and dignified philosophy of living has been jeopardized since the war by revolutionary theories of government in Russia, and since March 4, 1933, by the Democratic administration in Washington.

Individual freedom has long since been discarded in Russia. No one can own real property; no one can own a home; no one can rise by his own efforts, by the exercise of skill and resourcefulness, above a common level. The spark, the ferment, of individual initiative is lost in dull homage to an idol called the "state."

In our own country during the last year, we have been drifting dangerously in the same direction. The administration apparently seeks to scrap the constitutional government of our fathers and substitute a government of paternalism.

It is not necessary to review here the various devices and decrees employed to put this revolutionary theory into effect. You all are familiar with the administration's extraordinary measures to control business, to subsidize the farmer, to employ the unemployed, and to pour out Government money in various utopian schemes.

Some of these schemes appear to have worked pretty well—on the surface. They have succeeded in putting money into circulation, and they have quieted certain minority groups which threatened disturbing action during the dark days of the depression.

But if you look beneath the surface and measure the results achieved by these schemes against the principles sacrificed in their attainment, you young Republicans must be appalled by the sacrifice, and the price you and your children will have to pay.

We have sold our national birthright of character, courage, and freedom for a mess of new-deal pottage.

If you will look back over this Nation's industrial growth during the last century, you must admit that we have made some progress. Under a system which is now being condemned—and scrapped—by the bureaucrats in Washington, we opened up the wilderness of the West by a great network of railroads. We developed power, machinery, motors; we discovered the miracles of electricity; the telephone, the incandescent light, radio.

Spurred on by individual initiative, and abetted by the so-called "capitalistic system", our citizens developed great corporations, giving employment to thousands of workers and paying dividends to thousands of stockholders.

A thousand problems in industry and science were conquered by the genius, the resourcefulness, the rugged individualism, if you will, of free-born American citizens. For them it was splendid adventure, no less worthy because there was a profit motive behind it.

I challenge any of the "brain trust" at Washington to read our history and say whether we would have accomplished so much without freedom and individual initiative.

I challenge the "brain trust" to tell us how our great systems of transportation and communication could have been developed under the heavy hand of Government supervision and Government ownership.

I challenge the "brain trust" to deny that we have grown and prospered in the past because we were free.

And finally I challenge the "brain trust" to produce out of their bureaucratic witch-pots at Washington any system or theory which will guarantee the same progress, the same growth and prosperity in the hundred years to come as we have enjoyed in the last century.

Meanwhile, however, the question arises, What sort of government are we going to leave to those future generations to whom we are leaving this mountain of debt? Will it be the representative form intended by the Constitution, based on principles of liberty developed by our ancestors through the centuries, or will it be a planned economy, a regimented nation, based on principles developed by a few professors who have given it earnest thought over a period of several weeks?

I am willing to give the benefit of every doubt to those who have been trying by governmental processes to help us out of the slump. I grant them credit for improving morale, for discouraging sweatshops, for frowning on child labor. I give them credit for energy in abundance, for motives of the purest. But the fact remains that, since the bottom of the slump in 1932, Great Britain has found her growth in industry to be 84 percent, while our own is only 30 percent. The figures are those of the New York Times Annalist of March 16, 1934.

With all the incantations of our professors, with all the "cracking down" and the codes and processing taxes and the regimentation, we have not recovered half as fast as other nations. And so I say, and say deliberately, that all this administrative interference with business is holding us back from recovery instead of promoting it, and that what we need is fewer professors, less government in business, a quick adjournment of Congress, and a sadly missed chance to mind our own affairs.

These "brain trusters" have debased the dollar to 59 cents. Debasing the dollar means that gradually, not all at once, but gradually, the cost of living and the cost of everything that one uses will go up 41 percent. This means that the endowment funds that are invested in fixed-income securities of churches, hospitals, schools, libraries, and universities will be cut in purchasing power by 41 percent. This means, for instance, that Princeton University will no longer be able to give as many scholarships; or if they give as many scholarships, the student will only get 59 percent of what a student obtained before, and in addition to that, in the same bill besides depreciating the dollar, they have set aside the sum of $2,000,000,000 to play with in the gold market of the world. Speaking against this bill on the floor of the Senate 3 months ago, I said the Treasury Department is trying to compete in world markets with people who had been trained in the exchange markets for more than 100 years, from generation to generation, and that the only result would be that in a year or two they would have our $2,000,000,000 and we might have a few hundred millions of gold more, but that was all. What has happened is this—we allowed Europe to draw from the United States some nine hundred and eighty millions of gold at $20 an ounce; that with this $2,000,000,000 we have been buying back this gold at $35 an ounce, or paying Europe a profit of $15 on every ounce of gold that we repurchased. And Europe has already sold us more than seven hundred millions of gold. In other words, they have made a profit of $300,000,000.

We have decreased the amount that foreign nations have to pay on their debts, if they are willing to pay by 41 cents on the dollar. They will not even pay us the money we have given them.

This is still a land of opportunity. You Young Republicans stand on the threshold of another era of industrial growth and development. The question you must decide as you prepare to take your places on the political battle front is simply this:

Shall we subscribe to the theory that all human endeavor in this country must bow to a governmental bureaucracy at Washington?

For my own part, the answer is a simple and emphatic "No."

In my efforts to serve the citizens of New Jersey in the United States Senate, I have steadfastly held to the belief that no passing emergency justifies the abandonment of the Constitution or the curtailment of human rights.

As a member of an older political generation, let me say once more that I welcome you into the ranks.

It is to you that we must fling the torch of Republican leadership.

I know you will catch it, right side up, and carry it bravely forward in the stirring days to come.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of M. Frank Hammond, of Texas, to be United States marshal, southern district of Texas, to succeed Herbert E. L. Toombs, removed.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of William R. Taylor to be postmaster at Fulton, Mo., in place of F. D. Williams, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

TREATIES

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are two treaties on the calendar, which will probably take half an hour to read and explain, and it is now 6:15 p.m. I will give the same notice that I gave heretofore that upon the termination of consideration of the pending bill I shall ask for an executive session for the purpose of acting on the two pending treaties. I ask that the treaties be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The treaties will be passed over. The calendar of nominations is next in order.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Fred S. Minier to be register of land office, Pierre, S.Dak.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Milton J. Helmick to be judge of the United States Court for China.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, with regard to the confirmation of Judge Helmick, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified immediately of his confirmation. In explanation of the request, I will say I am informed there is grave doubt as to the legality of the judge now acting in China, his term having expired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Summerfield S. Alexander to be United States attorney for the district of Kansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George P. Alderson to be United States marshal for the southern district of West Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that no. 1878 of the postmasters, being the nomination of Myrtle Hufty, Paonia, Colo., be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. As to all the other postmasters, I ask that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The Legislative Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc. That completes the Calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 17 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 26, 1934, at 11 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 25, 1934

SECRETARY IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Raleigh A. Gibson, of Illinois, now a Foreign Service officer of class 6 and a consul, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the Lord our God, beneath whose mighty hand we bow. We rejoice that to those who come to Thee with hungry hearts Thy help is revealed; those who come to Thee with humility will find Thy yoke easy and Thy burden light; and those who come with penitence will find Thy mercy like the broadness of the sea. Heavenly Father, give us a growing conception and appreciation of the divine law whose seat is in the bosom of the merciful God. Brighten our ideals, that they may rebuke past sins and lend inspiration for the future. We believe that the Man of Galilee is the purest and the most radiant Teacher of the ages. Father in Heaven, encourage us to follow His example, to help the helpless as He helped them, to bear their burdens as He bore them, and in the cool of the evening may we find our way to some secret place and pray as He prayed. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday there appeared in one or two of the newspapers, not all of them, a statement which might have been construed as a criticism on my part of the leadership in the Senate. I certainly uttered no criticism and had none in my mind and made no statement which would reflect upon the magnificent leadership in the Senate. I have the highest admiration for that leadership, and I admire the skill with which it is conducted and has been conducted during the incumbency of the present distinguished leader. I have not only not criticized the leadership of the Senate but, on the contrary, I have on numerous occasions expressed my admiration of it.

I feel in justice to myself I should not permit the statement to appear in the newspapers to which I refer without making this correction. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 6 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we had what I regard as a rather ironclad agreement with reference to the order of procedure this morning. This women's citizenship bill has had the right-of-way for some time but has been delayed for one reason or another. In compliance with the request of many Members yesterday afternoon for an adjournment, the rule for the consideration of this bill was adopted without debate, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] will find by looking in the RECORD that it was understood and agreed by all parties that immediately after the reading of the Journal the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] could move to go into Committee of the Whole to proceed with the consideration of this bill. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request for the present time.

Mr. McGUGIN. Certainly after the other side proceeded for 1 hour yesterday the gentleman will not object to my proceeding for 6 minutes.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be given 10 minutes at the conclusion of the bill referred to by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the bill (H.R. 3673) in order today. Is there objection?

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I object. We have a vocational education bill here which has been waiting for 3 weeks to get the floor.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. RICH. If they are not going to give some recognition to the gentleman from Kansas, we will have to object to any business they want to do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition, as I am sure the gentleman from Kansas will believe, to object to his speaking, but after we have had a hard-and-fast agreement with respect to the order of business today, I trust the gentleman from Kansas will accept the situation.

Mr. RICH. Cannot the gentleman suggest a time today when the gentleman from Kansas may proceed for 10 minutes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Personally I have no objection to the gentleman from Kansas proceeding as soon as we have finished this business.

Mr. RICH. That was the request that I made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SNELL. This is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I repeat my request, that the gentleman from Kansas be given 10 minutes to proceed at the conclusion of the business before the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOUGLASS. I object.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is it not a fact that there has been a tentative agreement to take up today the De Priest resolution and get that out of the way? That may take a little time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to taking up that resolution when we conclude the debate on this bill.

Mr. SABATH. That is the reason I feel that should be the next order of business.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, my objection is not an unfriendly or personal one, but I make it because of the fact that the Committee on Education has had before the House, under a rule reported sometime since, a bill for vocational education. That bill will have to be passed within a few days or a week, or there will be no Federal vocational education, and, because of the importance of considering that, I must object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLASS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. To give the gentleman from Kansas 10 minutes certainly would not delay the gentleman's bill any great length of time.

Mr. DOUGLASS. I am willing that the gentleman may proceed for 10 minutes after the consideration of my bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3673) to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3673) to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes; with Mr. MARTIN of Colorado in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, the bill, H.R. 3673, deals with amendments of the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes, and is commonly known as the "equalization bill", for it seeks to equalize the citizenship rights of male citizens and female citizens of the United States.

The primary purpose of the bill is to equalize the status of female citizens, so that they may have the same rights in regard to citizenship and naturalization as are enjoyed by male citizens, and especially with regard to the question of derivative citizenship, so that a child may derive citizenship through the mother as well as through the father.

The bill in no way raises any question with regard to the relative status of a citizen by nativity as compared with that of a citizen by naturalization. Under this bill, a female citizen is a citizen regardless of whether she was born in this country or was naturalized or derived her citizenship from father or husband.

I will now proceed to an analysis of the bill and will ask your indulgence, because it is rather complicated. The first section of the bill provides that persons born abroad, one of whose parents is an American citizen, may derive citizenship either from the mother or from the father. Under existing law such children may derive citizenship only through the father. This bill grants to female citizens of the United States the right enjoyed by male citizens, in that if a child is born of the union between an American citizen woman and a man who is not American citizen, the child, under the provisions of this bill, may derive American citizenship through the mother, whereas at the present time it cannot.

To illustrate the inequality of the present law, let us consider on the one hand the case of children born out of the United States to a couple, the man being of Chinese ancestry but a native-born American citizen and the woman an alien ineligible to citizenship, and on the other hand the case of children born out of the United States of the union between a native-born white woman and a Britisher. In each instance the children were born outside the limits of the United States. In the case of the Chinaman the children arriving at the port of entry, Ellis Island or San Francisco, or be it where it may, are admitted as American citizens, whereas the white child of the native-born American woman married to the Britisher is held back and is called an "alien." Because of the inequality of the present law, that child derives the citizenship of the alien father, even though the mother is a native-born white American citizen.

The committee has studied this bill for over a year. As a matter of fact, we requested the various departments and the President to call into conference the various group leaders in this administration to study the inequality and the hardships of the naturalization laws, and I am glad to say that the various departments have withdrawn their objection upon realizing the hopeless inequality between male and female citizens.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. I want to clarify this: Is it not a fact that under the present law the child of an American father born outside the limits and jurisdiction of the United States becomes an American citizen?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DIES. He becomes an American citizen although the child does not have to return to the United States, does not have to reside in the United States. Under this bill, however, as amended by an amendment I proposed in the committee and which the committee accepted, the child must return to the United States before he reaches his eighteenth birthday and reside here for 5 years before he can become an American citizen.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is correct. I am coming to that feature; I will explain it.

Mr. HASTINGS. And the child must come to the United States before he is 18 years of age.

Mr. DIES. Yes; the child must come to this country before he is 18 years old.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Should this bill become a law—and I hope it will be passed at the earliest possible moment—a safeguard has been provided by the committee with respect to these children. Although under the provisions of this bill the child may derive nationality from either the mother or the father, still the child must come to the United States before the eighteenth birthday, and the child must live in the United States for at least 5 years before citizenship could attach to him. But the bill takes away the stigma of inequality to children of male and female citizens. As I pointed out in my illustration, the children born abroad of a Chinese father, an American citizen, could come in as citizens; yet in the case of the female American citizen marrying the Britisher, the white child of the white American woman is deprived of citizenship.

Now, these children would have to make a declaration. In other words they cannot have dual nationality. If they come into this country under the terms of this bill, not only would they have to reside in this country for a period of 5 years but they would also have to take an oath of allegiance to the United States of America and reside here for at least 5 years.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. ELTSE of California. If an American-born Chinese man goes to China and marries and of the union a child is born before his return to the United States, the child would not be entitled to citizenship, would he?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If a native American Chinese or Japanese, one who was born here, goes to China or Japan and has a family of a dozen or more or less, under the present law these children are citizens of the United States ab initio from the beginning.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Under the present law?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Under the present law.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But if this bill is passed and becomes a law, those children never can become citizens.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I grant the gentleman that is true, but the purpose is to create a dead line some place, because the committee has found that there has been a continuation, in some cases deliberately, where a native American Chinese goes to China and marries. He transmits citizenship to his children. His sons come to the United States, stay here long enough to claim to have lived here, then go back and get married, and their children in turn are citizens of the United States under the existing law.

So it goes right down the generations. This bill puts a stop to this endless chain.

Children whose birth takes place after the bill is enacted into law, where an alien parent is an alien ineligible to citizenship by naturalization, would not derive citizenship from their citizen parent, either mother or father. In other words, after this bill is enacted into law they cannot bring children back here that were born in China for the purpose of giving derivative citizenship to their heirs, who could not become citizens through naturalization proceedure. A practice which goes on indefinitely under existing law.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. As a matter of fact, do not most of these American-born Chinese who go to China to marry, immediately return to the United States and their children are born in this country and not in China?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. We find that they keep their children there for many years and then bring them in when they are big and able to do some work in this country. They do not bring them in right away. They do not educate them in this country. They go over there, get married, and raise a family. They may go to China or Japan every 10 years; they may go over there every second year. A child is born. On the birth of that child it receives derivative citizenship from the father, who was born here. If these children should come in at the age of 18 or 19, then go back to China and they marry again over there, the children of the father born here transmits citizenship to their children. So it goes on right down the line through generations.

This puts a stop to this practice upon the basis of elimination.

A person ineligible to citizenship but who is nevertheless a United States citizen by birth here or by derived citizenship under existing law may marry another person who likewise is ineligible to citizenship but nevertheless also is a United States citizen by birth here or by derived citizenship under existing law or, to illustrate, an American citizen Chinese may marry another American citizen Chinese, and in such a case the committee does not deprive the children of such unions to citizenship derived through either mother or father.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. My question may not be friendly to the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is all right. This is an open discussion.

Mr. COX. The question I wish to propound is whether the gentleman knows of any other first-class government of the world that has ever proposed anything similar to that which is before us in the pending bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This is not discriminatory against any race as much as it may appear to be. You take a white man who may marry a Chinese girl in China, she is excludable because she is ineligible to citizenship. Their children born abroad do derive citizenship under present law; under this bill as reported they would not do so.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know of any government in all the world that has proposed anything similar to what is contained in this bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There are now about 13 or more countries whose laws now give the mother absolutely equal rights with the father to transmit nationality to the minor legitimate children. The Equal Nationality Treaty, which was recently signed by all of the 21 nations of the Pan American Union at Montevideo, when ratified, will give full equality to men and women on the Western Hemisphere in all matters pertaining to nationality, citizenship, and naturalization.

Mr. COX. However, does it not run counter to the laws of all the great powers of the world affecting nationality? Does not the gentleman set up a condition where a child of an American mother and an English father may be properly claimed to be both an Englishman and an American? That is what the gentleman does here.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What we do is very simple.

Mr. COX. Is it in the law of any other country that a mother may transmit her nationality to the child?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; there are 13 or more countries where that is written in their laws now.

Mr. COX. Is not the gentleman in error in that statement? Is not the law in all of the first-class powers that the father transmits his nationality to the child?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is true. That has been the basic law, the father transmits his nationality to the child. But the constant trend of world legislation on nationality seems to be toward the full recognition of the right of equality for both men and women in matters of nationality.

Mr. COX. That is our law.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is our law, as to the child's citizenship at birth. It is not clear under our law now as to the child's citizenship when the mother, after the birth of her child, is repatriated as a United States citizen.

Mr. COX. That is a part of our naturalization law.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. COX. The change that we undertake to make here in this pending proposal makes it possible for the mother to transmit her nationality to the child. What is the situation now in the case of an American mother marrying a subject of Germany? Under the German law and under the laws of all other nations the father transmits his nationality to the child, whereas under the law as it would be if we pass this bill the mother would likewise transmit her nationality to the child. Cannot the gentleman imagine complications which might arise as a result of the enactment of this pending proposal? For instance, what would the situation be in case of war between America and Germany? Of course, Germany would claim the citizen; America, under this law, would likewise claim the citizen. Cannot the gentleman appreciate the fact that international complications might arise as a result of the operation of such a law as is proposed here?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, under our Constitution and our naturalization laws the United States recognizes the right of women to become citizens in their own right, independently of whatever the citizenship may be of their husbands. In other words, women in the United States do not, under our law, lose their United States citizenship by marriage to an alien, neither do they gain United States citizenship by marriage to a citizen. I do not see any logical reason why we should continue an unequal policy which is to give certain rights to men who are citizens while the same rights are withheld from women who are citizens in their own right. This bill will equalize the rights enjoyed of each, the man-citizen and woman-citizen.

I may further answer the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] by stating that if the gentleman will read the bill he will find we make provision for times of war and times of peace. The gentleman, as I understand, asked me the simple question of whether there will be dual nationality of such a child if this bill is passed; in other words, such a child will have the citizenship of the father, and also under this measure he will have the nationality of the mother. Is that correct?

Mr. COX. That is correct; yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We have provided for the situation insofar as a war may be concerned, but assuming there is no war, such a child would have to make an election at his eighteenth birthday and would have to make a declaration prior to his eighteenth birthday when he enters the United States.

Mr. COX. That is, so far as the United States is concerned.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. COX. But how can we set up a condition requiring an election that will strip him of his foreign nationality?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman overlooks the fact that the advantages of this resolution do not take effect until the alien son or the alien daughter of an American woman actually enters the United States physically; in other words, such an alien child is still an alien so long as it remains in a foreign land.

Mr. COX. And he does not escape his foreign sovereignty and there would be no dual citizenship so long as the child stayed in a foreign country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. But for the clarification of this problem I will read a memorandum prepared to show the history of this measure and designed to answer objections to the enactment of this bill:

Immediately after the enfranchisement of women in 1920, it was recognized that a next necessary step for the removal of the stigma of unequal citizenship between men and women was the equalization of nationality rights for all citizens of the United States.

Work toward this end was begun by the late Representative John Jacob Rogers of Massachusetts, and was continued, after his death, by Representative Cable of Ohio.

The Cable Act, passed by the Congress in 1922, was intended to establish equal rights in nationality, but it was found that certain amendments were needed to accomplish this end. In 1930, and again in 1931, equalizing amendments were passed by the Congress. The present bill would remove the last remaining discriminations against women in our nationality laws.

The remaining discriminations which would be removed by the passage of the equal nationality bill are:

1. Denial of the right of the mother to transmit nationality to the minor child born abroad of an alien father. The father now has this right, under jus sanguinis (right derived by blood relationship as opposed to jus soli, right derived by place of birth). Women certainly have the same blood relationship to their child as the father has.

2. Denial of the right of the husband to renounce citizenship on the same terms as the wife, upon marriage to an alien. This right is equalized by the present bill.

3. Denial of the right of the alien woman to transmit nationality to her minor children upon her own naturalization, on the same terms that an alien father can transmit nationality to them by his own naturalization. The present bill equalizes this right.

4. Denial of the right of the alien husband of an American wife to acquire nationality on the same terms that an alien wife can be naturalized. The present bill would equalize this right by declaring that a residence of 3 years is required of an alien spouse of an American citizen before he or she can be naturalized. This lowers the residence requirement by 2 years for the alien husband and raises it by 2 years for the alien wife.

5. A few minor discriminations in the present law would also be repealed by this bill.

A. At present the widow of a foreign man who has died before completing his naturalization may receive credit for the steps her deceased husband had taken, and proceed from that point to naturalize herself. Inasmuch as the naturalization of women is no longer derived through the naturalization of the husband, that part of the law would be repealed by the present bill.

B. At present, when a foreign man who has taken out his naturalization papers becomes insane, his alien wife can proceed to her own naturalization with credit for the steps previously taken by her insane husband. For the reason stated above, this provision of the law would be repealed by the present bill.

C. The remaining amendments are pro forma, to eliminate matter outlawed by the present bill if passed.

The equal nationality bill, as submitted by women, consisted of provisions on the above points which merely equalize the existing law, in order to establish at every point the principle of equal nationality rights between men and women citizens. The House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, in its judgment, decided to make, at the same time, certain changes in the laws themselves. On these changes women are taking no stand. They are matters for the Congress to decide upon. The general principle of equality in nationality is what women seek to establish. Women feel that the fundamental principle of equality in nationality should not be sacrificed to differences of opinion on these committee amendments.

ANSWERS TO OBJECTIONS

Objections have been raised to this principle of "equality in nationality" on the ground that "no first-class power has ever established by its statutes 'equality of citizenship'", and "every other nation holds that a married woman takes her husband's nationality, and a child takes the nationality of his father."

It is further stated that "no first-class power, in the years since we adopted the Cable Act, in 1922, has ever followed our experimental step to assert that diversity of citizenship within the family is a proper principle."

Taking the last objection first, the fact is that, since 1922, the following nations have recognized the propriety of that principle by radically amending their nationality laws toward giving women equality of citizenship in their own right: Great Britain, Canada, France, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Belgium, Estonia, Rumania, Jugoslavia, Turkey, China, Persia, and Albania. Great Britain, in November 1933, followed the lead of Canada (in 1932) in granting to its women the absolute right to retain their British nationality in certain circumstances on marrying an alien. Many nations had recognized this right prior to action by the United States in 1922.

The constant trend of world legislation on nationality is toward the full recognition of the right of equality in nationality for both men and women.

Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay, and the Soviet Union have already fully equalized nationality rights in all respects between men and women.

The Equal Nationality Treaty, recently signed by all the 21 states of the Pan American Union, at Montevideo, will, when ratified, give full equality on all matters pertaining to nationality, including naturalization and immigration, to the men and women of the Pan American Union.

As to the objection that "every other important nation holds that a child takes the nationality of his father", the following 13 countries—Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Soviet Union, Turkey, Uruguay, and Venezuela—give to the mother absolutely equal rights with the father to transmit nationality to the minor legitimate child.

As to the statement that "every other nation except the United States holds that the wife takes the nationality of her husband", as a matter of fact, only 22 of the 77 principal countries of the world—Afghanistan, Bolivia, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Australia, British India, Irish Free State, Newfoundland, New Zealand, South Africa, Haiti, Hedjaz, Honduras, Hungary, Iraq, Lichtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Palestine, San Marino, Transjordania, and Vatican City, but in several of these countries laws giving men and women equal nationality rights are now being drafted by their governments—compel their women citizens to assume the nationality of their alien husbands under all circumstances. None of them are classed among the great powers.

Of the remaining 55 countries of the civilized world, 14 countries—the United States, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Liberia, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Turkey, and the Soviet Union—give their women citizens the absolute right to retain their nationality under all circumstances on marriage to an alien.

Six more countries—Albania, Belgium, Estonia, Guatemala, Rumania, and Jugoslavia—give a woman citizen, on marriage to an alien, the right to retain her nationality if she takes legal action to preserve it.

In the remaining 35 countries—Andorra, Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Danzig, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Great Britain, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithuania, Mexico, Monaco, Nicaragua, Norway, Persia, Poland, Portugal, El Salvador, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, and Venezuela—women citizens lose their nationality on marriage to an alien only under certain circumstances.

As to the problem of dual nationality raised as an objection to the equalization of our own laws, it is of interest to note that of the 58 countries which automatically confer citizenship on alien women who marry their nationals, more than half of them give their own women the right to retain their own nationality on marrying aliens. Dual nationality is a problem that can be settled only by treaty action between nations, but the fact that this complication exists—for men as well as women—is no fair reason for any country, under its own laws, to deny justice and equality to women.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this measure, H.R. 3673, comes before us today with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and the unanimous vote of the Rules Committee.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is in error in his last statement. While I did commit the error that so many of us commit, in committing myself to the support of this proposition before I knew anything about it, but between the time I made that commitment and the time the Rules Committee took action, I obtained some information and was impressed with the absurdity of the proposal. I happened not to be present at the meeting of the Rules Committee and did not vote. If I had been there, of course, I would have voted against giving a rule for the consideration of this monstrosity.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I based my statement on the declaration made by the Chairman of the Rules Committee on the floor of the House yesterday. I assumed, of course, that that statement was correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not make that statement. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is the one who made the statement.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. My recollection is that the gentleman from Alabama made the statement also.

Under existing law citizenship by birth outside of the United States is derived only through the American father. This is manifestly an unjust discrimination against American motherhood.

It seems to me that in view of the fact that 14 years have elapsed since we granted the voting franchise to American women, and 12 years have passed since the passage of the Cable Act, it is now proper that we confer upon our American women the same right enjoyed by American men in the transmission of nationality to their minor children.

Section 1993 of the Revised Statutes reads:

> All children heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose fathers were or may be at the time of their birth citizens thereof, are declared to be citizens of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to children whose fathers never resided in the United States.

This bill which we are considering today adds the word "mothers." If it has been deemed wise that the protection and privileges of our Government should be extended to the children of American fathers, it would seem to be extraordinary that the same principle should not apply to the children of American mothers since certainly the mother more than any one else stands in closest relationship to her child.

The remainder of the bill seeks to remove minor discriminations in the field of nationality in order to conform to the general principle of equality in nationality. It is a pleasure to me to go on record today in support of the contention of the proponents of this measure that in this day and age, on a continent that has for years been consecrated to justice we include women in the provisions of an act that has been already satisfactorily tested.

This measure has the enthusiastic endorsement and support of the following women's organizations: The General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, the National Association of Women Lawyers, the National Council of Jewish Women, the National Women's Party, the National Zonta Club, the National Association of Women's Physicians, the National Association of Women Real Estate Operators, the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, the Southern Women's National Democratic Association, the National Soroptimists, and by many smaller organizations of women as well as by practically all the women leaders in the county.

Recognizing the common justice of the principle involved, it is with very great pleasure that I support the resolution and vote for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I am delighted to support this measure with the greatest power I possess.

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which I am a member, had H.R. 3673 referred to it, to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes.

We have given the same most careful consideration and the committee has reported the same to the House with certain amendments and has recommended that the bill do pass.

There has been some discussion that the dual nationality will complicate the matter of class. It is a fact, however, that this would not make any additional complication but would just give to mothers the same rights as to fathers.

Immediately after the enfranchisement of women in 1920 it was recognized that a next necessary step for the removal of the stigma of unequal citizenship between men and women was the equalization of nationality rights for all citizens of the United States.

Work toward this end was begun by the late Representative John Jacob Rogers, of Massachusetts, a distinguished Member of this House and husband of our present colleague, Mrs. ROGERS, and was continued after his death by Representative Cable, of Ohio.

The Cable Act, passed by the Congress in 1922, was intended to establish equal rights in nationality, but it was found that certain amendments were needed to accomplish this end. In 1930, and again in 1931, equalizing amendments were passed by the Congress. The present bill would remove the last remaining discriminations against women in our nationality laws.

The remaining discriminations which would be removed by the passage of the equal nationality bill are:

First. Denial of the right of the mother to transmit nationality to the minor child born abroad of an alien father. The father now has this right, under jus sanguinis—right derived by blood relationship—as opposed to jus soli—right derived by place of birth. Women certainly have the same blood relationship to their child as the father has.

Second. Denial of the right of the husband to renounce citizenship on the same terms as the wife, upon marriage to an alien. This right is equalized by the present bill.

Third. Denial of the right of the alien woman to transmit nationality to her minor children upon her own naturalization, on the same terms that an alien father can transmit nationality to them by his own naturalization. The present bill equalizes this right.

Fourth. Denial of the right of the alien husband of an American wife to acquire nationality on the same terms that an alien wife can be naturalized. The present bill would equalize this right by declaring that a residence of 3 years is required of an alien spouse of an American citizen before he or she can be naturalized. This lowers the residence requirement by 2 years for the alien husband and raises it by 2 years for the alien wife.

Fifth. A few minor discriminations in the present law would also be repealed by this bill.

At present the widow of a foreign man who has died before completing his naturalization may receive credit for the steps her deceased husband had taken, and proceed from that point to naturalize herself. Inasmuch as the naturalization of women is no longer derived through the naturalization of the husband that part of the law would be repealed by the present bill.

At present when a foreign man who has taken out his naturalization papers becomes insane his alien wife can proceed by her own naturalization with credit for the steps previously taken by her husband. For these reasons this provision of the law would be repealed by the present bill.

The remaining amendments are pro forma, to eliminate matter outlawed by the present bill if passed.

A suggestion was presented to me yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], who believes that these children, upon becoming 21 years of age, should take an oath of allegiance. I agree with this suggestion and I hope the Chairman will also agree to an amendment providing that within 6 months or some other reasonable time after becoming of age, they shall take an oath of allegiance, because I can see where such a child might not have the best interests of this country at heart and not be willing to take the oath of allegiance and perhaps would become a bad citizen.

The equal nationality bill, as submitted by women, consisted of provisions on the above points which merely equalize the existing law, in order to establish at every point the principle of equal nationality rights between men and women citizens. The House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, in its judgment, decided to make, at the same time, certain changes in the laws themselves. The general principle of equality in nationality is what women seek to establish. Women feel that the fundamental principle of equality in nationality should not be sacrificed to differences of opinion on these committee amendments.

The United States has taken a stand before the world for equality in nationality. We have five times announced to the world our support of equality between men and women in nationality—once, in 1930, in a vote by the United States delegation, acting under instructions from President Hoover, at the World Conference on the Codification of International Law at The Hague; once again in the same year, in a vote by the House of Representatives; once, in 1931, in a letter from former Secretary of State Stimson, to the League of Nations, and once, in 1932, in a second letter from the Secretary of State to the League, and once, last year, December 1933, when the United States under the Secretaryship of Mr. Hull signed a nationality treaty at Montevideo.

The party to which I belong has always stood before the world for equality in nationality.

The United States delegation at the World Conference on Codification of International Law, The Hague, voted for equality in nationality in April 1930.

In March and April 1930 the first World Conference on Codification of International Law was held at The Hague under the auspices of the League of Nations. At this Conference there was proposed a convention on nationality which discriminated against women. The United States delegation, acting under instructions from the President, voted against this discriminatory convention. One of the grounds given by the Acting Secretary of State for the opposition of our Government to the convention was:

> We do not in our laws make differences—or make few or relatively unimportant differences—as to rights of men and women in matters of nationality. (Statement issued by Acting Secretary of State, Apr. 15, 1930.)

This House endorsed the vote of the United States delegation at The Hague in support of equality in nationality in May 1930.

Following the vote of the United States delegation at The Hague, the House of Representatives again on May 21, 1930, adopted a resolution, introduced by my distinguished colleague, HAMILTON FISH, Jr., of New York, commending the vote of the United States representatives at The Hague against the proposed nationality convention discriminating against women. This resolution read:

> That the Congress of the United States of America expresses its approval of the action of the United States delegation at The Hague Conference, 1930, on the Codification of International Law in voting against the "Convention on certain questions relating to the conflict of nationality laws"; and
> That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States of America that there should be absolute equality for both sexes in nationality, and that in the treaties, law, and practice of the United States relating to nationality there should be no distinction based on sex.

And recently at Montevideo the United States, in December 1933, signed an equal nationality treaty declaring there would be no distinction on account of sex in law or practice in regard to nationality.

The passage of the equal nationalities bill, H.R. 3673, would bring the United States law on nationality into harmony with the declared policy of the Government upon this subject.

The enactment into law of the equal nationality bill would remove all of the discriminations against women in nationality and would place men and women on a basis of complete equality in this field. Not only would the passage of this measure be a long-delayed act of justice but it would bring the United States law on nationality into harmony with the principles which the Government has repeatedly proclaimed at home and abroad.

The bill had careful consideration by the committee, and both Secretary Hull and Secretary Perkins have now withdrawn their objections to the bill.

Someone has said that it is a bill to add to and increase the complexities of nationalities. That is not true, as this bill does not complicate nationality but simply adds the word "mother" and gives her the same rights as a father.

The aim of the bill is to confer upon a child born abroad of an alien father and an American mother, citizenship. This meets with the hearty approval of any thinking person as it only does justice and grants equality.

Objections have been raised to this principle of "equality in nationality" on the ground that "No first-class power has ever established by its statutes 'equality of citizenship'", and "every other nation holds that a married woman takes her husband's nationality, and a child takes the nationality of his father."

It is further stated that "No first-class power, in the years since we adopted the Cable Act, in 1922, has ever followed our experimental step to assert that diversity of citizenship within the family is a proper principle."

Taking the last objection first, the fact is that, since 1922, the following nations have recognized the propriety of that principle by radically amending their nationality laws toward giving women equality of citizenship in their own right: Great Britain, Canada, France, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Belgium, Estonia, Rumania, Jugoslavia, Turkey, China, Persia, and Albania. Great Britain, in November, 1933, followed the lead of Canada (in 1932) in granting to its women the absolute right to retain their British nationality in certain circumstances on marrying an alien. Many nations had recognized this right prior to action by the United States in 1922.

The constant trend of world legislation on nationality is toward the full recognition of the right of equality in nationality for both men and women.

Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay, and the Soviet Union have already fully equalized nationality rights in all respects between men and women.

The Equal Nationality Treaty, recently signed by all the 21 states of the Pan American Union, at Montevideo, will, when ratified, give full equality on all matters pertaining to nationality, including naturalization and immigration, to the men and women of the Pan American Union.

As to the objection that "every other important nation holds that a child takes the nationality of his father", the following 13 countries: Argentina, Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Soviet Union, Turkey, Uruguay, and Venezuela give to the mother absolutely equal rights with the father to transmit nationality to the minor legitimate child.

As to the statement that "every other nation except the United States holds that the wife takes the nationality of her husband"—as a matter of fact only 22 of the 77 principal countries of the world—Afghanistan, Bolivia, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Australia, British India, Irish Free State, Newfoundland, New Zealand, South Africa, Haiti, Hedjaz, Honduras, Hungary, Iraq, Lichtenstein, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Palestine, San Marino, Transjordania, and Vatican City, but in several of these countries laws giving men and women equal nationality rights are now being drafted by their governments—compel their women citizens to assume the nationality of their alien husbands under all circumstances. None of them are classed among the great powers.

Of the remaining 55 countries of the civilized world, 14 countries—the United States, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Liberia, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Turkey, and the Soviet Union—give their women citizens the absolute right to retain their nationality under all circumstances on marriage to an alien. Six more countries—Albania, Belgium, Estonia, Guatemala, Rumania, and Jugoslavia—give a woman citizen, on marriage to an alien, the right to retain her nationality if she takes legal action to preserve it. In the remaining 35 countries—Andorra, Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Costa Rica, Danzig, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Great Britain, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithunia, Mexico, Monaco, Nicaragua, Norway, Persia, Poland, Portugal, El Salvador, Siam, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, and Venezuela—women citizens lose their nationality on marriage to an alien only under certain circumstances.

As to the problem of dual nationality, raised as an objection to the equalization of our own laws, it is of interest to note that of the 58 countries which automatically confer citizenship on alien women who marry their nationals, more than half of them give their own women the right to retain their own nationality on marrying aliens. Dual nationality is a problem that can be settled only by treaty action between nations, but the fact that this complication exists—for men as well as women—is no fair reason for any country, under its own laws, to deny justice and equality to women.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yielded 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri. His request is to speak 10 minutes out of order. Only 3 minutes of that 10 should be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order on a matter of general interest for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we have established many new records in this session of Congress, and one of them in particular is deserving of more than passing attention.

From time immemorial we have operated the House restaurant at a loss. Every year the Committee on Accounts has reported to the House, and charged to the contingent fund, an annual deficit of from $25,000 to $40,000 in the maintenance of the restaurant. And the loss in the operation of the Senate restaurant has run as high as $80,000 for one session.

I had the honor to serve as a member of the Committee on Accounts at one time, and it seemed so unreasonable to lose this large sum in the operation of the restaurant, notwithstanding the fact that we paid the highest prices charged anywhere in Washington for similar services, that I insisted on having the books audited by a certified public accountant. The accountant checked the books from every possible angle, and in the course of his examination reported the amount made or lost on each article of food served in the restaurant. His audit showed that we lost money on everything we served except soup and coffee, so I offered a motion that we serve only soup and coffee. [Laughter.] Unhappily, my motion was not entertained, and we have continued to lose money at every session of Congress until the present Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. LINDSAY C. WARREN, assumed charge of the committee and the restaurant.

I rise this morning to call attention to the report recently filed by Chairman WARREN showing that for the first time in the history of the committee's management of the restaurant it has paid all expenses and made a slight profit, notwithstanding the fact that it has rendered better service and charged more moderate prices than ever before within my recollection. So it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, in view of this remarkable and unprecedented record, that some of the executive departments which are struggling to overcome chronic deficits might very well enlist the efficient services of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] with credit to themselves and profit to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the Seventy-third Congress will be remembered for many notable accomplishments, but for one especially notable achievement which will be recalled when all others are forgotten—the completion in this session of the parliamentary revolution begun in the Sixtieth Congress. In that Congress, and the preceding Congresses under the administrations of Speaker Reed and Speaker Cannon, the Speakership had attained such preeminence as to overshadow the Presidency itself. The Speaker dominated every function of the House. No measure, however important or however trivial, could be so much as considered without his approval. And as the power of the Speaker was enhanced, the influence of the individual Members of the House declined in proportion, until Speaker Cannon held even his party colleagues in such slight esteem politically that Representative Victor Murdock, of Kansas, writes that he was accustomed to pass them in the corridors and cloakrooms without so much as deigning to acknowledge their greetings. And Champ Clark, of Missouri, relates that when he was introduced to Speaker Reed on his election to the House and mentioned the name of his predecessor who had served the previous 4 years in the House, Speaker Reed said he was unable to recall ever having heard of him.

The revolution of 1910 deprived the Speaker of many of his powers, but as it made no provision for the exercise of such powers by the organized membership of the House, they passed largely to small groups selected and controlled by the Speaker, and the effect was to supplant a despotism with an oligarchy through which the Speaker, with the aid of unofficial kitchen cabinets chosen by himself, still governed the House with little regard for the great body of its Membership.

It remained for two great men—by a singular coincidence from the same State—to complete the work begun in the Sixtieth Congress and return control of the House to its membership, as contemplated by the Constitution. On the other side of the aisle the change was effected by James R. Mann, of Illinois, characterized by Speaker Clark as knowing more about House procedure than any other man who ever sat in the American Congress, and named by Asher Hinds, of Maine, as his most valued consultant in the preparation of Hinds' Precedents. In the Republican conference of the Sixty-sixth Congress Mr. Mann secured the adoption of the plan under which the policies of the party—formerly dictated by a small coterie of the Speaker's lieutenants—were determined by a steering committee elected in the conference and geographically representative of the party. This system, preserving the rights of the individual Member and insuring the adoption of policies responsive to the will and sentiment of the country as expressed through its Representatives in Congress, has proven so effective and so satisfactory that it has been readopted in every succeeding Congress and is the system so ably maintained and administered today by the great leader of the minority, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

On this side of the aisle the reform proceeded more slowly, and it was not until this Congress that we were able to secure the adoption of a similar provision completing the transfer of the control of party policies from the Speaker's antechamber to the floor of the House. Speaker RAINEY, another Illinoian, introduced in the Democratic caucus and secured the adoption of a resolution providing for the election of a similar steering committee by the Democratic caucus to which are referred questions of party polity and expediency. Already the high character of the men elected to the committee, the reflection through them of the attitude and sentiments of their constituent colleagues, the facility with which they have transmitted administration views on which a plebescite was desired, and especially the ready cooperation which they have enlisted in support of administration measures, has more than justified this long-delayed reform. Through these elective party committees, subject to recall at will, the newest Member of the House may express his views and register his wishes as effectively in the formulation of party programs as the oldest Member of the House, or the highest ranking member of its most important committee. No longer can a Speaker of the House say, as in the past a Speaker has said, in reaching out for unconstitutional authority through the unwarranted exercise of the prerogatives of that high office, that the House is too large and unwieldly a body to permit consultation with the rank and file of its membership in the determination of party policies or, as another Speaker said, that actual participation by the average Member in the legislative functions of the House is an admirable theory but wholly impracticable.

When George III came to the throne the English Crown had long before become a mere figurehead in the actual government of the realm; but, prompted by the insistent admonition of his mother, "Be King, George; be King", he spent his life in a disastrous and futile effort to reestablish despotic power. Many Speakers have been urged by sycophantic satellites, "Be king, Mr. Speaker; be king", and some Speakers have listened to the siren suggestion, always at the expense of the prerogatives of the House and the liberties of the people, and with the ever-present possibility of control by sinister interests seeking special privilege. The adoption of these reforms by the party organizations of the House effectually preclude such usurpation of power and constitute a divisional milestone in the evolution of representative government.

But, Mr. Chairman, when the parliamentary annals of this Congress are finally written, Speaker RAINEY's place in history will be fixed, not so much by his institution of this epoch-making reform as by the probity and impartiality of his interpretation of the law of the House and his enforcement of the letter and spirit of its rules of procedure. There have been Speakers whose ruthless disregard for established procedure amounted to parliamentary piracy. I recall decisions in which a Speaker, in order to serve the petty partisan exigency of the moment, violated the law as laid down in express decisions by his three immediate predecessors.

It was for Champ Clark, of Missouri, and Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts, two outstanding parliamentarians, whose terms fortunately supplemented each other, to first divorce the judicial functions of the Speakership from the partisan requirements of party leadership. While the scientific codification of the rules was completed under Reed and Cannon, neither hesitated to sacrifice precedent or consistency to party needs when occasion required. And party majorities sustained them on appeal. But a careful perusal of the opinions rendered by Clark and Gillett fails to disclose a single instance in which either of them subordinated principle to opportunism.

Expressing his conviction on the subject, Speaker Clark said in one of his early decisions:

> I would rather have it said of me, when I have finally laid down the gavel, that I was the fairest Speaker than that I was the greatest. No Speaker can afford to render a decision for temporary benefit to his party fellows.

The philosophy which these two great Speakers expressed and practiced in their rigid adherence to stern and exact justice in interpretating the law of the House had been well exemplified by the immortal Bard of Avon when, 300 years before, Bassanio had urged:

> And I beseech you wrest the law to your authority; to do a great right, do a little wrong, and curb this cruel devil of his will.

And Portia replied:

> It must not be; * * * 'twill be recorded for a precedent, and many an error by the same example will rush into the state.

Speaker RAINEY, by his adherence to these splendid traditions, by his scholarly knowledge of the rules and procedure of the House, his keen analysis and equitable solution of the parliamentary problems presented, and especially his wise and impartial administration of the exacting duties of the Speakership, ranks as one of the ablest of the long line of able men who have served in that great office. [Applause.]

The next Congress promises one of the most momentous sessions in the history of the Nation. Complicated and bitterly contested issues vitally affecting the standard of living of every American citizen and involving the very perpetuity of the Republic itself must be taken up, and their disposition challenges the capacity of the wisest and most patriotic statesmen. But great crises have always produced great men to meet and master them, and with Speaker RAINEY in the chair and the able and resourceful gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], who has so successfully piloted the administration's program on the floor in this Congress as majority leader [applause], the House and the country may look forward to the Seventy-fourth Congress with confidence and enthusiasm. [Applause.]

The warm and unconditional approval and endorsement of their leadership expressed by President Roosevelt, as reported in this morning's papers, insure a continuation of the close cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of the Government in the coming Congress, and with it the successful solution of every national problem and the speedy return to national prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in this connection I am constrained to also refer to two other men who have rendered exceptional service in this Congress. By a further coincidence they also are from the same State.

One of the key men in the working organization of the House is the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He holds the purse strings of the Nation and supervises the appropriation of every dollar spent by the Federal Government. As a matter of fact he is probably as important a factor in the Government as any other man in the Congress. The present Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] has made a record in that position in this Congress which is without parallel in the 145 years since the adoption of the Constitution. [Applause.] He has reduced the cost of operating the Government from the peak of peace-time appropriations more than 40 percent for the coming fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in 1932 we appropriated for the maintenance of the executive departments $3,454,933,066.07. In the supply bills which have passed the House at this session we are providing for the same purpose $2,178,524.905.94. In other words, under the administration of the present Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, we are reducing Government expenditure from a round figure of three and a half billion dollars to approximately $2,000,000,000, an annual saving of something like a billion and a half dollars—and the Government is being better served than ever before. The entire Nation is indebted to Chairman BUCHANAN for that remarkable accomplishment. The times demand economy in government, and the gentleman from Texas is supplying it most effectively. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, no reference to the personnel of this Congress would be complete without mention of the other of the two brilliant Texans to whom I have just referred. It has been my privilege to serve in various capacities on the floor of this House for 23 years this month. In that time I have observed no Member who has rendered abler or more conscientious service than the gentleman from Texas, Judge BLANTON. In the legislation which he has supported, in the legislation which he has opposed, and especially in the vast sums of money which he has saved the Federal Treasury, no Member of the House in the last quarter of a century has surpassed the wise and courageous and resourceful gentleman from Texas, THOMAS L. BLANTON. [Applause.] And speaking in behalf of the people of my State—and expressing, I am certain, the sentiments of those of every other State in the Union—I desire to thank the citizens of the Seventeenth District of Texas for sending Judge BLANTON here and keeping him here all these years. His services to the House and to the country have been invaluable. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an excerpt from the preface to the forthcoming second edition of the Supplement to Hind's Precedents, now in the press.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, under the authorization granted, and in connection with my remarks just made, I include the following:

The period covered most intimately by the Precedents had witnessed the rise of the Speakership to a position of commanding influence. In the last years of the nineteenth century especially, when turbulent minorities welded their historic functions of criticism and protest into ruthless instruments of obstruction, the power of the Speaker, necessarily enhanced to meet the emergency, approached absolutism. Fostered by the arbitrary exercise of the power of recognition by Speaker Carlisle, supplemented by utilization of special orders under Speaker Crisp, the growing ascendancy of the Speakership was further augmented under Speaker Reed and reached its flower under Speaker Cannon. Entrenched behind the power to appoint committees, with authority to extend or refuse control of the floor, sitting as chairman ex officio of the Committee on Rules, and exercising the right to count a quorum or declare a motion dilatory, the Speaker became an arbiter from whose decisions in chambers there was no appeal. So autocratic was the power of the Speakership that contemporary historians characterized the office as "second in power only to the Presidency",[1] or considered the Speaker of the House as "more powerful than the President of the United States."[2] Such was the situation at the opening of the Sixty-first Congress.

The reaction came with startling suddenness. Almost overnight the slowly accumulated prerogatives of the great office crumbled. Within 3 short years (1909–11) a bipartisan revolution swept away every vestige of extrajudicial authority. The power of recognition was circumscribed by the establishment of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, the Discharge Calendar, the provision for Calendar Wednesday, and by the restoration to the minority of the motion to recommit. The appointment of committees was lodged in the House, and the Speaker was made ineligible to membership on the Committee on Rules. Reference of bills to committees was standardized by rigid enforcement of the rules of jurisdiction; recalcitrant committees and managers of conference were rendered subject to summary discharge; and the determination of legislative policies and programs was delegated to party caucuses and steering committees. The tidal wave of reform culminated with the adoption of the rules for the Sixty-second Congress and Speaker Clark succeeded to an office which, aside from the outstanding position he occupied in his party, was hardly more than that of moderator.

The control of the House thus wrested from the Speaker has been more than maintained. Command has passed from the Chair to the floor, and the prerogatives of the Speaker have been jealously limited by the rules of each succeeding Congress. Administrative functions are vested in party caucuses and their all-powerful steering committees which meet as party boards of strategy and on occasion have been attended by the Speaker on invitation and not by right of membership.[3]

The restoration of the judicial character of the speakership is reflected both in the decisions of the Chair and in their reception by the House and by the country at large. Supported by citation of clearly defined and long-established principles of procedure as enunciated in the Precedents, the opinions of the Chair are no longer subject to the criticism of the press and the distrust of the minority which regularly featured sessions of Congress in former years. At liberty to disregard political considerations, and no longer under the onus of serving party interests, the decisions of the Speaker are judicial and academic rather than polemic and partisan, a change which has served to add distinction to the office and its incumbents.

At the same time the prestige of the House and its influence in legislation has been largely enhanced. Through the establishment of the Budget system and the concentration of the power of appropriation in a single committee, the House has strengthened its grip on the national purse strings. Its insistence on the observance of recognized rules of conference and the maintenance of its privilege in revenue legislation have further contributed to its influence. In the reenactment of the Holman rule in 1911, and the adoption of the amendment of 1920 interdicting fiscal legislation in conference, it has affirmed its primacy in the formulation of the supply bills and emphasized its constitutional prerogatives.

To recapitulate, the quarter century which has elapsed since the publication of the Precedents has witnessed a more radical amendment of the rules and a more fundamental change in the unwritten law of the House than any similar period since its establishment. It has been a period of change, not only in House procedure but in world relations, economic standards, scientific formulas, and every phase of human progress. A World War with its attendant problems, the adoption of constitutional amendments of far-reaching effect, the enfranchisement of women, the authorization of new bases of Federal taxation, increased membership of the House, decisions of the Supreme Court affecting the Congress and its powers, extensions of the activities of the Federal Government into new channels, and vast national readjustments have precipitated legislative proposals in such volume and

This system in reality made him more powerful than the President of the United States; without his consent and assistance, legislation was practically impossible.—Brown, Leadership of Congress, p. 3.

[2] The President might recommend, but the Speaker dictated, legislation. He not only decided what legislation should be permitted, but he even shaped the form of that legislation to conform to his own personal ideals.—Fuller, The Speaker of the House, p. 269.)

of a character so unprecedented in the practice of the House as to render a revision of the Precedents incorporating the modern practice indispensable.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill and was active in causing it to be reported by the Rules Committee. The Rules Committee held two extended hearings relating to this matter. We received communications from some of the governmental departments; and I had some personal communications with those departments in reference to its provisions.

I believe the principle of equality of sex set forth in this bill should have been enacted into law some time ago. I believe that the children of a male American citizen should not be entitled to any more recognition than the children of a female American citizen. For at least 150 years in this country we have proceeded on the contrary theory, however. It is time we abandoned the old theory.

Let me call the attention of the Committee to the bill in certain particular respects. Like other members of the Rules Committee, I felt that it would have been a very simple matter to have reported a bill from the Immigration Committee granting equality to both sexes in the matter of children born abroad, and that it could be done in about five lines. The Cable Act could have been amended to the effect that the children born of an American woman who was a citizen should have the same rights as the children born of an American man who was a citizen. That would have ended it; that would have accomplished the purpose of the bill; it would have accomplished what the women of this country so strenuously request.

This bill, however, contains some matters which do not pertain to the issue of equality of sexes. They pertain more properly to immigration legislation. In the first place, the proviso at the bottom of page 1, line 9, in my opinion, is grossly unfair. It is grossly unfair to single out any race and take away from it what the male members of that race now possess, their right to devolve citizenship upon their children; to take away from them existing rights. I can understand the argument of not further extending such rights, but the fact is that today the child of a Chinaman or a Japanese, born in this country, is an American citizen just as much as the child of an Italian, a Pole, an Irishman, or a German. The child is an American citizen, ipso facto, having been born in this country. Yet if that male child goes to China and has children, you take away from him rights he now possesses, while at the same time you are extending to the females of other races new rights to give birth to American citizens. I have no interest in the matter except to suggest that it seems grossly unfair.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Does the gentleman understand that the Chinese race bitterly resents this gross discrimination against them?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think any race should resent the extreme principle of discrimination involved in this bill. We have always given them these rights, but this bill does the unusual thing of extending rights to other people while taking away existing rights of American citizenship of certain races.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. The gentleman understands, of course, there now exists a quota with respect to Chinese and Japanese entering the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand, but this bill has nothing to do with quotas; it has nothing to do with the immigration of Chinese or Japanese; it just deprives them of rights they now have, while at the same time it gives additional rights to other races.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Does the gentleman know that the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce is opposed to the very provisions to which the gentleman refers? And does the gentleman further know that we have distinctive posts of the American Legion composed of Chinese who served over there. If they return to China and marry and perchance have children, their children are denied the right to return to the United States with their parents.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And, of course, today, before this bill is enacted, those same children are American citizens.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This bill, fundamentally, is an equality bill, and with due regard to those who proposed the bill, the provision to which the gentleman refers was not incorporated in the original draft of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is what leads me to make the criticism I do. I am for the equality in this bill. I know the ladies are for it; but what I fear is that before the House finishes consideration of the bill the legislation may be turned into restrictive immigration legislation. I understand that one member of the committee will propose at least four amendments to this bill pertaining to immigration. Those amendments should not be in this bill, I respectfully submit to the committee and to the House. This bill should not be turned into a restrictive immigration bill. It should be maintained as a bill which has for its purpose the granting of equality between the two sexes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I fear the gentleman is misinformed. The bill has nothing to do with the opening of quotas, with letting in anybody.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know that is not the purpose behind the legislation, and I hope amendments are not adopted which will turn it into an immigration bill.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I am sure it is not the intention of the Committee on Immigration to turn it into such a bill, but that it will be kept within the scope of its purpose to grant equality in the matter of citizenship rights between the sexes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope the committee will defeat such immigration amendments if they are offered, and I hope further that the House will eliminate this unfair and un-American provision on page 1.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request as previously made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], that I may speak out of order.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, we have been very liberal on this side. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] asked to speak out of order for 10 minutes, and his time was extended twice in order to make a political speech to help some Members come back to this House. If the objection is insisted upon, we will not do very much more business here today. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] spoke for an hour yesterday. We are going to have a little fairness here.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the time will be taken out of the time allowed for debate?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; we on this side have yielded the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in order to expedite the conclusion of this bill—and it is not my responsibility—I give notice that I shall object to any further requests of this sort.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I asked yesterday for 5 minutes to speak on a nonpartisan matter, and it was generally understood that I could have time under this bill. The subject is nonpartisan, and I should like to get 5 minutes when the time of those who want to speak on the bill has been exhausted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What is the nonpartisan subject?

Mr. FISH. It is in reference to an article that appeared in an American monthly yesterday advocating revolt in the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman from New York can get time yielded from one side or the other, I shall not object to his speaking out of order, but I think we ought to go ahead under the time allotted for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SNELL. This time is being yielded by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN].

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I am anxious to get this bill passed, so I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas to proceed out of order for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the President proclaimed that the present program is evolution and not revolution, that the program is based upon planning, in brief, that planning is evolution and not revolution. Let us see what is the price which we must pay for planning. Professor Tugwell is admittedly the leader of the "brain trust" planners. It was upon Professor Tugwell that the President yesterday placed his stamp of approval by elevating him to the position of Under Secretary of Agriculture.

In December 1931, before the American Economic Association Professor Tugwell set forth the things we have to do in order to have a limited acceptance of the planning idea. According to the Tugwell formula, he prescribed: "We have a century and more of development to undo." He further stated, that there must be three great changes: First, changing statutes, constitutions, and government once and for all; second, destroying business as it has existed; and third, destroying the sovereignty of the States. After summing of these three requirements for planning, Professor Tugwell boldly and bluntly said:

> All three of these wholesale changes are required by even a limited acceptance of the planning idea.

Undoing a century and more of development, changing statutes, constitutions, and government once and for all, destroying American business as it has existed, and destroying the sovereignty of the States may not be revolution in the sense of blood running down the gutters of the streets, but as far as the Republic under the Constitution is concerned, it is as complete a revolution as if the Republic were replaced by force of arms.

From the "new dealers" we are learning much of ourselves and our forefathers which the most of us have not heretofore known. The most of us have thought that there was behind us a century and a half of progress and achievement, and the development of the greatest civilization the world has ever known. Yesterday the President referred to our past development as a nation that developed haphazardly. A few days ago Secretary Wallace referred to us as "sons of David, licentious and contentious." A few weeks ago in a speech at Chicago Secretary Ickes indicted the American civilization as having been developed by greed and selfishness. If the "new dealers" are right, then we should be grateful to a merciful God for 150 years of patience with the country of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, and Woodrow Wilson.

Yesterday the President advised the use of gray matter, "brain trust" or otherwise. Upon that statement we can all agree. The trouble is, as far as many of us are concerned, we do not have the vision or the brains to see where the use of gray matter is involved in placing a man in jail for making a living for his family by pressing pants for 35 cents a pair. We cannot see where gray matter is involved in one day enacting legislation which will put an American citizen in jail for raising cotton and on the next day reading the report in the press that Poland, a former purchaser of American cotton, has decided to cease purchasing American cotton and in the future purchase her cotton from Soviet Russia.

The Bankhead cotton bill provides for a tax which will confiscate any amount of cotton which a citizen produces in excess of the amount authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture, and then if he undertakes to escape the tax, the bill provides for sending him to the penitentiary. Remember, it is not a tax to support government. It is a shameful, tyrannical tax for the purpose of impoverishing the man who does not reduce his normal production of cotton by approximately 40 percent.

Recently George Farrell, in charge of the wheat allotments, in a speech at Pratt, Kans., was reported in the Hutchinson (Kans.) News of March 31 as saying:

> Our delicate task is to steer the price of wheat so that the man outside of the allotment makes no money and the man inside does.

Thus the power of government is being used to manipulate the wheat market and to rig the price of wheat so as to impoverish one citizen of the country and to enrich another. That may be evolution, but it is also sufficient revolution that the Government which carries out such a policy is not the Republic under the Constitution, which for over 150 years protected the equal rights of American citizens.

Yesterday David Cushman Coyle, another of the foremost "new dealers", spoke before the nurses' association and is reported as having said:

> Everything we were taught in school is exactly wrong. Thrift is no longer a virtue, saving for a rainy day makes it rain all the harder.

Maybe I am dumb and without vision or gray matter, but I still believe Benjamin Franklin was a smarter man than is Coyle. I still believe that a reprint and wide distribution of Poor Richard's Almanac would be of more service to the American people and this civilization than all the new-deal ballyhoo that has been or ever will be broadcast over the radio into the ears of the American people.

Following thrift and the wisdom of the ages has balanced the budget of England, is returning the unemployed to work in England, Canada, and other parts of the world, while following this new and strange philosophy of the "new dealers", which philosophy condemns all of our program of the past and promises a future which can neither be seen nor touched, but only visualized by those with the faith, has in 1 year's time increased the national debt approximately $5,000,000,000, or $40 for each man, woman, and child in the United States; all this in spite of the fact that the "new dealers" are now in office, elected by the people on a platform pledge promising a balanced Budget and a 25 percent reduction in the cost of government.

These remarks are in no sense personal criticism of the overwhelming majority of Democrats in both Houses of Congress. I know that at least 90 percent of the Democratic Members of this House are heartsick and weary of the day-by-day repudiation of all the fine traditions of the Democratic Party of Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson. I realize the helplessness of the great majority of Democrats in Congress. They cannot criticize that which so many of them dislike without losing their patronage and thereby the support of their party organization. In their dilemma I do not criticize the great majority of Democratic Members of Congress; on the contrary, I commiserate them. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in what the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] had to say with reference to the fact that this was not supposed to be an immigration bill. I was also very much pleased to hear those responsible for this measure on the Democratic side, members of the committee, state that this was not an immigration bill.

I should like to press the point home to you, if I may, that the purpose of the bill, as I understand it, is not to lay down the bars in any way to admit additional immigrants. If I am wrong in this premise I should like to be corrected, because, as I stated a few days ago, I have been probably the principal opponent to this bill on this side of the House, and I should not want to withdraw my opposition if this brings in any additional immigrants. In times gone by I have opposed it strenuously, but I have never opposed it from the standpoint that it was an immigration measure, because I thought it was not an immigration measure. My opposition was based upon the fact that the Secretary of State's Office and the Secretary of Labor's Office were against it, claiming that it could not be administered. This is in line with the fear expressed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] when he asked certain questions a few minutes ago. He brought out the fact that he was afraid it would carry with it some very serious consequences in the way of administration.

The former Secretary of State thought it would be difficult of administration, and the former Secretary of Labor also thought it would. The present Secretary of Labor apparently thinks it will not, but just speaking for myself and not for anyone else, I do not think the present Secretary of Labor has ever done anything to indicate that she would, if she had a chance, put up the bars against an influx of immigrants, but rather her past record would indicate that she would let them down. To make myself clear, I would not be very much impressed with the opinion of the present Secretary of Labor, because her past record does not indicate that she would be very strict so far as restrictive immigration measures are concerned, but, on the contrary, it indicates clearly that it is not safe for those of you who in the past have prided yourselves on being restrictionists to rely on her. The present Secretary of State, I may say, and those who officiate with him, is just as strict and just as patriotic in that respect as anyone on either side of this House, and since they have taken the position that they do not find much opposition to this bill, and that it will administer reasonably well, and since it is purely a matter of administration, I felt it was not incumbent upon me to take the individual responsibility to oppose this measure, although I fail to bring myself to the position of being willing to proclaim its virtues from the housetops and to say it will work out well. If it is a question of administration, those whose duty it is to administer should know their duty and their capacity to discharge that duty. If it is not a question of immigration—if it is purely a question of administration—the Secretary of State has the responsibility, and I do not want to say he would not discharge this responsibility fairly in an American manner. I hope though that if this bill is passed that it will be administered in line with the sentiments expressed here today, that it will not infringe upon our quotas now established for immigrants.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman spoke about increasing immigration. Is it not a fact that this measure will give citizenship to the children of an American woman married to a foreigner, whether he is British, German, or Italian?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This bill does this——

Mr. McFADDEN. Is not that a fact?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It might not give citizenship to their children in every case. Generally it would.

As I understand it here is where the most trouble is likely to come. If the father and the mother separate and both desire the custody of the child this might prove troublesome. Of course, an American woman can, if she wants to, go across the ocean and marry and start out on a program of raising children to bring them into this country and thereby build up the list of immigrants from some foreign country, but people do not usually marry with any ideas like that in mind. Let us take the thing as it comes to us in a reasonable way. There are extreme cases both ways. Here is an American woman living in America. Under the present law she marries a German and moves to Italy and a child is born, this child might be an Italian citizen if it chooses when it becomes old enough to make a choice, but until then it receives its citizenship from its father and will be a German. Under the proposed new law it might be either a German or an American for it may inherit citizenship from either. If we reverse the procedure and suppose that a German husband and an Italian wife should come to the United States on a trip and a child should be born here, that child is an American citizen if it stays here long enough so that it can exercise its choice, and it will always be an American citizen until it expatriates itself. But, if the German father and Italian mother get into the divorce court, what would be the outcome? Some civil judge would determine the custody of that child and such determination would probably end all the trouble so far as we might be concerned. I mean that we would probably not have to decide between Germany and Italy and it is extremely improbable that we would have any trouble about that.

If an American wife married to a German should go to Italy and a child should be born there and domestic troubles should occur, it is safe to assume there would be some civil court that would take care of the child in that case and would determine which parent should have the custody of the child. If that court should say the custody should go to the father, no doubt the father, being a German citizen, would take his child to Germany, if he wanted to do so, and the American woman, under the present law, could come back to America as she is still a citizen, but if the court should give her the child, she could not under the present law, transmit her citizenship to that child. Under the proposed law she would have the same right as the husband to transmit her citizenship to the child just as he did, and if the court should grant the custody of the child to her she could then bring it to the United States and it would have American citizenship.

What this bill does, under such circumstances, is to say that this American woman shall be free to bring this child back here just the same as the father of the child could do if he were an American citizen.

As I have said, I admit there are instances where this might be abused, but at present, according to my understanding there are very few cases to which this change will apply—many of these women who marry foreigners deserve no sympathy when they find they have bargained for a count and got a no account. Still there are, no doubt, some deserving cases. I am sure that some of the women who will find themselves in this predicament will be American cititzens of the best type, and under these circumstances the advocates of this bill claim that they should be able to bring their progeny back just the same as a man would be able to bring his children back to this country.

With respect to this bill, in good faith and on behalf of others vitally interested, I have exacted an understanding from members of the committee and those vitally interested, that there is going to be an amendment offered providing that before such can become an American citizen, it must come to the United States for permanent residence before it is 18 years of age and must reside in the United States for 5 years, so that it may become acquainted with our schools and institutions so as to be capable of espousing Americanism, and of being a real, good American citizen.

Mr. McFADDEN and Mr. DIES rose.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is suggesting that this is not an immigration bill. I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that this bill takes citizenship away from women, and if it does take citizenship away, is not that prima facie evidence that this is an immigration bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I do not think it takes citizenship from any woman whatever. I think it is in line with the Cable bills which have been passed heretofore and is in line with acts seeking to give uniform naturalization and citizenship privileges to the children of American women citizens.

Mr. McFADDEN. The proviso on the first page of the bill certainly does that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Are we liable to get into any entanglements with foreign countries by enacting this measure into law and providing that a child although born in a foreign country can be given citizenship under this bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; we are liable to get into some entanglements, and that was the objection of the Secretary of State in times gone by.

Mr. McFADDEN. If the gentleman will permit, I want to correct the misuse of a word. I said "women" when I meant to say "child." If this proviso is enacted into law a child of an American woman who goes abroad loses its citizenship.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman said something about an amendment which is to be offered. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that under the bill as it is now written it carries an amendment which I offered in committee and which provides that the child has to come to the United States and reside here for 5 years. There is some doubt about whether or not the child has to complete its residence of 5 years prior to its eighteenth birthday; and I propose to offer a clarifying amendment requiring that every child, whether the father is an American citizen or not, shall have to reside 5 years in the United States in order to become an American citizen.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thought I understood that the proposed amendment——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thought I understood the purpose of the amendment to be that the child should be here to familiarize himself with our institutions.

There is one provision of the bill that applies to immigration, and that is one of the repealing sections. It repeals a portion of the immigration laws. I am very pleased to be able to talk about this for the remaining time assigned to me.

Some of you will remember a nefarious law passed here over the protest of many of us 2 or 3 years ago. It was passed as a special law, and I have always been ashamed of it. It was passed expressly to admit into this country one individual woman. The immigration laws of the country were changed for the purpose of admitting this one individual woman. Ever since I have been a Member of this House I never have seen any legislation that was brought about purely by the power of money regardless of merit. I do not mean that this money was used in any illegal way, but this individual had enough to keep a lobby here for years and to lay carefully the foundations for a long fight. For several years this high-powered lobby hung around here and finally, by the power which can come only from such well-laid plans, it circumvented the law by the enactment of a special bill designed to meet only one case.

I am referring to the Ulrich bill, admitting one single individual woman, who married one of the descendants of the rich Borden-milk family.

That bill was opposed by many of us, but our opposition was not sufficient to prevent the passage of that bill.

This will repeal that law.

These are the facts upon which that law was enacted:

An American soldier after the war became enamored of a woman in Germany who had a criminal record and could not meet the requirements of the immigration laws. Before the marriage this man made inquiry of the American authorities whether she could be admitted if he married her and was advised that she could not. He defied the authorities and married her, and then sought to bring her in as his wife. Her criminal record barred her.

The law was amended so that if an American soldier, honorably discharged, who had married a woman a citizen of a foreign country wished to bring her to America he could do so if it appeared that the only charge against her was for larceny committed before she reached her majority, and the sentence for which was for less than 3 months, and which crimes had been committed more than 5 years. The exceptions are all made to fit this one individual case.

I am glad that somebody had an idea of fairness and wants to repeal this shameful legal monstrosity.

So I say, as far as I am able to find out, this bill has no effect on immigration. It does not let down the bars. I reserve the right to say that, although I do not expect to oppose this measure, I will oppose it if anybody can show me that it is letting down the bars. I have never been in favor of letting down the bars and I am not now. I have always opposed letting down the bars, and I oppose it now. I am not trying to keep the women from accomplishing what they want, although I think that this is not nearly so important a measure as they seem to think it is. I think the women have used much more energy in pressing this measure than it deserves.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman made a statement about the Secretary of Labor. I do not think that she has violated any law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is not asking a question. I do not want to argue with him. We cannot agree upon that at all. I made my statement, and I am entirely satisfied with it.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. Does not this bill provide that if an American woman should marry a Frenchman and raise four or five children they can become American citizens if they come over here before they are 18 years of age and stay here for 5 years—not, as the gentleman says, 5 years before they become 18 years of age? The language of this bill does not say that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman was not present when the gentleman from Texas said that they would offer an amendment to clarify that language, so that there will be no misunderstanding about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that the American Federation of Women's Clubs have endorsed this measure. I believe the American Federation of Women's Club know what they are talking about when they say that the women of our country do not get a square deal. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this bill should be enacted into law because it will give American women the rights that they are entitled to.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL].

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I doubt whether there is any Member of this House who will oppose this bill because of the provision contained therein pertaining to equal rights, but I should like to see the women of America who are so much and honestly interested in obtaining equal rights interest themselves more actively in the welfare of their sisters in our own country.

In the latest available census it is shown that 7,041,841 unmarried women and 3,710,302 married women are employed. To be more specific, for every two single women employed, there is at least one married woman holding a position of some sort in our industrial life. Inasmuch as there must be a million or more unemployed single women in the United States, it would seem that women's organizations could best serve the interests of their sisters now if they would use their influence in urging Congress to enact legislation which would prevent the needless employment of married women while the list of unemployed single women maintains this huge proportion. The needless employment of married women, causing as it does untold suffering, deprivation, and other distress to single women unemployed appears to me as a more paramount issue for consideration by the various women's clubs than does the granting of equality of citizenship to a comparatively small number, as proposed in this bill, undeniably meritorious as it is.

The latest census yields further statistics significant in an analysis of our unemployment problem. There are 3,281,687 foreign-born men and 3,002,926 foreign-born women now residing in the United States who, in many instances, are taking jobs which rightfully belong to our own citizens. No one should criticize a foreigner, legally in our country, who is law-abiding and who intends to take out United States citizenship. But included in these totals of more than 6,000,000 aliens residing in this country, it is safe to assume that 1,000,000 or more have no intention of becoming citizens of the United States. I think that our American women should aggressively interest themselves in the welfare of the families of America by urging laws to be enacted which will deport from American shores every alien who refuses to accept American citizenship.

I introduced a bill in the Congress providing that aliens who are eligible to United States citizenship and who, after the expiration of the proper period of time as provided by law, fail to take advantage of the opportunities offered them in this respect, should be deported to the country of origin. The Immigration Committee has not held a hearing on this bill which, if enacted into law, would tend to free our Nation from the disloyal, communistic, racketeering element which takes advantage of the hospitality of our country, its industrial advantages, and the protection of our flag without returning one iota of fealty or loyalty to our Government.

There are individuals in our midst who have absolutely no regard for our institutions, our laws, or our form of government, and who, in many instances, are occupying positions of prominence in business, in journalism, and in other fields from which they diffuse their obnoxious ideas among those with whom they come in contact, either openly or covertly. To permit individuals who come within this category to remain in the United States tends to destroy respect for law and order on the part of loyal, unsuspecting citizens who become more or less imbued with their subversive doctrine. In times of economic depression especially do such aliens seem to find a fertile field for inculcating their insidious theories into our body politic and through their open and secret activities, they add to our law-enforcement problem and consequent expenditures to reduce crime.

The Immigration Committee, in my opinion, would be rendering a patriotic service to the people of our Nation if it would favorably report legislation providing for the deportation of aliens who are eligible for citizenship under every requirement of law, but who fail to avail themselves of this privilege. Any individual who seeks the hospitality of our shores and who, incidental to his residence here, is keeping a citizen from employment, owes it to our Nation to swear to uphold and defend it against all enemies whatsoever, and if he fails to do this he should be summarily deported.

"America for the Americans" is an appropriate slogan, and especially should it be used against those who absorb our sustenance, but who give nothing in return. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I disagree with the observation made a moment ago that this is not such an essentially important bill. I think it is important because it is a link in the endeavors of women to secure equal rights and an important part in an effort which has continued for a century or more. You do not get such things as equality in the large any more than that liberty comes all at once. It might be rather interesting to read the essay of Milton on liberty, under the name of "Areopagitica", and there find that we have gotten it piecemeal, and the very fact that the gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY] sits in this Chamber today, and that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] and others sit here, sharing all the prerogatives of Membership, is a commentary on the efforts women have made to secure not only equal rights in the law as citizens, but to secure rights under the nationality law, equal property rights, equality of suffrage, and equality before the law generally.

This is not a particularly complicated bill when administered in a practical way. There are no particular difficulties that I can discern. I am going to address myself to the sections of the bill to bring before you a concrete idea of what it seeks to do. I point out first of all that section 1 of the bill does nothing more than to give to an American mother the same rights that an American father now has. If any Member of this Chamber were to go to France, and there take an alien spouse, a French woman, and issue should be born of that union, the American father could transmit nationality to the child; if, however, a woman citizen goes from this country over there and marries a Frenchman, the nationality cannot be transmitted by the mother to children born of that union. That is simply one of those absurd inequalities in the law, and all that section 1 of the bill seeks to do is to amend section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by substituting the words "father or mother" in place of "parent", so that the mother shall have the same right to transmit nationality as the father.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] raised the objection that difficulty may arise because of the dual nationality of the American mother and the French father, that the child would perhaps take citizenship from the French father and also from the American mother. The point is made that under the terms of the bill, if the mother also is given the right to transmit nationality, there would be dual or double nationality. That is quite true, but the same difficulty exists under the law at the present time, because there are some 58 different countries where women are entitled to retain their nationality after marriage to a foreigner and there is presented the same problem of dual nationality. That difficulty applies to men and women alike, and is a matter that can be ironed out only by treaty; but while we are waiting for the necessary treaty or treaties to be negotiated, shall we sit inertly and supinely by and allow the inequalities in the present law to continue? I can cite you letters that came from the State Department to the Naturalization Committee over the last few years. They came to the Seventy-second Congress and they came to the special session of the Seventy-third Congress, stating that we should not now modify the nationality laws because a special commission had been appointed to study the matter; that we should wait instead of correcting these inequalities at once. We might have to wait 10 years before the commission reported its recommendations. New legislation like that proposed in this bill will be affected by the so-called "nationality code", if it is ever reported. So there is therefore no reason why this legislation should be withheld. It constitutes a progressive step in the further emancipation of women.

Now, getting to section 2 of the bill, it provides that where an alien mother or father comes back to this country to resume citizenship, that the children born of that union, if born outside of the United States, shall also have the right of citizenship if the child is a minor at the time that the alien father or mother comes over to resume citizenship, and provided also that the citizenship of such minor children shall start at the time they actually become permanent residents of this country. I submit that there is nothing radical about this section. What it does is to amend the existing law that was passed on the 2d day of March 1907 so that, if an alien father refuses to become naturalized, the mother can proceed with naturalization and secure the benefits of citizenship for her children.

In this section we are simply conferring a status of equality upon the mother along with the father. There is nothing revolutionary about that, nothing particularly radical. The only quarrel I have with it is that it was not done long ago when the Cable Act was passed.

Now we come to section 3 of the bill, which confers the right to renounce citizenship upon an equal basis. At the present time there exists another of those strange inequalities where a man can legally do something that is legally denied to a woman. This section does nothing more than to confer upon women and men alike an equal right of renunciation of citizenship before a competent court in this country. This is something that should have been done long ago. This simply equalizes the status between men and women in the matter of renunciation of citizenship before the law.

Finally, the fourth section of the bill, instead of being a little more liberal, is perhaps somewhat restrictive, because, in effecting equality, it enlarges naturalization requirements for women and then applies the same requirements to men. At the present time the alien wife of an American citizen does not have to make a declaration of intention. The residence qualifications were somewhat liberalized years ago so that she need show but 1 year's residence. In this particular section we once more seek to equalize the status of men and women before the law, and instead of providing that she shall be required to reside here or to be domiciled here but 1 year to comply with the requirements of naturalization and citizenship, the bill provides that both men and women must reside here 3 years. It is a little more restrictive in that respect.

Now, in substance, that is all there is in this bill. Some amendments were written in by the committee, such as the requirement of a child born outside of this country coming back to this country and having to actually and permanently reside here for 5 years before the inchoate right of citizenship becomes complete.

I understand an amendment will be offered to require that such children must also take the oath of allegiance as provided by the Bureau of Naturalization.

After all, these are not so material to the fundamental principle of the bill, although I heartily approve of them. What the bill seeks to do is to bring about an effectuation of equality between American fathers and American mothers so far as children born outside our borders are concerned, and in respect to renunciation of citizenship and the right to qualify under our naturalization law. It is not of particular consequence insofar as immigration is concerned because it will not let down the bars nor is it intended as an immigration bill.

I believe this bill should be enacted into law without delay, today, so that it can receive proper treatment at the other side of the Capitol and be engrossed upon the statute books of the Nation.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman has explained this bill as it affects equality between male and female citizens in the matter of citizenship. I should like the gentleman to explain why there was slipped into section 1993 the proviso:

> That if one parent is an alien such alien is not of a race ineligible to citizenship.

Why was that discrimination inserted in the bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman from Oregon will admit that he has in mind the orientals?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Yes; and I live out there among the orientals. Such a provision has no place in a bill, the ostensible purpose of which is to equalize the rights of fathers and mothers. The committee has no right to slap these people in the face by any such amendment as that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to be entirely fair in the matter. Personally, I have no bias in the matter. The gentleman is aware, however, that there is a prejudice against orientals, and there is always a certain degree of objection against permitting any additional orientals to come into this country. There are not many Chinese or Japanese citizens who might be affected by the bill. The number is so very small that it does not affect the general purposes of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Regardless of what their number may be, we are not called upon to slap them by such a provision as this. It will do nothing but engender ill feeling against unjust treatment.

I am going to offer an amendment to cut out that provision.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. I also come from the State of Oregon and live in the eastern part of the State. This does not change the status of the oriental at all.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not one bit.

Mr. PIERCE. Even with that provision in the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No indeed.

Mr. PIERCE. Then my colleague from Oregon is simply giving them rights that they do not now possess under the terms of the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As I interpret that section, it simply eliminates from the benefits of the bill those citizen Chinese mothers who might go over to the other side and marry one of their race, and then seek to confer American nationality upon their children, if permitted to do so, and bring them to this country.

Mr. PIERCE. Why should they be excepted?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There are two gentlemen from the Pacific coast who disagree.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Under the present law an American-born Chinese man or Japanese man may go to China or Japan and marry and have children there. He transmits citizenship to his children.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman assume they are marrying a Caucasian or an oriental?

Mr. ELTSE of California. A Japanese lady or Chinese lady.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it is correct.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is that not the effect?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Under present law, yes; but oriental citizen women will not have that right under this bill. One is of a race that is ineligible to citizenship. That is the direct point made by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ELTSE of California. If we pass this bill we are depriving the Chinese and Japanese of something.

Mr. PIERCE. We are not changing their status one bit.

Mr. CELLER. If the law applies at the present time to a Chinaman born in the United States, why should not this bill apply to a Chinese woman born in the United States?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That answers the objection made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], when he was talking about discrimination. What the gentleman says is precisely correct. It affects one side in the same proportion as the other. It affects the man as much as the woman, therefore this bill does not aggravate the circumstances.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. On page 2, I notice that the child must come into the United States before its eighteenth birthday. Suppose the child comes into the United States when 20 years of age. What does the bill provide as to when the child may become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If it did not comply with the provisions of this bill, it would have to go through the ordinary course of naturalization.

Mr. DONDERO. The same as any other alien?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield in order that I may answer the question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is asking a legal question. He is asking when and what. If the child does not take advantage of this act, he comes in as an alien. If he does not comply with the terms of this law, he comes in as an alien.

Mr. DONDERO. I am assuming that the child does not come in when 18, but waits until he is 20.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then he comes in as an alien.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say, in conclusion, that prior to 1855, if an American male citizen went abroad and married, not even he could transmit his nationality to a child that was born outside of this country. This was corrected in February 1855. Since that time there has been a tendency to liberalize and to equalize so that the same rights and powers of nationality could be enjoyed by men and women alike. In 1920 we engrossed upon the statute books and the Constitution the right of suffrage for women. In 1922 we gave women the independent right of naturalization. This is the next logical step in bringing about full equalization under the nationality laws, and that is why this bill deserves to be passed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the lady from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY].

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to some very good speeches this morning; therefore, it is with just a little regret that I take exception to the one I just heard, but I would hardly call it an exception. It makes me wonder if perhaps we do not talk too much and too long on the matter of equal rights. This is a singular statement for a woman to make, but I make it because I believe the day has come—and we thank the men for it—when we should call our position rather one of equal responsibility and with it the accompanying privileges.

It was stated today that we should share the responsibility with men of looking out for our sisters. I agree with the statement. The motive underlying this bill is good and just. American mothers desire to share responsibility with American fathers of giving the greatest of all gifts to their children, that of American citizenship; and I hope this bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HENNEY].

Mr. HENNEY. Mr. Chairman, we have come a long way since the founding of this Government in giving to the women of America their rightful place in our governmental program. This has been an evolutionary change since the dark ages, when a woman was considered as a chattel who should behave simply as a vassal toward her husband, the liege lord. It is a fact that in many civilized countries of today—and I am sorry indeed that it is true in many Christian countries and even in a number of our States—women are still considered as property assets. It is an incontrovertible fact that every piece of liberalization of the traditional and accepted overlordship of the male has been bitterly fought by many of our most erudite statesmen. The crowning event in this fight was when President Wilson signed the nineteenth amendment, giving the right of franchise to 20,000,000 American mothers. As a child I never could understand why my mother, whom I respected as the molder of my destiny, was not given the privilege of voting. It impressed me as an implication that she was not sufficiently intelligent to pass upon legislation that affected her and her family. Many male citizens whom I knew and who were, in many instances, scarcely above a moronic level were permitted the right of franchise and were privileged to assist in shaping the laws of the Nation that would govern hundreds of thousands of women citizens who were far superior intellectually. A woman teacher of political economy, a woman physician, lawyer, or minister was obliged to allow some dumbbell who might be a janitor or a hostler to do her voting for her. True, there are many subnormal women, but the two sexes are more or less on a parity in this matter, and therefore the argumentative point that women were not sufficiently enlightened was void. I believe all are agreed that justice has been done to the women of America in giving them the right to vote, and I think likewise all will agree that their entrance into and their interest in national politics has had a very salutary effect.

The question now arises, Shall many other restrictions that are heritages of the dark ages be equalized? The accepted belief that women should not be allowed to transmit nationality to her offspring under the same conditions as her brother is one of those nonunderstandable laws which it is the purpose of this bill to rectify.

In my home State of Wisconsin, which I am proud to believe is one of the most forward-looking and progressive States in our Union in the matter of being in the vangard of democratic legislation, we enacted an equal rights law in 1921. It was a general and not a specific law, in that it corrected all domestic phases of sex inequality and not some special inequity. Section 1 of this law reads as follows:

> Women shall have the same rights and privileges under the law as men in the exercise of suffrage, freedom of contract, choice of residence for voting purposes, jury service, holding office, holding and conveying property, care and custody of children, and in all other respects.

The greatest objection to that legislation at that time was to women serving on juries. Many lawyers, judges, professional people, and those who opposed any change in the existing order contended that because of woman's emotional nature she would be unfit for jury service. The law was enacted after a bitter fight, and today those same lawyers and judges are the loudest in their praises of the competency and analytical judgment of women jurors, and nearly every jury now has a goodly number of women sitting on it who are frequently chosen by the lawyers and judges in preference to men. Their ability and efficiency are not questioned in Wisconsin.

In support of this view, I wish to quote Miss Zona Gale, my fellow townswoman, a famed and internationally known author:

> In many States today the common-law disabilities of women are comparable to the barbaric laws of the chattel-slavery days. In our Federal laws there are many inequalities that should be removed. Common justice to the women of America requires that both in the Nation and in the States these obstacles and injustices be removed. The Wisconsin law recently enacted is a model for State action. But in the last analysis, as in suffrage, a constitutional amendment will best meet the complex situation.
> Will you bear with me for a moment to note this abstract truth: That every man knows what a woman's point of view, when it is wise and sane and kindly, can contribute to life. Of his understanding of this we catch glimpses in his book dedications and in all his moments of greatest articulacy. The difficulty is to generalize, to realize that more women have that wisdom and that sanity or, when they haven't, that we must help them to develop these broadly social qualities. The opportunities of men to express a social spirit in their living are still double and triple those of women. Yet women have a spiritual genius which has never been given social expression. It is precisely this which they could liberate into the world for the general welfare, if all these meshes of little circumstances hampering them could be swept away and they could be given the moral backing of a general consciousness of equality of opportunity. That is all that any equality can mean in the new status of women—equality of opportunity to express themselves politically and legally, without discriminations against them.
> Lady Astor spoke a profound truth when she said at Baltimore recently that women trust to the spiritual, and that they can bring the spiritual through to the material world—in time. * * * I am not saying that the Wisconsin equal rights law or any other equal rights law is going to do all that. But I am saying that the Wisconsin equal rights law or any other equal rights law equally well drawn is to be taken as one step in that long progress which women are making—through the doors of education, of the professions, of business, of the franchise, and on to full equality with men. The doors not of their own advancement alone but of the advancement of a race struggling toward the conditions of a just freedom. The status of women in Wisconsin even under our equal rights law is but a stage in that long march.
> Most of the barbaric laws dating from the days of chattel servitude have never existed in Wisconsin, but some of them did exist up to the time of the passage of the equal rights law. And all discriminations against women must be removed. All discriminative laws against women are remnants of serfdom days, and all these remnants must disappear.
> I see no conspicuous holy of holies in these discriminative laws. And in some States the pedestal does not seem to be high enough to prevent a husband from scaling it to collect his wife's earnings. Whether the discriminations are great, as they are in some States, or less, as they are in Wisconsin, the principle involved is the same—all discriminations against all women must be removed.
> In every State in the United States, except Wisconsin, there are discriminations against women. You see how invaluable is our Wisconsin law to the women still working to remove these discriminations.
> In this matter there is no woman's standpoint and there is no man's standpoint. There is only the need of our common citizenship to rid our statute books of these vestiges of the old English common law and to bring our law down to date. To do this for women—yes; and for men, and for the general welfare, and for the children and the children's children.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that many of our States are trailing the sovereign State of Wisconsin in the matter of true Jeffersonian legislation, and I predict that in due time all States will deal just as fairly with their women in the matter of equal rights as has Wisconsin.

It cannot be gainsaid that the present law, the Cable Act of 1922, deals unfairly with American citizen women relative to their transmitting of nationality as compared with the privileges granted American male citizens.

In regard to the capacity of an American father and an American mother to transmit American nationality to a child born abroad: The principal change which this legislation will make in the nationality laws of the United States will be to remove the present inequality between a father and mother with regard to the capacity to transmit nationality to a legitimate child born outside the United States. The present law of the United States on this subject discriminates against the mother. This law is as follows:

"A legitimate child born outside the jurisdiction of the United States of a father having United States citizenship at the time of the child's birth has United States citizenship (regardless of whether the father is a native or a naturalized citizen) if the father has at some time prior to the child's birth resided in the United States. In order to receive the protection of the United States, such a child, if it should continue to reside outside the United States, must record at an American consulate upon reaching the age of 18 its intention to become a resident and remain a citizen of the United States, and must take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon reaching majority. On the other hand, a legitimate child born outside the jurisdiction of the United States of a mother having United States citizenship and a foreign father has no claim to United States citizenship."

Considerable objection has been raised against this legislation because of the possibility of increasing immigration. It was stated on the floor a few days ago by the gentleman from Ohio, and a former member of the Committee on Immigration, Mr. JENKINS, who, in explaining that he had previously opposed this bill, stated that such opposition was not on the grounds of immigration, which latter he considered to be negligible. If the sole desire of those opposing it on such grounds were to decrease immigration by denying admission to either sex entering into marriage with foreigners, immigration, indeed, would be much more greatly restricted by turning the tables and allowing only female American citizens the right to transmit nationality to their children, for, indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is a well-accepted fact that at least 10 males contract foreign marriages to that of 1 female.

Another point which is very pertinent to this discussion is that of assimilibility of the child born to a dual nationality union. It is the mother who shapes the intellect and who molds the character of her offspring. Indeed, until a child is 12 years old it is with its mother almost constantly and with the father occasionally. It has been stated that in a certain European regime the contention is made that if they are given the custody and training of children until they are 10 years old that they care not what other influences may be brought into the after-life of those children. We all know that the first few years of a child's life is the formative period of its character. There is an old adage, "As the twig is bent, the tree inclines." Certainly a child born to a foreign mother, even though the father be an American citizen, will be brought up under the influences of foreign traditions and training. That child will be taught foreign folk lore and will be taught obedience and loyalty to every foreign tradition. Indeed, when that child reaches America, even up to the age of 18, it is foreign in its every fiber. On the other hand, in the case of a child born to an American woman abroad, we can rest assured that that child's training during the formative period of its life will be almost entirely along the lines of American ideals and American traditions; and, indeed, should that child enter America along with the other child just mentioned, the child of the American mother will become a citizen much more easily adaptable to and assimilable in American life than the child reared under maternal influence that is entirely foreign to American ideals.

There can be no valid reason or sound argument why an American mother should not be allowed the same privilege as her brother, an American father, both of whom had married foreigners, in declaring her intention of accepting American citizenship for her children under the restrictions and regulations as those accorded her brother. This legislation asks simply for equality between the sexes in transmitting nationality to their children. It is fair legislation—it is progressive legislation—let us take that step today. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I feel very sure that the Membership of this House will vote to do away with the present unjust discrimination against our women and their children. One reason I feel so sure of this is because the men of the United States are fairer and kinder to the women of their country than are the men of any other nation in the world. [Applause.] The men will agree with me when I say the child is always closer to the mother than to the father. Every court in our land when ruling on a divorce case gives the custody of the child to the mother rather than to the father.

May I give one more reason why I feel very sure the Members of this House will vote for this bill.

If any Member of this House had a daughter who married a foreigner—of course he would prefer to have her marry a citizen of the United States—but if perchance she fell in love with a foreigner and married him, and she had a child, I know perfectly well the grandfather of that child would want his grandchild to become an American citizen and to have that right. This is not a perfect bill. The proposed cruel ruling against the American citizens of Chinese and Japanese descent should be corrected and will be by amendment this afternoon. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I have just received this telegram which is self-explanatory:

Urge you to spike dastardly article in American Mercury for May entitled "How to Make a Revolution", in which it is urged to contaminate our glorious Army and Navy with red propaganda.

This is signed "Twelve members of Harvard Club of New York."

I am not one of those who want to interfere with freedom of speech. I believe in the fullest freedom of speech. Nor am I one of those who believe we are going to have a communist revolution tomorrow morning at dawn or the next day or the next year. I am in no respect an alarmist. There are only a limited number of Communists in this country and they would not be foolish enough to try to bring about any kind of revolution by force or violence. If they did, using a Russian word, they would be liquidated in a few weeks' time by the Regular Army, the National Guard, the American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. But I do not believe there is any room in this country for such foreign importations as inciting class hatred and violence in America under our free institutions and our republican form of government, which is guaranteed to each State by the Federal Constitution. Nor do I believe there is any place in America for those who seek to incite insurrection, mutiny, and rebellion among our armed forces. The article referred to is in the American Mercury, Menken's old magazine, which had a great intellectual clientele and is now owned by a new and radical group. In this magazine there is an article by Raymond Postgate, a former Communist, or at least, according to his own words in the article, a former editor of the official British Communist journal, directly stating not only how to make a revolution, but advocating and urging at least indirectly a revolt or an insurrection among the enlisted personnel of our armed forces, particularly among the Air Corps and among the police in the United States. It goes into details as to just how this should be done and he does not mince words at all, because he says they ought to organize the mechanics of the air force and use them for revolutionary purposes. The article is clearly seditious and written avowedly to incite a revolt among our soldiers and sailors against their officers and our Government.

I do not know any law that exists that can take care of this situation in time of peace. There is a law that prohibits anyone in time of war from inciting mutiny and insurrection in our armed forces, and I believe this law ought to be extended in time of peace to cover articles of this kind. No American citizen should have the right to urge the overthrow of our Government by armed force or to urge rebellion and insurrection among the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Air Corps. Postgate is so brazen in his article as to set forth in detail the methods how to create a revolt and how to implant the seeds of communism, sedition, and mutiny in the minds of American soldiers, sailors, and policemen.

This article, How to Make a Revolution, goes on to say:

> How shall the cautious revolutionary who fears or hopes that in armed revolt lies his only chance of success deal with this last development (the Air Corps)? How shall revolutionary feeling be spread among flying men? * * *
> But the organization of support in the air force for a revolutionary coup is an integral part of the whole problem of the armed forces—the Navy, Army, and police—and will have to be considered separately. * * *
> All that a revolutionary can say is that it is the obvious duty of any well-to-do and earnest advocate of social change not only to learn to fly himself but to pay for the training of at least one class-conscious and reliable worker. That, indeed, is a duty which, like the organization of a union of pilots, lies upon the most peaceful as well as the most ferocious of us. * * *
> Revolutionary propaganda could conceivably be turned like a jet upon the armed forces and the police, and it might be that concentration of energy here would prove a short cut to the revolution. Instead of fighting the Army, the Army might fight for us.

The amazing part of the article is the statement of this former British Communist editor that there is nothing in our law to prevent him from writing such an article, although he admits that in almost all other countries such an article would be illegal and punishable.

I hope some law will be put on the statute books to cover this situation similar to the proposed Jeffers bill against inciting revolt in the armed forces of the United States and the overthrow of the Government by force and violence. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES], who is unavoidably absent from the House today, has prepared a very forceful and able address in support of the pending bill, and, at her request, I ask unanimous consent to insert the speech in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the enactment of H.R. 3673 is a matter of great interest to American women of every political party in every part of the country, because it concerns their rights of full citizenship as American women.

Next to the stigma of disenfranchisement within their own country—now happily removed—they felt that the stigma of unequal nationality rights was the most shameful badge of inferiority which their country could put upon them.

Immediately after the national enfranchisement of women in 1920, women all over America began the work for the removal of the stigma of unequal nationality, and in 1922 the Cable Act, which was intended to equalize the nationality rights of American men and women, was passed by the Congress. I desire to pay sincere tribute to the women and women's organizations whose efforts advanced this great cause to its present status, and I appeal to all organizations of women to immediately enroll in this movement for the welfare of all women.

When the Cable Act was put into operation it was soon found that certain amendments were needed to carry out its intent, and work was begun to draft amendments to carry out its original purpose. Certain nationality officials in the Department of State at once opposed all such amendments on the ground that many changes in our nationality laws were desirable, and they urged that no further changes be made in nationality laws until they could complete the revision which they were then making. In spite of this opposition the Congress did in 1930 and again in 1931 amend this Cable Act toward equalization of our nationality laws on the ground that women, as full citizens, were entitled to the equal application of existing law at once.

Now after 14 years of arduous, unremitting work, an agreement has been reached between all shades of opinion in Congress on the final amendment needed to establish complete equality between American men and women on nationality rights. But, again certain employees of the State Department Nationality Bureau have advanced the identical demand which they have made all these past 14 years, and are insisting that American women wait for justice until they can evolve a new and perfect nationality law. It is frankly admitted by these subordinates that no report can be made in time for action at this session of Congress—which would mean continued unjust application of our present laws for more than a year at the very least.

One of the most cruel wrongs suffered by American women and their children during the late war was the denial of their right—a right possessed by every American man—to transmit nationality to their minor children born abroad. This gross injustice will be removed by H.R. 3673. It is eminently unfair to American women to deny them this act of justice now merely to satisfy minor department executives in the State Department who intend writing the needed changes in the law. Moreover, the changes which they have already suggested will never, in my opinion, be approved by the Congress, since they have determined that hereafter no minor child born abroad may have American nationality transmitted to it unless both its parents are American citizens. Will American men submit to such dictation and meekly surrender their right to transmit their nationality to their children if they have married an alien wife? Furthermore, indefinite postponement of this act of simple justice—that of equalization of our laws as they now stand, leaving further changes in the laws themselves until the commission now studying them has presented its report in some future year—would throw the question of equal nationality into what would be bound to be a bitter fight on new nationality and naturalization laws—a situation women have sought to avoid.

Women did not make the laws now in force. They do not say they are perfect laws. They did not propose the minor changes suggested in the present bill; they were made by the Committee on Immigration. All that women are asking is that our laws, as they stand today, as they are being daily enforced, shall be completely equalized at once without further delay. This is a just request, one that the Congress intended to grant in the original Cable Act of 1922. Justice delayed is justice denied.

Practically every organized group of women in the country stands behind this appeal for equal nationality. The only question at stake now is, Shall this act of fundamental justice be granted now, or must women wait for justice from their country until minor executives of the State Department have decided what new laws they want and have converted Congress to their way of thinking? Will the Congress surrender the fundamental liberties of all American women to the whims of employees of the State Department whose salaries are paid in great part by these same American women whose rights of citizenship these gentlemen oppose? In defending their position of opposition to this equality legislation, a minor executive of the State Department told a group of women:

> You must remember that we have the trouble of applying these laws after Congress makes them, and it gives us a lot of extra trouble whenever a new regulation is made; so we think you women should wait for equality legislation until we have decided upon a new code of nationality law.

I submit that women should not be called upon to endure any longer the stigma of unequal nationality or the injustice of the present laws merely to save a little extra trouble for the Government employees who are paid to enforce the law.

The question of equal nationality is not a party or political question in any sense. It is a measure which every Member of Congress must act upon as a statesman in whose keeping lie the basic rights, as well as the dignity, of all women citizens of our country.

In that spirit, the spirit of fair play to American women, we should pass unanimously this final act of justice to equalize the nationality laws of our Nation. It will be another forward step in the progress of civilization, and it is an obligation we owe to the present and future welfare of our country.

I thank you.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding what has been said about the pending bill, I have the feeling it is an important immigration bill. There is no question that the proviso on the first page, if left in the measure, takes citizenship away from American citizens, and in this respect the bill should be amended.

Under provisions of this bill it will be possible for a girl born in Germany or Poland coming to the United States in infancy acquiring American citizenship by the naturalization of her parent to proceed abroad to her native land, marry a German or a Pole, as the case may be, bring forth children, and have those children termed "American citizens." This notwithstanding the fact that all the rest of the world would call such children of the nationality of their father. Complications inevitably would arise.

In the same way a Negro woman born in the United States, married to a Jamaica British Negro, could be transplanted to Jamaica and her children born there would be called American citizens by our Government, although claimed as British citizens by the British Government.

The bill multiplies complexities of dual nationality. Under present law the child of an American citizen mother and a German father born in the United States is a citizen of the United States. If born abroad, the child is a citizen of the country of his father's nationality. Under the terms of the bill such a child born abroad would have an American nationality for a period of 17 years 11 months and 29 days; then should he be brought to the United States his nationality would be an open question, because the bill would require a continuous 5-year residence in the United States in order to confirm American nationality.

The United States has no business claiming for anyone what it would not willingly grant if a situation should be exactly reversed. Thus we would not tolerate a claim of German nationality in the case of the child born of an American citizen father and a German mother. Why, then, should we undertake to assert a claim of American nationality in the case of the child born of an American mother and a German father unless such child is born within the United States?

The entire question is so intricate and technical that it deserves long and patient study, which apparently was not given in the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization before the bill was reported 11 months ago. In the meantime the President has set up an interdepartmental nationality committee, which the Secretary of State says will be ready shortly to submit its report and recommendations.

Now, in the face of this, and the study that is being made under the instructions of the President, what is the great haste in putting this resolution through at this time? Is it that they fear the committee will not, after a study, be willing to pass this legislation?

Now, under this situation the opposition has been withdrawn because of the endorsement of the Department of Labor and the Department of State. I have read the statements that have come from the Department of State, and I confess that I cannot see where the Department of State has expressed an approval of this bill.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. COX. Has the Department indicated a willingness to take any part whatever in the approval of the bill—in other words, have they done anything but give a qualified withdrawal of express opposition to the bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is correct. The State Department opposition has been withdrawn because they were put under pressure. Evidently some unusual pressure has been brought to bear on the State Department from some source. I believe that if you could get at the facts in the State Department you would find that they are very much in doubt as to the wisdom of passing this bill, regardless of what has been said.

The whole idea of equality of nationality is fallacious. It is in derogation of the dignity and the unity of the family upon which all civilized society rests. From the time when the Moabitish Ruth was gleaning in the fields, the identity of nationality of husband and wife has been a part of the law of nations. Not until the Cable Act of 1922 was this principle abandoned. Neither equal suffrage nor any other condition or circumstance of modern life has altered or eliminated the responsibility of the male for the support and protection of the family. Any step that may be taken in an attempt to minimize this responsibility is a mistake.

If I have an opportunity, I shall offer an amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "States", strike out the colon and all the words following down to and including the semicolon at the end of line 10, inserting in lieu thereof a period after the word "States."

And in support of this amendment I desire to point out that by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution all persons born within the United States are citizens thereof. By section 1993, United States Revised Statutes, a child born abroad, whose father is a citizen and has resided in the United States, is a citizen. By this bill a child born abroad, whose father or mother is a citizen and has resided in the United States, is to be a citizen. It is claimed that this bill will remove a discrimination against citizens of the female sex. If the aim of the bill is to remove a discrimination, why should it create one? If the privilege of conferring nationality by maternity is extended, why is the American citizen woman of oriental race excluded from the benefit? If the privilege is desirable for one woman citizen—white or black—is it not just as desirable for another, though she be yellow? She is equally a citizen. Therefore a distinction in her case is inequitable and unjust. The amendment would strike out a proposed inequality and assure a complete equality. If the body of the section places the sexes on a parity in the matter of the privilege of conferring nationality, then the amendment, striking out the proviso, emphasizes the disposition and intention to create equality.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman will find that he will have some other Members on the floor with him.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am glad of that.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a table showing the census figures which are taken from the statistical abstract (1931), page 4:

	1870	1880	1890	1900	1910	1920	1930
Chinese males					66,856	53,891	59,802
Chinese females					4,675	7,748	15,152
Total	63,199	105,465	107,488	89,863	71,531	61,639	74,954
Japanese males					63,070	72,707	81,771
Japanese females					9,087	38,303	57,063
Total	55	148	2,039	24,326	72,157	111,010	138,834

American citizens of Chinese race admitted and departed, as shown by official reports:

Fiscal year 1933:
Admitted	2,785
Departed	(1)
Fiscal year 1932:
Admitted	3,252
Departed	3,367
Fiscal year 1930:
Admitted	3,220
Departed	3,300

[1] No record.

The above figures illustrate some interesting facts: (1) In the early days it was not the custom of the Chinese to bring their women to the United States; (2) after 1910 the number of females both Chinese and Japanese increased, but the Japanese increase was far greater than the Chinese; (3) the disposition of the Japanese is to remain in the United States, intermarry here, and settle permanently; (4) the disposition of the Chinese is to return to China, even citizen Chinese customarily returning there at intervals and many permanently. While the Chinese population of the United States has declined greatly since 1890, the Japanese population has risen steadily and is still rising notwithstanding exclusion, for the reason that the preponderance of males is not so heavy, intermarriage here is more the settled custom, and the tendency of children born in the United States is to remain here. Hence there is a greater number of citizen Japanese than Chinese. Hence the maintenance of section 1993 is of slight importance to the Japanese and of great importance to the Chinese.

Gentlemen looking over the figures will see that it is a distinct discrimination against the Chinese, and I am wondering whether the House at this time, of all times, wants to get into a situation discriminating against the Chinese. I do not think so.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad, indeed, to speak for this bill. It is a thing that we ought to have done long ago. I am glad that we are doing it now. There is no reason or excuse for having denied equality to the women of this country under the law when we have granted it to them under the Constitution. I was one of those who believed, or hoped, rather, that the adoption of the constitutional amendment giving the right of suffrage to women would of itself automatically operate to bring the law into accord with the constitutional amendment. I was disappointed to find otherwise, and I am glad that we have discovered how it ought to be done.

It was my great pleasure as well as, I hope, some honor, to have been a member of the State Senate of Illinois when we passed the first law of any State east of the Mississippi River giving the women of Illinois the right to vote for President of the United States, and that was back in 1913. Following that, in my judgment, the adoption of the nineteenth amendment resulted. I, therefore, think I am justified in having some pride in participating to a large extent in the success of that movement in my own State.

I have not tried to study the details of this bill; I have not tried to master the intricacies of it. My training as a lawyer has been in abeyance for a great many years, and I expect it will remain there the rest of the time. So I am not trying to say what I know about it, but I am following the committees of this House, because my observation has been that, when a committee studies a proposal such as this, it arrives at a better legal conclusion than I could possibly do alone. Therefore, I am glad to follow the committee in this regard. I am glad to be here as a Member of this body at the present time and repeat to you that my State, Illinois, was the first State east of the Mississippi River to recognize the justice of giving women equality with men, legally as well as otherwise.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The gentleman insists on all equality and equal treatment to men and women in all things?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Miss Smith marries Mr. Jones, and they have a child. Is it a Jones or is it a Smith?

Mr. KELLER. It is both.

Mr. COX. That is exactly what happens under this bill. If the mother marries a German, the child is both an American and a German.

Mr. KELLER. The child has a perfect right in most cases, and I think in this, to take whatever name it pleases. I know in countries existing under the Roman code that sometimes they take the mother's name and sometimes the father's name. I have known brothers, one of whom took the father's name and the other the mother's name. I know of no reason why it should not be done here if they desire to. I think they ought to have that right if they want to. I am glad that I am half my mother, a Bradley, and half my father, a Keller.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman speaks of the Romans. Is it not a fact that 90 percent of the Romans did not have citizenship—they were slaves?

Mr. KELLER. I did not say Romans. I said countries accepting the Roman code—Mexico and the Latin American countries among others.

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman mean to say that under the laws of Illinois a child may select its own name and take its father's name or its mother's name?

Mr. KELLER. It is unquestionably permitted under the laws of the State of Illinois.

Mr. BRUMM. That is not the case in most States.

Mr. KELLER. I do not know about that. I think if the gentleman will go into his own State he will find the courts there will hold that a child may take whatever name it pleases, either its father's or its mother's.

Mr. BRUMM. No. It is a long and rather tedious proceeding to change your name.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. In my State a man has a right to take whatever name he pleases.

Mr. KELLER. Of course.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. But if he asks the court to give him a certain name and the court fixes the name, then he cannot change it without the consent of the court.

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Take the case of an American woman who marries an Englishman. The husband dies. In that case the child of that issue is an alien. With this law it would give the mother the right to bring her own flesh and blood to this country and have her child a citizen of her country.

Mr. KELLER. That is clearly the intention.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Under the present law she cannot do it?

Mr. KELLER. That is correct.

Mr. COX. In other words, they are changing the bill here which as it reads is a bill that deals with the question of nationality and converting it into an immigration bill.

Mr. KELLER. I do not follow that. I do not so understand. It does not change the quota that may come into this country at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DONDERO. I am wondering if the gentleman can enlarge on that phase of this, because the claim has been made that this is an immigration and not a naturalization measure. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to whether it would increase immigration?

Mr. KELLER. I believe so. That is the same question in different form which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] just now asked, a gentleman for whose legal ability I have very great respect. This is not an immigration bill, and does not in any way affect the quota that may come into this country, because there is no provision that lets anybody in anywhere. It is purely a matter affecting citizenship or nationality. It is a just bill because it does give equal nationality to the American mother that the law has heretofore given to the American father. This is the object of the bill; this will be the effect of it; and I certainly am for it with all my heart.

Mr. COX. But it confers nationality which may possibly increase immigration which otherwise could not possibly happen.

Mr. KELLER. There may be exceptions, but they will be the exception rather than the rule. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have been requested by some distinguished and brilliant women in the State of New York, members of the Women's Party, to express their opinion, asking the House to favor this bill; and to express my complete agreement with the terms of the bill.

After all, this is a simple issue. The Government of the United States is in complete control of the power to grant citizenship to people whom it considers qualified for citizenship. Other nations have equal sovereign power. In our country, I think, up to the Civil War we had the doctrine called "indefeasible allegiance"; no man could divest himself of United States citizenship unless he had the consent of the Government of the United States. That was a world-wide doctrine. If I recall correctly, the most famous case arising under this doctrine was that of a man named Williams. Williams while a citizen of the United States went to France, joined the French Army, and fought there as a Frenchman, taking an oath of allegiance to France. He returned to the United States and was charged with violating this law of indefeasible allegiance, was convicted and sentenced to jail, and the sentence was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States. That case, however, caused great resentment in the people of the Nation, and a subsequent Congress repealed the doctrine of indefeasible allegiance in America. As a matter of fact, it was because of that doctrine that we repealed the treaty we had with Russia. True, there was much heat and indignation at the treatment of American citizens in Russia, and that was the provoking cause of the dispute between our country and Russia; but the official claim of America was that America had abandoned the doctrine of indefeasible allegiance and Russia still continued it; that, therefore, the treaty rested on different grounds than those upon which it was negotiated.

We have today the power to grant citizenship no matter what other citizenship a person may hold in another country.

There is but one respect in which the bill should be amended, and that is, in order that citizenship may be conferred upon the child of an American woman married to a foreigner, the taking of the oath of allegiance to the United States by that child should be made a prerequisite. Such a provision should be in the bill, because we do not want to grant citizenship to the child of an American mother simply because it is the child of an American mother unless it chooses to be loyal to America.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. The committee has such an amendment prepared.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I am very happy to hear that; and I therefore feel as though I can approve of the bill in all its features.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. Does not the gentleman think that the amendment on page 2, beginning in line 4, covers his point?

And unless the child, previous to his eighteenth birthday, returns to the United States and resides therein for at least 5 years continuously.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. No; for the reason that the child at that age is under the guardianship of its parents and comes over here merely because they are over here; and it has nothing whatever to do with the mental state of the child. The child might want to take the citizenship of the father, and it should if it feels so disposed. Our doctrine is that citizenship is a matter of free choice by the individual who is otherwise qualified. We give an alien the right to become an American citizen under certain conditions; and we give an American citizen the right to become a citizen of any country without offense to our Government. No child of any person contemplated by the terms of this bill, however, should be allowed to become a citizen of this country under circumstances which do not require it to take an oath of allegiance. The father may be a Bohemian or a Hungarian, and the child might prefer to take Bohemian or Hungarian nationality. In that event there would be a dispute between sovereigns. That should be determined by the free oath of the child.

If this amendment is adopted, I see no objection to the bill, for it simply grants the mother the right, if she is a citizen of the United States, to have her child become an American citizen on its oath of allegiance to this country plus a residence of 5 years, if the child wants to become an American citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in my State, of course, we have no close contact with those problems of immigration; but as a matter of simple justice it seems to me that what is today being written into the law ought always to have been the law, once the Congress took cognizance of this problem.

I see no reason why I, as a man, should be accorded a privilege by law which is withheld from my wife if she wishes the same privilege. We have been progressing for a great many years toward that realm where men and women stand alike at least before the bar of justice and in the eyes of the law.

A moment ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania proclaimed the doctrine that through the years it has been the prerogative of the male to look out for the family subsistence, to care for its welfare.

This will not change that. They did not write that according to law. It is in the nature of things that man will always be the provider for the family, or he ought to be; but when it comes to a matter of justice as to family rights, I cannot see any reason why we ought to refuse to the women the privilege that man has accorded to himself. In that measure of justice here today we are about to write into the laws of this Nation that the mother may bring her children here, a privilege that we have prior to this time accorded to the men.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, this is the second general bill that has appeared before the present Congress on which I have had anything to say. I have not inflicted myself on the House, largely because I take up so much time doing the chores of the House in the reports of the Claims Committee and the District Committee.

This bill in its general purpose is like a great many other bills, it is highly desirable, but the rider on this bill in the form of the proviso on the first page, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has called attention, is highly dangerous and the harm that may come from this proviso will more than offset any benefits that anybody may derive under the general purposes of the bill. It was not thought of originally when the bill was introduced. No one thought when this bill was introduced of any further discrimination against orientals.

Today the Pacific is tense. Today the statesmen of the world are meeting and they are highly alarmed over the Asiatic situation and in Japan declaring an Asiatic Monroe Doctrine which she claims she is exercising on account of just such situations as these.

If the womanhood of America want anything from Congress, they want international accord build up. They want movements directed toward international peace. They do not want a note of international discord uttered in this Congress. This proviso is pregnant with international discord, for not only do we insult by this bill and legislative enactments the womanhood of oriental blood who happen to be citizens of this country and thus reflect on the Orient, and in no sharper manner can you reflect on them than by reflecting on their womanhood, but you absolutely take away the present rights of an American citizen of oriental blood, an American male oriental who is an American citizen, who under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment is guaranteed the same rights as any other American citizen. When we take this away from him by this proviso we are doing something unconstitutional.

If this proviso were out of the bill and the bill could meet the dilemma propounded by the alert gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], it might work out some decent purpose, but until this proviso is eliminated there is danger. Last year on the floor of this House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] and myself called attention to the dangers lurking in a certain bill—the press censorship bill. At that time we were only successful in getting 29 to support us, but that very night the President of the United States insisted that the bill not pass the Senate. I predict that if the House of Representatives passes this bill with this objectionable proviso in it, in these tense days, before the sun sets, the President will use his good offices to have the proviso eliminated. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize, and probably it will be an anticlimax to the able way in which the preceding gentleman presented the subject, the provision here at the bottom of page 1, which reads, Provided, That if one parent is an alien and such alien is not of a race ineligible to citizenship.

That, in these times of excitement and distress in the world, is a direct stab at the orientals. It denies them the right that they have today, and I cannot think for one instant that this House will be so far lost to its duty as to pass such a bill.

This amendment was slipped in at the eleventh hour. I hope the committee will reach that height of justice and common sense that of their own will they will move to strike out the provision. If they do not do so, I, as a Representative coming from the Pacific coast, will certainly offer the amendment. There is no conceivable way in which I can understand that this direct insult should be put upon these orientals, and that we should at this time take away from them rights that they have now, especially with the world in the condition it is today, and with all these troubles in the Orient. If we are so foolish as to let that stay in the bill, I do not think the President will approve it. It violates his great principle of being good neighbors. This objectionable provision will not make for good neighbors. It will make for bad neighbors, and neighbors who are already somewhat irritated.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MCCORMACK. It would affect very, very few people also.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Certainly. It is just a play on a worn-out issue on the Pacific coast; that is all it is, because it would not affect any great number. It is continuing an old feeling that no longer exists.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I desire to make sure that the House understands precisely what the gentleman is attempting to say at the present time. A male Chinese or Japanese citizen in California who goes to China and there marries a native wife——

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. That is exactly what we want him to do. We do not want him to marry an American woman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Under the existing law he can confer citizenship upon his children, but he cannot bring his wife back. That is the statement of existing law. Under the same law a Chinese girl who is a citizen of this country may go to China, marry a native over there, can bring him back, but she cannot bring her children back to this country. All that is sought to be done is to prevent the Chinese or Japanese American citizen from going over and marrying a native and conferring nationality upon the children of the union. There is not a great deal involved.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. No; it is only a play on prejudice.

Where I say the proviso contracts the rights which these orientals have now is in the fact that the father can bring his child back to this country with his Chinese wife, but under this fool proviso both the father and the wife have to be American citizens. You contract the rights of these orientals in that you require both of them to be American citizens.

I hope the committee will do the square thing about this proviso and offer an amendment striking it out of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BURNHAM].

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of legislation, just legislation, adequate legislation, covering the matter of immigration, although I happened to squeak in before this country had adopted any immigration laws.

I had intended to discuss the phase of the situation so ably covered by my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN], but I will let it suffice to read an excerpt from a letter which I received from a Chinese citizen, a very good friend of mine and a very able fellow. He says:

Many thanks for your prompt reply to our telegram of April 12 relative to the Dickstein bill, H.R. 3673.

The primary purpose of this bill is to complete provisions of the Cable Act of 1922 so as to establish complete equality between American men and women in the matter of citizenship for themselves and for their children. But the provision in the first paragraph of the bill takes away the American citizenship of foreign-born children whose parents are not both American citizens, and this applies directly to the Chinese-American citizens.

There is the crux of the whole thing. He goes on as follows:

An American citizen of Chinese descent is virtually forced to go back to China to seek a mate of his own race because the limited number of Chinese women in the country does not supply the demand. Moreover, our people are opposed to interracial marriages. In fact, the laws of 11 States forbid interracial marriage. The Immigration Act of 1924 has definitely excluded Chinese wives of American citizens because the spouse is an alien ineligible to citizenship. When one of our citizens goes to China to marry he must leave his wife there; consequently the children of such couples are born in China.

If I have made myself clear, Mr. BURNHAM, I trust that you can see that the subject provision in paragraph 1 of the Dickstein bill is highly discriminatory and will work great hardship to the American citizens of the Chinese race.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one half minute.

Mr. BURNHAM. May I say that I have discussed this matter with one of the able Under Secretaries of State, who informs me that there is a committee of 1 person from the State Department, 1 from the Department of Justice, and 1 from the Department of Labor who are formulating at this time a bill which they hope to present to the Congress at this session, and the State Department is opposed to this Dickstein bill.

Mr. MILLARD. Who said that?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BURNHAM. One of the under secretaries of State.

Mr. MILLARD. That is not so, because we have a letter here showing they are in favor of it.

Mr. KRAMER. May I inform the gentleman that the State Department has assisted in the writing of this measure?

Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from California, I will quote from a memorandum sent me by the Under Secretary of State only a few days ago, wherein he states with reference to H.R. 3673 as follows:

Needless to say, the provision of the bill quoted above is very confusing. This confusion is due to faulty drafting and perhaps some confusion of thought.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELTSE].

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order on the processing tax, or the jute tax in particular, and also to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include as a part of my remarks the application of the California Farm Bureau Federation for a reduction or a recession of the tax on jute bags.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, what is the request of the gentleman from California?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RANDOLPH). The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to speak out of order and to extend his remarks by including therein the application of the California Farm Bureau Federation before the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PROCESSING TAXES—JUTE TAX

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Chairman, a great injustice is being imposed upon all the farmers in the northern and western portions of the United States, and particularly upon those of the great Northwest, through the medium of the jute tax. The farmers of these areas are subsidizing the cotton growers.

Along with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] I confess my chagrin in finding that Congress has delegated its taxing power to a single official—the Secretary of Agriculture, contrary to section 8 of article I of the Constitution, which provides "that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes."

Congress delegated this power, under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, whereunder it is provided:

PROCESSING TAX

SEC. 9. (a) To obtain revenue for extraordinary expenses * * * there shall be levied processing taxes as herein provided. When the Secretary of Agriculture determines that rental or benefit payments are to be made with respect to any basic agricultural commodity, he shall proclaim such determination, and a processing tax shall be in effect with respect to such commodity from the beginning of the marketing year thereof next following the date of such proclamation.

It is to be noted from this section that this processing tax attaches to a declared basic agricultural commodity, but that is not half the story. The taxing arm of the Secretary of Agriculture was lengthened to a startling degree by a later provision in the act. What appeared to be a comparatively harmless provision is now proving to be a heavy and sharp weapon in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. By his dictum a tax aggregating millions and millions of dollars is being imposed upon the American farmer.

Under section (d) of section 15 of the act to which I have referred it is provided:

The Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain from time to time whether the payment of the processing tax upon any basic agricultural commodity is causing or will cause to the processors thereof disadvantages in competition from competing commodities by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds, after investigation and due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, that such disadvantages in competition exist, or will exist, he shall proclaim such finding. The Secretary shall specify in this proclamation the competing commodity and the compensating rate of tax on the processing thereof necessary to prevent such disadvantages in competition. Thereafter there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon the first domestic processing of such competing commodity a tax, to be paid by the processor, at the rate specified, until such rate is altered pursuant to a further finding under this section, or the tax or rate thereof on the basic agricultural commodity is altered or terminated. In no case shall the tax imposed upon such competing commodity exceed that imposed per equivalent unit, as determined by the Secretary, upon the basic agricultural commodity.

We find then that on December 1, 1933, the Secretary of Agriculture imposed a tax, under the guise of a compensating tax, on jute fabric amounting to 2.9 cents per pound on the first domestic processing of jute fabric into bags. The reason given for imposing this tax was—

That the payment of the processing tax upon cotton is causing, and will cause, to the processors thereof, disadvantages in competition from jute fabric and jute yarn, by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof.

Excessive shifts from the use of cotton to jute bags is alleged to be the reason for the imposition of the tax. In equity jurisprudence there is a maxim that where the reason for the rule fails the rule also fails. In this matter the reason for the tax fails, therefore, the tax should be removed. There have been and will be no excessive shifts.

This processing tax has become oppressive to the people of the State of California and the Pacific Northwest. They consider it illegal, unjust, and discriminatory. By it the farmers of California will be burdened with a tax of close to $900,000 a year, the potato growers of Idaho with $275,000, Colorado farmers with $100,000 per year, the farmers of Washington with $6 for each car of vegetables and $8 to $10 on each car of grain. All of this money in most cases is not returned to the distressed farmers, but must come out of their pockets. Fortunately I am in a position to let these farmers speak for themselves. From the California Farm Bureau Federation I have just received a copy of its application filed with the A.A.A. requesting the elimination of the processing tax on burlap bags used for agricultural commodities. Shortly I shall ask leave to insert in the RECORD a portion of this application as a part of my remarks, but before I do so I here make special appeal to the 50 Members from California, Idaho, Maine, Montana, Nevada, North and South Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and to the Members from other States where jute bags are used for agricultural commodities to carefully read and digest this application and irrefutable arguments. I would also call your attention to the able statements of Senators JOHNSON and BORAH appearing in the RECORD on pages 5892 to 5896. Your constituents are vitally concerned, and if you would render them a real service, you will go into action, and you may depend upon me to be in the fight with you.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to insert a portion of the application referred to in the RECORD.

BEFORE THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

APPLICATION FOR THE ELIMINATION OF THE PROCESSING TAX ON BURLAP BAGS USED FOR AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES, FROM JUTE REGULATIONS MADE BY THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE, WITH THE APPROVAL OF THE PRESIDENT, UNDER THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT, EFFECTIVE DECEMBER 1, 1933

Application of the California Farm Bureau Federation

Interests represented by applicant

The California Farm Bureau Federation is an incorporated, voluntary, mutual, nonprofit association, representing all agricultural interests within the State of California. It is organized for the purpose of protecting the economic, social, and educational interests of farmers; it is nonpartisan in its viewpoint, and is equally sympathetic toward all branches of agriculture.

Regulation complained of

On December 1, 1933, Mr. H. A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, in pursuance of the authority vested in him by section 15 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, imposed a processing tax on jute fabric amounting to 2.9 cents per pound on the first domestic processing of jute fabric into bags. The reason given for imposing this tax was "that the payment of the processing tax upon cotton is causing, and will cause, to the processors thereof disadvantages in competition from jute fabric and jute yarn, by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof."

Since the date this tax was first levied, numerous complaints of unfair discrimination against them have been filed with us by growers of various agricultural commodities. These farmers have requested us to present their views to the administration, in the hope that either it would grant immediate relief on the basis of the facts herein presented, or would set a further hearing in this matter on the Pacific coast at an early date.

The effect of the compensatory jute tax on western agriculture

The compensatory tax based on jute fabric manufactured into bags has imposed a great burden upon farmers in the Pacific Northwest without corresponding benefits to the cotton branch of the industry. Barley, beans, grain sorghums, nuts, oats, onions, peas, potatoes, rice, and wheat are all grown in large quantities throughout this area, and are now and always have been moved in burlap bags. Bulk handling of these commodities is not extensively practiced in the rural sections of the Pacific Northwest and it is, therefore, customary to sell these agricultural products in burlap bags, usually of 100-pound capacity or greater. The selling price of grain, beans, rice, etc., is based on the delivery of the product in a bag, and in those rare cases where the commodities are delivered in bulk, the cost of a suitable burlap bag is deducted from the current price paid the farmer.

The producers of each and every one of these commodities has suffered from extreme price recessions during the past 4 years, and the amount of economic recovery to date in many instances is much less than that now attained by cotton growers.

Table I, next following, shows the farm prices paid during the past 5 years for the principal California farm commodities using bag containers. It shows that for each of these commodities the price recovery is far from being accomplished. Table I shows further that the cost of the customary burlap container has been so increased by the so-called "compensatory tax" that it now costs practically the same or more than it did during the year of highest farm prices during the period in question. There is, therefore, no justification for the assessing of this tax on the ground of "ability to pay", nor is there any legal ground within the Agricultural Adjustment Act on which this exaction may be based.

The processing tax on jute applicable to bags used for the agricultural commodities named in table I is unreasonable, unfair, and unjust. Section 5 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which is the authority relied upon by the Administration for the levying of this tax, states: "The Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain from time to time whether the payment of the processing tax upon any basic commodity is causing or will cause to the processors thereof disadvantages in competition from competing commodities by reason of excessive shifts in consumption between such commodities or products thereof."

Regardless of the relationship between the price of cotton and burlap, these agricultural commodities have always moved in burlap bags if the quantity exceeded 50 pounds. Obviously, since cotton bags never have been used for these crops (except in an insignificant amount for experimental purposes), regardless of the extremely low cotton prices which have obtained in the past, there can be no justification for assuming that there has been or will be a "shift in consumption" resulting from a process tax being placed upon cotton. The application of a tax on bags used for these purposes is, therefore, a clear violation of the intent of the act and merely results in burdening agriculture with higher costs of production.

Farmers growing most of the commodities named are not receiving Government assistance, except in a limited way; and since there have been no important price recoveries, these growers find themselves in the dangerous position of being between a nether stone of rising production costs and a stationary upper stone of farm-commodity prices. They are not only unwilling to pay the tax because it is unfairly assessed, but also because they are unable to do so. Some relief is being sought through the reuse of old bags. The majority of growers, however, are forced through trade and operating practices to use new bags, and for them there is no escape from the tax.

It is impossible under present economic conditions for these farmers to pass this tax on. They are faced with the problem of overproduction or failure of markets to absorb normal amounts. They are in most cases getting little if anything above out-of-pocket costs. This tax is, therefore, a direct levy upon returns to growers which are already insufficient to maintain economic existence.

Agricultural relief cannot be accomplished by taxing one portion of agriculture in order to assist another. Since cotton bags have never been used on the Pacific coast (nor elsewhere in the United States in recent years for containers of the commodities mentioned), a "compensatory tax" levied on burlap bags used for agricultural purposes is unreasonable, and in effect becomes merely a revenue tax placed upon agriculture generally for the benefit of one group, namely, cotton.

The tax on burlap bags used by agriculture is not legally assessed. It is levied in direct violation of the clear and unmistakable intent of the act. It reduces the purchasing power of farmers without widening the market for his products. This is clearly in contradiction of the purposes plainly stated in section 2 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which are to establish and maintain such balance between production and consumption of agricultural commodities and such marketing conditions therefor as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period (Aug. 1909–July 1914).

The unfairness of the tax on bags used by other branches of agriculture than cotton is further accentuated by the fact that the cotton industry has been exempted from a tax on the jute which it uses for bagging cotton. The jute regulations also were so drafted that burlap bags used for wool were exempted. Cotton bagging or cotton bags for wool had never been used in the past for either of these purposes, and the administration quite properly gave recognition to this fact in the regulations. Growers of grain, beans, potatoes, onions, and nuts can see no reason for not being given the same recognition. The facts relating to their use of burlap bags are identical with those of cotton and wool. California farmers on the average use annually about 44,000,000 burlap bags for purposes for which cotton has never been used. The processing tax on the jute fabric used in their construction constitutes under present economic conditions a very real burden. The tax totals for California alone close to $900,000 per year. It touches practically every branch of agriculture practiced in this State. Table II shows the number used, and the tax burden by commodities.

Factors governing the use of jute bags

As has already been pointed out, jute bags have been used in the Pacific Northwest exclusively for bagging certain agricultural commodities. The reasons for the choice of burlap are not the same for each commodity, but they all point to the conclusion that there has been and will be no shift from jute to cotton, unless the so-called "compensatory tax" is increased to such a point as to actually make the use of jute impossible.

Each of the principal commodities will now be considered.

Barley, rice, grain sorghums, and wheat are almost exclusively handled in burlap bags throughout the Pacific Northwest. There is a small amount of bulk handling, but even in this case, as previously mentioned, the selling price is based on the cost of placing the grain in bags by the purchaser. Grain in bags is customarily stored in high piles in warehouses. It is necessary, due to trade practices, to sample each sack. For this purpose a metal tryer is inserted through the fabric. When the tryer is removed the hole in a burlap bag tends to close up without tearing. A cotton bag, on the other hand, will not stand this practice unless made of exceptionally heavy fabric.

[1] Seconds.

Suitable cotton bags are now and always have been too costly for this purpose. Piles made of cheap cotton bags would soon break down, owing to leakage under the usual operating practices.

The cost of a cotton bag capable of standing customary uses would be about double the cost of a satisfactory burlap bag.

Jute grain bags are not reused for rice, wheat, barley, or beans; and since they are considered as part of the cost of production, it is essential that as cheap a bag be used as possible. Bags of grain when exported are deliberately "bled" after loading into the ship so that the cargo will load better. Obviously, only cheap bags could be used under such circumstances.

The same size and weight of bag are used for barley, rice, and wheat and grain sorghum. It is of a special size (22 inches by 36 inches) and made of 10-ounce burlap. It holds from 100 to 120 pounds, depending upon the commodity. This size of bag was developed through long experience because it lent itself more readily to piling than the sizes used for other commodities. Only burlap bags have ever been used for these commodities.

Onions in this section are customarily moved in burlap bags of two sizes—18 inches by 32 inches and 24 inches by 37 inches—made of 5½- or 8-ounce burlap, and will hold 50 pounds and 100 pounds of onions, respectively. No cotton bags are used for this purpose.

Potatoes also require a cheap bag as the container is considered a part of the cost of production. The weight of the container is deducted from the gross weight in determining the price paid for all agricultural commodities. Except for a very small quantity of cotton bags used experimentally, jute bags have been, and are now being, used exclusively. For this purpose, a bag 23 by 36 inches made of 8-ounce burlap and capable of holding 100 pounds of potatoes is the customary container.

For walnuts and almonds, burlap bags made of 10-ounce burlap 30 by 40 inches, having a capacity of 100 pounds, are used almost exclusively. A few bags of a smaller size have been used, mainly for advertising purposes or as holiday specials, but these also have been made of burlap. No cotton bags are used for nuts.

Peas and oats move almost entirely in second-hand burlap bags. Cotton bags are never used for this purpose. A processing tax on new bags, however, has increased the cost of second-hand bags materially. These crops are, therefore, also affected.

Bags used for feeds (mixed and mill) are ordinarily made of 9- or 10-ounce burlap 23 by 36 inches, having a capacity of 100 pounds. A few of these bags are made of cotton where it is desired to use a fancy brand. For the usual run-of-mill feeds, however, the burlap bag is used almost exclusively, as it is entirely satisfactory and always has been a cheaper container than a suitable bag made of cotton. It will be noted that in this category, the size of the bag is different from that used for other commodities which used jute exclusively.

Fertilizers ordinarily move in 9-ounce burlap bags 21 by 36 inches, having a capacity of 100 pounds.

Alfalfa meal is handled exclusively in burlap bags constructed of 9½-ounce burlap, 30 by 45 inches, having a capacity of 100 pounds.

A summary of data relating to the use of bags by the agricultural industry in California is given in table III.

The use of bags in California, as indicated in table III, appears to be similar to that in other parts of the country for the commodities considered. The use of burlap bags for handling grain is, however, a method peculiar to the Pacific Northwest. In other parts of the country the other commodities named used burlap bags for the same reasons as they are used in California.

Character of relief sought

The definition of "bags" contained in the jute regulations complained of herein is unreasonable, unjust, and discriminatory to the entire agricultural industry, excepting growers of wool and cotton. We, therefore, earnestly urge the administration to grant relief to growers of other agricultural commodities in one of the following ways, or in such other manner as the administration in its judgment may deem advisable:

(1) By removing the 2.9 cents per pound processing tax on all jute bag containers having a nominal capacity of 50 pounds or more.

(2) Abate the processing tax on both cotton and burlap bags having a nominal capacity of 50 pounds or more.

(3) Remove the processing tax on burlap bags having a capacity of 50 pounds or more when used as containers of alfalfa meal, barley, beans, fertilizer, grain sorghum, nuts, onions, potatoes, rice, and wheat.

The first suggestion will grant relief to those growers of agricultural commodities who do not use cotton bags without prejudicing the use of cotton bags except to a very limited extent. It is unreasonable to penalize farmers who use burlap bags exclusively merely because 1 percent to a maximum of 25 percent, in some cases, of the total bags manufactured of a certain size happen to be made of cotton, particularly when in most of the cases the cotton bag would be used, regardless of the price of burlap. Likewise, it is unjust to farmers to penalize them in order to hold for cotton so small a portion of the total bag business, if this business has been obtained owing to cotton prices being so low as to actually fail to pay costs of production. The loss of such business to burlap could not be deemed an excessive shift.

In order to present a broader picture of the effect of suggestion number (1), we have prepared a tabulation showing the total number of cotton and burlap bags used in the United States having a capacity of 50 pounds or greater. While in some instances it has been necessary to estimate the quantity of bags of a certain size used for a commodity, these estimates are usually of such small magnitude as not to affect materially the accuracy of the statement.

Out of approximately 560,000,000 bags, less than 20 percent as a maximum could possibly be considered as being competitive. Assuming for the moment that they are all competitive, then it appears that the administration has levied a tax on agriculture of over $11,000,000 in order to collect a tax of $2,000,000 on bags which might be deemed taxable under the law. It is also a fact that included in this $11,000,000 of tax is a levy of $4,500,000 on burlap bags which never were in any manner or degree competitive with cotton.

In arriving at the $2,182,600 tax on so-called "competitive bags", the tax was applied to all cotton bags in the class. Obviously, many cotton bags are used for purposes for which burlap is not suitable, and these are, therefore, noncompetitive and should be eliminated. A true picture would likely show that little over 10 percent of the bags listed are actually competitive. A $9 unjust tax should not be levied in order to collect $1 that may be due.

The second proposal is offered if in the opinion of the administration processors of the small percentage of cotton bags used for containers having a capacity of 50 pounds or more should be fully protected against any possible shift in consumption. Again, we insist that this should not be done at the expense of other branches of agriculture which use enormous quantities of burlap bags exclusively. Full protection for cotton processors can be obtained by abating the tax on the small quantity of cotton bags used in the classification of 50-pound capacity and over without jeopardizing the interests of cotton growers or other agricultural commodities.

The third suggestion will entirely meet the requirements of Pacific coast agriculture. It does not in any way injure the cotton interests or the working of the cotton plan. It fully complies with the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Section 15 (d) of the act does not specify the means of applying a compensatory processing tax. The suggestion merely goes one step further than the exemptions now permitted under present jute regulations, which defines bags as "bags are all bags less than 6 feet in length and less than 3 feet in width made from jute fabrics." We ask merely that the regulations be modified so as to properly exempt all those commodities which have been heretofore moved exclusively in jute containers. We are asking for California agriculture the same treatment that has been accorded to cotton and wool growers; namely, the recognition of the fact that where a commodity has moved practically 100 percent in jute containers in the past it is entitled to be exempted from the payment of a compensatory tax on the grounds that there has been and will be no shift from the use of cotton to jute.

We most earnestly urge your careful consideration of the matters set forth in this application * * *. We ask that if possible immediate relief be granted by the removal of the tax on jute bags, which are not now and never have been competitive with cotton bags, and that if this action is not possible without a hearing, that such hearing be granted at the earliest possible date and be held in San Francisco, so that western agriculture may appear and be fully heard.

Dated at Berkeley, Calif., this 31st day of March 1934.

Respectfully submitted.

CALIFORNIA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
By R. W. BLACKBURN, President.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MARLAND].

Mr. MARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order on subsistence homesteads.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARLAND. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, last week with your unanimous consent I addressed you on the subject of State cooperation in our national recovery program, calling your particular attention to one phase of the recovery program in which our States could best assist—that is the program to provide our unemployed with subsistence homesteads.

I again solicit your attention to the same subject, as it is of pressing moment to every State in the United States.

During the past winter we had as high as 3,350,000 families receiving unemployment relief from the National Government.

An average of 11 percent of all the families in the United States were unfortunate victims of unemployment.

One State was fortunate enough to have only 2 percent of its families on the relief rolls. Other States had as high as 27 percent of their families living on the allowance provided by the Federal Relief Administration.

My fellow members of the Committee, think of this for a moment.

The Federal Emergency Relief Administration took care of as many as 15,000,000 of our fellow citizens at one time last winter, and 11 percent of our population was on the relief rolls for many months.

We represent these people in Congress as well as our more fortunate constituents.

It is unthinkable what would have happened to them had not provision been made by this Congress in the appropriations to the Public Works Administration and the Federal Relief Administration.

I cannot imagine wholesale famine in our land of superabundance.

But, with all our wise provision and the excellent work of our Federal agencies, we still witnessed much deprivation, destitution, and near-starvation.

In spite of all we have done under the National Recovery Act to promote national recovery—compelling shorter hours of work, to spread the work and to effect higher wages in industry—and in spite of the public work being done by the Public Works Administration, we still have over 10,000,000 men and women out of employment.

We still have over 3,000,000 families without proper means of support.

There can be no doubt that we must use every effort possible to provide employment for these families.

National policy, national safety demand it, and common humanity compels it.

Most of this unemployment today is in the cities of our country, the big cities and small towns.

This is the result of the great migration of our people from the farms to the cities which occurred as a consequence of the World War.

This migration began in 1914 and continued for 15 years, in which time over 20,000,000 American people moved from rural America to urban America.

I described this movement to you and its causes at some length last week and will not dwell upon it now.

Ten million of these people are still in our cities and towns and are unemployed.

With improved machinery in our mills, with mass production and labor-saving devices there is little prospect of their being needed again in productive occupations.

In fact, I can see no hope for their ever being productively employed in our cities, unless we should again have a great war, calling for the speeding-up of industry in the manufacture of war munitions.

To my mind, the one and only obvious solution for their problem is to return them to rural environment—return them to agricultural pursuits whence they came when they were called to meet the war-time demand for labor in the cities and the demand for labor which followed the war in the years of the building boom.

It is no small undertaking to return 3,000,000 families to the country; place every one of them on a little self-supporting farm, with fertile acres, a small house, a cowshed, a piggery, a hennery, and get each family settled in comfort and self-supporting independence.

But this is the very thing that must be done.

In the long run it will be much less expensive than trying to support them in idleness in the cities.

Four billion dollars, plus a lot of planning, plus good executive ability and hard work will get the job done, and will establish these people as self-supporting, self-respecting American families.

To feed, clothe, and shelter them in idleness in the cities would cost that much and more every 3 years.

It is a great undertaking. Every State in the Union must do its part; must cooperate in the establishment of subsistence homestead projects.

In some States the problem will be less difficult than in others.

In my State, while we had as high as 150,000 families on relief rolls last winter, I do not believe there are over half that many today, and some of these are on single-crop farms, where their poverty has resulted from either crop failure or low prices of their crops.

These destitute farmers must be rehabilitated; the size of their farms reduced, by purchase, in some cases; their planting diversified; their farm restocked; their houses repaired; new tools, machinery, clothes, shoes, and seed provided.

Probably not more than 50,000 families in my State now living in cities and towns need be returned to farms.

But something near that number should be furnished subsistence homestead farms as soon as possible, for they can find no employment where they are, and we are feeding them in idleness.

They need a 5- to 40-acre farm, depending upon its location and character—with a house, tools, machinery, livestock, seed, and some guidance to make them self-supporting.

These families can and will pay for these homesteads—over a period of years—20 years—and neither Nation nor State need be out one penny as a result of these subsistence homestead projects.

In fact, every State and the Nation will be richer thereby—to the extent of millions of happy, independent, self-supporting citizens.

Members of the Committee, you will all leave Washington shortly to return to your homes in your several States. There are 435 of us from 48 States.

Let us each make ourselves fully familiar with the developments up to date in the Division of Subsistence Homesteads in the Department of the Interior before we leave Washington. Let us know what they have done; what they are doing—what projects are under way in each State and what has been learned in the development of each of these projects.

When we get home, let us tell our people of the important place of subsistence homesteads in our national economy.

Let us urge the election of State officers from Governor down—State legislators, senators and representatives, county officials—who understand, sympathize, and are prepared to cooperate with this great and necessary national movement.

This back-to-the-land movement must succeed, or we are all lost.

We cannot continue long with 10,000,000 of our people unemployed.

No nation can exist with that percentage of its people pauperized.

Poverty must be reduced to the vanishing point, if not entirely banished.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I urge you, each of you, to put your shoulders to the wheel and help in this undertaking.

Your great opportunity to help lies in preaching the doctrine that subsistence-homestead planning has a great place in our national economy as a solution for part of our unemployment problem and to preach that it is the duty of Governors, State officials, and legislators to cooperate in their several States with the National Government in the developments of such national projects and their duty at the same time to go ahead with State economic planning for subsistence-homestead projects of their own.

In some States this can and should be supplemented by the building of small industries in conjunction with homestead projects—small industries, little factories—using the natural resources of the State to manufacture things for home consumption and furnishing employment to the homesteaders.

We here in Congress may differ at times somewhat in our ideas as to national industrial planning and agricultural planning. I personally do not feel that all our legislation has been wise.

But surely there can be no difference of opinion among us as to the desirability, the necessity of adopting the program for establishing subsistence homesteads, returning these poor, stranded fellow citizens of ours back to the land, where they may enjoy the fruits thereof, produced by the sweat of their brows.

These good, unfortunate Americans do not want to continue to eat the bread of idleness forever. They want only the chance to earn their livelihood.

It is up to us—every one of us—to see that they get that opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, this is probably the last occasion upon which I, as a Member, will address you and this House.

I am not a candidate for reelection to Congress—I will not be back with you next year.

I am offering myself to the people of Oklahoma as a candidate for Governor of the State.

I am doing this because I feel that as chief executive of my State I can best put my long years of business training and experience at their service.

The subsistence-homestead development must be encouraged in Oklahoma.

Fifty thousand families in our cities need the opportunity to earn their own living on the land.

The single-crop farmer must be aided to diversify his crops, and cooperative marketing must be provided for his surplus.

Small industries must be fostered and encouraged to develop our natural resources.

We need cotton mills, garment factories, flour mills, canneries, glass factories, furniture factories, tanneries, harness and shoe factories, and others too numerous to mention.

And we have the raw material to supply these plants with cheap fuel—coal, oil, gas—in abundance.

We must develop small natural-resource industries in Oklahoma to make our State more self-contained.

Manufacturers in large cities who are planning to move their plants would do well to study the natural resources of Oklahoma.

We are preeminently an agricultural and oil-producing State. Nearly everything we produce we ship out of the State, and nearly everything we consume we ship in. This must be corrected. We must have a better balance between agriculture and industry.

Oklahoma labor has produced from its soil in the past 30 years products which sold for over $12,000,000,000 and spent more than its income in the purchase of manufactured products of other States.

Mr. Chairman, I will no longer detain the House with a discussion of Oklahoma's economic problem.

I will only say that I am leaving the House, where I have enjoyed my work and the friendship of my coworkers, to run for Governor, because the financial and economic situation of my State is so grave and requires the type of business leadership I feel that I can supply.

We are one of the richest States of the Union in natural resources. We have produced billions of wealth and do still produce fabulously, but we are facing bankruptcy—State, county, municipal, as well as personal—because of bad government, lack of business management of State affairs, and entire failure of economic planning.

Oklahoma had 27 percent of its families on the Federal relief rolls at one time last winter.

Oklahoma produced last year enough food for 10 times her own population but could not feed her own. Seven hundred and fifty thousand citizens of Oklahoma ate the bread of national charity last winter, while wheat produced on Oklahoma farms made enough flour for 10,000,000 loaves of bread per day for other people.

Children were undernourished in Oklahoma last winter. Yet Oklahoma cows gave 8,000,000 pints of milk per day which was sold out of the State.

Mr. Chairman, it is these conditions I feel it is my duty to attempt to correct.

They must be corrected.

We cannot abide famine in our land of abundance.

If the people of Oklahoma will have me as their Governor, I expect to give the rest of my public life in their service.

And, consequently, Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I bid you good-bye and thank you for your attention.

CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, general debate having been exhausted, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1993 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1993. Any child heretofore born or hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose father or mother at the time of the birth of such child was or is a citizen of the United States, is declared to be a citizen of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to any such child unless the citizen father or citizen mother, as the case may be, has resided in the United States previous to the birth of such child."

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "child," strike out the words "heretofore born or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "was or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "States", insert "Provided, That if one parent is an alien, such alien is not of a race ineligible to citizenship."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, this committee amendment is one that several gentlemen have called attention to in general debate. The amendment discriminates against American citizens of oriental birth and generally discriminates against the oriental races.

As I said in general debate, I think in the interest of international comity the committee ought to vote down this particular amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were 57 ayes and 28 noes.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-nine Members present, a quorum.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. TABER. I make the point of order that the demand comes too late.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the demand comes too late.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard? The Chair announced the result of the vote on the division, whereupon the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN] made the point of no quorum. We have had no opportunity to ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the demand for tellers comes too late. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "child" insert "and unless the child, previous to his eighteenth birthday, returns to the United States and resides therein for at least 5 years continuously."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. MILLARD: Page 2, at the end of line 6, strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "and unless within 6 months after the child's twenty-first birthday he or she shall take the oath of allegiance to the United States of America as prescribed by the Bureau of Naturalization."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEIDEMAN: Page 1, line 7, after the word "mother", insert "or both", and on line 10, page 1, between the words "alien" and "such", insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment offered by Mr. MILLARD read again? Some of us did not hear it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. That amendment has already been adopted.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I object. We have already adopted it.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: Page 2, line 4, after the word "child", strike out the following: "and unless the child, previous to his eighteenth birthday, returns to the United States and resides therein for at least 5 years continuously" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and unless the child, in cases where one of the parents is an alien, comes to the United States and resides therein for a period of 5 years continuously previous to his eighteenth birthday."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to clarify the doubt expressed by the State Department as to whether or not under the amendment as adopted by the committee the child would have to complete its residence of 5 years prior to its eighteenth birthday, or merely beginning, and in order to make it certain that the child would not only have to begin its residence prior to its eighteenth birthday but also complete it prior to his eighteenth birthday, this amendment is offered, so that there will be no doubt about it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What is the gentleman's interpretation as to how the amendment previously adopted, offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] would fare. Where will that amendment be?

Mr. DIES. It will follow the amendment that I propose.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then it will have to be corrected, because Mr. MILLARD's amendment was to strike out the period after the word "continuously" and insert certain language.

Mr. DIES. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] be amended so as to apply after the words where they occur the last time, "eighteenth birthday."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, that will make it readable and consistent?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KRAMER to the amendment offered by Mr. DIES: After the word "following" insert the word "immediately."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I will accept the modification.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad" approved March 2, 1907, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the father or the mother: Provided, That such naturalization or resumption shall take place during the minority of such child: And provided further, That the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIES: Page 2, line 17, after the word "begin", strike out the word "at" and insert the following: "5 years after."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make the law in the case where the parents of the child are naturalized citizens the same as the law is in the case of native-born citizens.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. A citizen of the United States may upon marriage to a foreigner make a formal renunciation of his or her United States citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 23, after the word "aliens", insert a comma and the following: "but no citizen may make such renunciation in time of war, and if war shall be declared within one year after such renunciation then such renunciation shall be void."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. DIES: On page 2, line 21, after the word "foreigner", add a comma and insert the following: "and upon declaration of intention to abandon residence in the United States."

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to comply with the suggestion of the State Department. Under section 3 this bill permits an American citizen to renounce his or her citizenship, even though such American citizen has no intention to permanently leave the United States. This amendment states not only that the American citizen must marry a foreigner before having the right to renounce citizenship but such citizen must declare that he or she intends to permanently abandon the United States. In other words, the State Department contends it bad policy to permit an American citizen just simply because of marriage to a foreigner to renounce his or her citizenship, even though he or she intends to reside in the United States. If he or she continues to live in the United States, the State Department suggests that such person ought not to be permitted to renounce allegiance and citizenship. If the person intends to leave the United States permanently, that is another matter, and the person should be allowed to renounce citizenship if he or she so desires. Of course, the amendment is not particularly important in view of my other amendment that has been adopted, which makes void such renunciation in case war is declared within 1 year thereafter.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield long enough to have the amendment read again?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

The Clerk again read the Dies amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I rather think the principle which the gentleman from Texas has in mind is perfectly all right, but I am afraid the amendment will cause difficulty. I admit that in ordinary practice anybody can go into a court of competent jurisdiction and renounce United States citizenship and under ordinary circumstances go to some other country; but let us take a concrete case. Suppose some gentleman comes from Germany or France as an attaché of the German or French Embassy in Washington and in the course of his assignment in this city, becomes enamored of and probably marries an American stenographer employed at the Embassy. As a matter of fact he is a citizen of another country. It might easily be that by virtue of the fact that she retains her nationality and her citizenship in the United States while he is a citizen of another country, in the event he should die during his service in this country, a penalty would be visited upon his wife and perhaps the children of the marriage, if there were any, so far as property rights are concerned. Foreign law might, and often does, deny succession to property rights, to an alien.

Mr. DIES. The gentleman does not understand. This applies only to the case where an American citizen wants to renounce his or her citizenship.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But in the case I am using as an illustration, so far as property rights are concerned, it might be necessary for the American woman to renounce her citizenship in this country, in order to inherit; yet she would not want to leave the country so long as her alien husband was assigned to duty here.

Mr. DIES. She would not want to renounce her citizenship while she resided in this country.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But, as I say, her act in retaining American citizenship after marrying this attaché of the embassy might work against her best interests, especially insofar as the laws of inheritance of the husband's country were concerned, should he die before she took his citizenship. Under your amendment, she could not renounce citizenship unless she declared her intention to abandon residence in this country, and on the other hand, if the right to renounce without such declaration were denied, she might readily imperil for herself and her children such property rights as she might have in her husband's foreign property, because in truth she is a citizen of the United States, and therefore an alien to her husband's country.

You say that she can renounce only on declaration of intention to abandon residence in this country.

Mr. DIES. That is true.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I suggest that she might be foreclosed in her right to succeed to any property he might leave in case of death in this country. I think the amendment is dangerous in that respect and should be voted down.

Mr. DIES. I do not think this is a material amendment. The State Department made the suggestion and in order to comply with the suggestion of the State Department I offered this amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe it is necessary, nor is it the fair thing to do. The principle of equality is not involved in the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

As I understand the amendment, if an American woman wants to marry a foreigner and wants to renounce her allegiance, it is provided that she has to get out of the country.

Mr. DIES. No; she has to declare it is her intention to abandon her residence in this country, not to permit her to continue to live in the United States or let the husband continue to live in the United States and renounce his or her citizenship.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. My understanding is that it is claimed that if an American woman wants to marry a foreigner and does marry a foreigner, she may renounce her allegiance and stay here, under the present law.

Mr. DIES. She has to declare that she intends to abandon her residence in the United States.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Suppose she does declare, but does not do it; does the gentleman want her to be compelled to leave anyway?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Where and how does she make this renunciation?

Mr. DIES. She makes it before any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman states this is an immaterial amendment, and in view of the fact it is so vague I wonder why the gentleman presses it?

Mr. DIES. I stated the reason for offering the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Texas tell me again what the object of the amendment is?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Section 2 of the act entitled "An act relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women", approved September 22, 1922, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That an alien who marries a citizen of the United States, after the passage of this act, as here amended, or an alien whose husband or wife is naturalized after the passage of this act, as here amended, shall not become a citizen of the United States by reason of such marriage or naturalization; but, if eligible to citizenship, he or she may be naturalized upon full and complete compliance with all requirements of the naturalization laws, with the following exceptions:

"(a) No declaration of intention shall be required.

"(b) In lieu of the 5-year period of residence within the United States and the 1-year period of residence within the State or Territory where the naturalization court is held, he or she shall have resided continuously in the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, or Puerto Rico for at least 1 year immediately preceeding the filing of the petition."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 3, line 21, strike out the words "1 year" and insert in lieu thereof "3 years."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The following acts and parts of acts, respectively, are repealed: The act entitled "An act providing for the naturalization of the wife and minor children of insane aliens making homestead entries under the land laws of the United States", approved February 24, 1911; subdivision "Sixth" of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States", approved June 29, 1906; and section 8 of the act entitled "An act relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women", approved September 22, 1922, as said section was added by the act approved July 3, 1930, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relative to naturalization and citizenship of married women', approved September 22, 1922."

The repeal herein made of acts and parts of acts shall not affect any right or privilege or terminate any citizenship acquired under such acts and parts of acts before such repeal.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, unless some other Member makes the demand—and I notice that other Members fought this part of the bill—I shall ask for a separate vote on the committee amendment on page 1, lines 9 and 10:

Provided, That if one person is an alien, such alien is not of a race ineligible to citizenship.

I sincerely hope when the matter comes up in the House that the amendment will be stricken.

Without regard to the principle involved—and the amendment constitutes a wrong principle—there is a practical side to this question which should concern us. This amendment constitutes a deliberate insult to two of the great nations of this world. No matter how we may feel about the race question—and I am as broad and tolerant on racial as I am on religious questions—there is something deeper involved in this particular amendment. There is no question but that Japan and China have a justifiable basis for exception as a result of the national-origins clause of the present immigration law. We could have given them a quota of a hundred, and from a practical angle we would have been consistent with the principle that that law established. In this bill we heap insult upon insult. Do not make such a mistake. We simply say that, because an American woman goes over to China or Japan and marries a member of the yellow race and has children, we deny her children the right to come to the United States—a right which we give to every other American woman, black or white, who may go to another country, marry a foreigner, and have children as the result of the union.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman may not have heard my remarks, but this is not the worst feature of the amendment. Today a Chinese male citizen of our country can go to China and his children are American citizens, but this bill takes away that existing right from him but extends the right to other nationalities.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. Chairman, there is one more thought I wish to convey. Let us look at this from the practical angle. I realize that if this were to be used for the purpose of evading our immigration laws there would be some justification, but do you mean to say that an American woman of the yellow race, born here, an American citizen under our Constitution, is going to Japan and China to be married and have children for the purpose of bringing those children into the country in order to evade our immigration laws? Of course, common sense is against any such inference or supposition.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I hope the gentleman will not make the motion, but will allow a Member from California to do that. California is the State that is particularly involved.

Mr. McCORMACK. I said that unless some other Member demands a separate vote, I will.

Mr. BLACK. It does not make any difference.

Mr. McCORMACK. The number of persons involved are very few. This amendment is not only wrong in principle but is unnecessary from a practical angle. Furthermore, if we allow this provision to remain in the bill, it constitutes a direct insult to every person of the yellow race, citizen or otherwise.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. This was not a part of the basic law as it was originally written and the women of this country who are backing this in connection with the equal-rights bill are not a party to this amendment. This is a committee amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman whether he has considered this proposition? As I see it, as the gentleman from New York says, this is a very embarrassing part of the bill. It is also very impracticable in one way. But if we apply this strictly and literally, it makes no discrimination as against the Chinese-born American citizen, nor the Japanese either, because it applies to a white American the same as it does to a Chinaman or anyone else. You, an American-born white man, cannot go to China and marry a Chinese woman and bring her in here, neither can an American-born Chinese. Therefore, there is no discrimination against a Chinese-born American citizen. The discrimination is against those who are considered ineligible to citizenship. Likewise, an American-born white man can go to China and marry and can under the present law bring in his children, so can an American-born Chinese. So there is no discrimination. Under this proposed law neither an American-born white man or an American-born Chinese may bring in his children if their mother is a Chinese or a woman ineligible to citizenship, so there is no discrimination in either case. But the change comes if you undo what has been done here this afternoon, for if you vote this out a Chinese woman born in the United States may go to China and marry and may bring in her children. She cannot do so under the present law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This bill does not apply to wives, it applies to children.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It applies to the children of wives and the children of husbands.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend JENKINS is fair. This is not an immigration question. I would go along with the gentleman if they were using this to violate our immigration laws, but looking at it from the standpoint of justice and from the standpoint of righteousness, what is the difference? A woman, white, black, or yellow, if she is an American citizen, is entitled to the privileges guaranteed and given to every one of us, either by law or under the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, it is not the desire of the committee or myself to discriminate against the Chinese or the Japanese or any other race. As a matter of fact, I would be the last person in the world to discriminate against anybody. I have discussed this matter with the members of my committee. It is my impression, and it is the impression of the committee that some of our colleagues do not understand the interpretation of certain clauses of this measure, but in order to make them feel right and to pass this bill quickly, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 1, line 9, and I shall offer a committee amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object until I have heard the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKSTEIN: Page 1, strike out lines 5 to 10, both inclusive, and page 2, strike out lines 1 to 6, both lines inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 1993. Any child hereafter born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, whose father or mother at the time of the birth of such child is a citizen of the United States, is declared to be a citizen of the United States; but the rights of citizenship shall not descend to any child unless the citizen father or the citizen mother, as the case may be, has resided in the United States previous to the birth of such child."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DIES. There is nothing in this amendment that will affect the other amendments we have adopted?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; this simply takes out the alleged discrimination that has been charged on the floor. This is in the nature of a perfecting amendment to section 1 of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to be sure the Committee understands the situation.

The committee adopted an amendment, at the bottom of page 1, consisting of the language in italics. I want to be sure the gentleman is proceeding properly. The gentleman could have moved to rescind the action of the committee in adopting that amendment and would have accomplished the same purpose. If that is the understanding of what we are doing, I want the committee to know it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This is a clarifying amendment, preserving the language of the present law. If we struck out the language in italics without making a proper correction, it would not be right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to be sure I understand the purpose of the unanimous consent of the gentleman from New York.

As I understand, the request was to eliminate the previous action of the committee in adopting the committee amendment at the bottom of page 1 and another committee amendment in lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 2, so that the bill will be left in the condition it was in previous to the adoption of the committee amendments. I therefore suggest that the proper motion would be to rescind the action of the committee on the committee amendment on page 1 and the committee amendment on page 2, lines 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection, and the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 1, lines 9 and 10, and that the previous action of the committee be rescinded, and the words, beginning in line 9, "Provided, That if one parent is an alien, such alien is not of a race ineligible to citizenship", be stricken from the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is it now necessary for the gentleman from New York to ask unanimous consent? As I understand, unanimous consent was granted to return to section 1 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That request was granted.

Mr. McCORMACK. The amendment has been withdrawn and the question is whether or not it is now necessary to have unanimous consent to offer the amendment, or whether the gentleman can offer such an amendment based on the unanimous consent already granted.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the unanimous-consent request to return and the offering of the amendment were separate requests.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, it is now in order to move to amend?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will wait until the amendment is offered before answering that question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to rescind the action of the Committee agreeing to the committee amendment printed in italics in lines 9 and 10 on page 1 of the bill, being the words reading:

Provided, That if one parent is an alien, such alien is not of a race ineligible to citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment in order to explain one proposition, or at least to give my interpretation of it.

At the present time there are certain countries from which no immigration can come. There are certain races that are ineligible to citizenship. This is an organic law and is a principle that is recognized in all immigration matters. You are now going to change the immigration law.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; we are not changing the law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. You are going to withdraw an objection that now applies to people of ineligibility, and if you are going to raise that bar, then you are going to lay down some other bar.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not raising any bar.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is my objection to it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Of course, you can emasculate this bill if you wish.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Striking out that language, does not the question then come up that persons ineligible for citizenship cannot come in?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Under this law any man or woman could go anywhere and marry anybody who was either eligible or ineligible to citizenship and their children would be eligible to citizenship.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If they are citizens.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; if they are citizens.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the present language of the law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If that is what you want, that is all right with me, but that is exactly what you are doing here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3673) to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage. Is there a demand for a separate vote on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DICKSTEIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALARIES OF RURAL LETTER CARRIERS

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, presented a privileged report on the bill (H.R. 8919) to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule, which was referred to the House calendar and ordered printed.

The resolution is as follows:

House Resolution 355

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 8919, a bill to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes; and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted; and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit; with or without instructions.

DISCRIMINATION IN THE HOUSE RESTAURANT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 236.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 236

Whereas it has come to my attention as a Representative in Congress that a rule of discrimination is being enforced in the restaurant service of the House of Representatives; and

Whereas I stand peculiarly as the representative of the 12,000,000 loyal colored citizens of the United States; and

Whereas these people, and their forebears, have contributed of might and main, blood and sinew, in the development of this country; and

Whereas from the year 1619, when a group of 20 slaves were landed at Jamestown, Va., these people have been loyal to the country to which they and their forebears were brought through a commercial traffic in human souls; and

Whereas for 244 years of unrequited toil these loyal citizens tilled the soil, planted the fields, harvested the crops of the southern plantations, nursed and succored the families of their masters, were custodians of the family chest while master was at war to keep them in slavery; and

Whereas the first blood that fertilized the soil of this continent in the cause of liberty and fraternity flowed from the life stream of that hero martyr Crispus Attucks, who fell on Boston Common in 1770; and

Whereas the colored citizens of the United States have borne their full share of responsibility and sacrifice in every military movement in which this country has been engaged from the Revolutionary period, through the Civil War, on through Carizal, San Juan Hill, and the Argonne front; and

Whereas this loyalty must gain for them the liberal plaudits of patriotic Americans and place them beyond the pale of present-day serfdom and slavery; and

Whereas under the Constitution of the United States, and the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments thereof, these people are citizens of the United States, entitled to all the privileges and immunities as are enjoyed by others; and

Whereas in the Washington Post of the issue of Wednesday, January 24, 1934, the Honorable Representative LINDSAY C. WARREN, of the First District of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, House of Representatives, is quoted as saying: "In refusing to serve two colored persons in the House restaurant today, Manager P. H. Johnson of the restaurant was acting under my orders and instructions"; and

Whereas Representative LINDSAY C. WARREN, of the First District of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, House of Representatives, is further quoted in said Post as saying: "The restaurant has been operated by the committee since 1921. It has never served colored employees or visitors, nor will it, so long as I have anything to do with the restaurant"; and

Whereas the rule of discrimination was put in force and effect Tuesday, January 23, 1934, and the restaurant of the House of Representatives announced that the service was reserved for white people only to the exclusion of colored citizens, and two colored persons were so refused, as stated: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to investigate by what authority the Committee on Accounts controls and manages the conduct of the House restaurant, and by what authority said committee or any members thereof issued and enforced rules or instructions whereby any citizen of the United States is discriminated against on account of race, color, or creed in said House restaurant, grill-room, or other public appurtenances or facilities connected therewith under the supervision of the House of Representatives.

Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths to witnesses and shall report their conclusions and recommendations to the House at the earliest practicable moment.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the preamble.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is the so-called "De Priest resolution", with which the House is very familiar, and I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PARKS and Mr. RAMSPECK called for a division.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 236, nays 114, answered "present" 1, not voting 79, as follows:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my vote and answer "present", being a member of the Committee on Accounts.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] was called downtown on important business. If he were here, he could have voted "yea."

HOUSE RESOLUTION 236

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, a large percentage of the constituency I have the privilege and honor to represent are members of the Negro race. They look with just pride on the part they have contributed to the welfare of the United States of America. No more loyal and truly patriotic people can be found anywhere. They ask no special privilege nor seek favor above any other group or race. They are proud of their American citizenship and seek and ask only fair and equal treatment under the Constitution of the United States. Naturally, they resent any manner or form of discrimination; they are a proud and long-suffering people, and it gives me great pride on their behalf to speak to you today in favor of the passage of the resolution of Mr. DE PRIEST, for the appointment of a committee of the House of Representatives empowered to investigate the authority of the Committee on Accounts to promulgate and enforce rules denying to citizens of the Negro race the use of the House restaurant.

At the very outset I wish to pay my compliments and respects to the members of the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives and especially the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the chairman of the committee, for the fair consideration given the resolution and the fine spirit of justice exemplified when they reported the same favorably. But for such favorable report it would not have been possible to consider the resolution, as no power or authority exists under the Rules of the House to compel the Rules Committee to act on a resolution.

Investigation, I feel sure, will prove that the House-restaurant rule complained against is not of recent origin but was promulgated a long while ago when the Committee on Accounts was presided over and controlled by the members of the Republican Party. The present Chairman of the Accounts Committee, the Honorable LINDSAY C. WARREN, of North Carolina, in a recent address to the House stated unequivocally that the rule barring Negroes from the House restaurant was one of long standing—not created by him or the present committee—but inherited from previous committees. This statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has not been challenged or denied by anyone and must be assumed to be true, and is in fact true.

The question of the origin of the rule or regulation being decided, I proceed to discuss the power or authority of any committee of the House of Representatives or members thereof to promulgate, pass, or enforce any such rule, order, or direction. I challenge the authority of any committee of the Congress of the United States to enact any rule which in its nature and scope discriminates against any citizen of the United States because of race, creed, or color. I say—and I say it with no fear of contradiction—that there exists in no committee any authority, power, or right to promulgate, pass, or enforce any such discriminatory rule, regulation, or order.

Mr. Speaker, the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that—

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The second sentence of this amendment controls and regulates the power of the States and denies to any State the power to abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States. Hence, no State has authority or power to pass laws discriminatory of the rights or immunities of citizens of the United States; such power is denied to a State by the Constitution.

Congress is the creature of the Constitution—no power not delegated can be created by Congress—Congress is the creature and not the creator of the Constitution. In respect to the States, however, the situation is reversed. The States are not the creatures of the Constitution. As representatives of the people, the States created the Constitution; and insofar as they vested and granted powers through the Constitution to the Federal Government created thereby, they divested and limited their original power. Therefore, as the States, under the fourteenth amendment, may not abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, Congress, being the creature of the Constitution, may not, and no committee thereof can.

I myself, Mr. Speaker, abhor all discrimination of any kind or source. I believe in the Constitution of the United States and in the rights and privileges of freemen proclaimed, guaranteed, and protected therein. I blush with shame to think that here in the Nation's Capital any rule of discrimination would be tolerated, not to mention enforced.

My duty to my constituents and my respect for the principles upon which this Government is based both demand that I speak out in opposition to any rule or regulation tending to deny to any American citizen of Negro blood his right to just and equal treatment with his fellow citizen of another blood.

Mr. Speaker, I ask no special favor for those of my constituents who are of different color, but I do demand for them equal treatment and consideration. I desire to be true to my principles and to my duty to serve all my constituents—I can do no more—I seek no cheap notoriety in the performance of my clear and manifest duty. I firmly believe that this House should investigate this matter; and if discriminations of any kind are shown to exist, I shall demand the abolition of the same. We cannot, as Representatives of a free people, tolerate for one moment the existence of race hatred or prejudice. If it exists, we must stamp it out. Hatred and bigotry are the twin devils that have bedeviled man's progress toward freedom and justice since the beginning of time. To be free of them demands eternal vigilance. We cannot compromise—we must not condone.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall cast my vote in favor of the De Priest resolution and sincerely hope it will pass the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include short letters sent me by Louis MacMahon, of the Press Gallery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, from the floor yesterday I called attention to the fact that after the House adjourned Monday and I had finished a conference with some colleagues, and had gathered my papers and was about to leave the Chamber, two reporters from the Press Gallery, accompanied by a third person, were waiting at the door for me just inside the House Chamber and accosted me, and attempted to upbraid me for opposing and stopping the passage of the local old-age pension bill for the District of Columbia. I did not know the names of either of these reporters but understood from them that they represented the Post and the Herald. On several other occasions they had interrogated me about legislation, but as they were comparatively new men, and were not the old reporters formerly representing the Washington papers, I had not yet been able to learn their names.

After one of them warned me that he "was going to give me 'hell' in his paper this morning", I naturally looked for same in the morning papers. There are but two morning papers here on Tuesday—the Post and the Herald. There was no attack on me in the Post. There was an attack on me in the Herald. The vicious, untruthful, unwarranted attack in the Herald, which at the top gave the name of the Herald reporter writing it as "Pat Frank", mentioned the attempt to upbraid me on the floor after adjournment by stating:

> This was after the Texan, with a 3-hour filibuster, single-handed practically blocked any hope of passage—

And so forth. So it was very evident to me that it was a Herald reporter who told me that he "was going to give me 'hell' in his paper the next morning."

Since then Mr. Louis A. MacMahon, who is a high-class, reputable reporter of many years standing, advised me that inasmuch as he was on the Herald staff, some might think that he had been the one who accosted me. Of course, he was not the one and was not present, and I told him that I would be glad to print in the RECORD any statement to that effect that he desired. From him through the mail I have received the following:

WASHINGTON, April 24, 1934.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: It was very generous of you to volunteer to put into the RECORD the letter written me by Mr. Roy Moulden establishing the fact that I was not the reporter who threatened to "give you 'hell'."

I am enclosing Mr. Moulden's letter and would appreciate your putting it into the RECORD tomorrow, Wednesday, so as to clear up the situation for me. With thanks and appreciation in advance for your generosity and courtesy,

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS A. MACMAHON.

Accompanying the letter from Mr. MacMahon was the following:

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 24, 1934.

LOUIS A. MACMAHON,
Herald Reporter.

DEAR LOUIE: I regret that Representative BLANTON got you and me confused during his attack on Mr. Hearst on the floor of the House today.

BLANTON said the Herald reporter threatened to give him "hell." That is not a fact. I am the one who, in a good-natured way, threatened to give him "hell." He laughed and said he also would give me "hell."

Secrest, of the Post, and myself, representing the Washington Daily News, talked with BLANTON—the conversation to which he alluded on the floor today. Neither you nor anyone else representing the Washington Herald was present during the jocular colloquy with BLANTON. I saw BLANTON up to the time he left the House Monday afternoon, and at no time did I see you have any conversation with him. On the contrary, I met you in the House press gallery when Secrest and I finished our jocular conversation with BLANTON.

Again regretting the confusion, fraternally yours,

ROY MOULDEN,
Washington Daily News.

I am glad to know, Mr. Speaker, that it was just a jocular plant that I ran into at the door of this Chamber Monday afternoon, and that the reporters from the press gallery were in a jocular frame of mind when they told me that they would give me "hell" in their paper the next morning. If they had not been so very jocular, it might have been serious. But they do show that after the jocular plant and after the jocular accosting and after the jocular threat of giving me "hell" they went from the scene of said jocular joust back to the press gallery and there fraternized with a Herald reporter, and that one of the fraternizers who had been aiding and abetting the jocularity was a reporter from the Post staff.

And on its editorial page this morning, both in a foot-square cartoon, and a column and a half wide and half page long editorial, the Right Honorable Eugene Meyer in his Washington Post (which he hornswoggled from the McLean boys) jocularly attempted to give me "hell" in fulfilling the jocular threat I received in the presence of his jocular reporter Monday afternoon.

If Eugene Meyer's Post had told the truth, he would not merit blame, but Eugene Meyer's Post did not tell the truth. After quoting an irresponsible statement made in debate to the effect that this was congressional year and I was coming up for election, and passing this bill would put me in an embarrassing position and for such reason I was fighting the bill, Eugene Meyer's Post then made the positive assertion "The Representative from Texas did not deny this statement." Does Eugene Meyer and his Post think they can get away with that? They are chargeable with knowing what I said because they had a reporter jocularly sitting in the press gallery, who jocularly accosted me on the floor after adjournment, and they had the printed copy of Monday's RECORD where, on page 7171, as soon as I got the floor, I said:

When we had a former District day there were about 15 or 20 bills on the calendar. This bill was up near the top. I went to the chairman of this committee, and I went to Mr. BLACK, and I also went to Mr. PALMISANO, and told them all that if they called up this bill they would not pass many bills that day on the calendar, that I was against it, and that I was going to use every bit of parliamentary knowledge of the rules that I had to stop it. And after consultation they sidetracked this bill, and put it down at the bottom of the list, and I helped them to pass quite a number of noncontroversial measures that day. They knew then that I opposed this bill, and intended to do everything within my power to stop it.

And on the same page, 7171, I said:

Something was said about somebody being afraid of votes at home. I made no such statement. I never have been afraid of votes back home since I have been a Member of this Congress. If this Congress is in session when my primary comes up you will find me still here very busy and working hard on this floor, 2,000 miles away.

I have such confidence in the people I represent back home that I know that if I do my duty here on this floor and help to kill bad bills they are going to look after me when election time comes.

I have confidence in my constituents, and they have confidence in me, and that is the reason they take care of me, whether I am there or not. They know that when I am here they can depend on me to fight to stop bad bills.

The above shows conclusively that when Mr. Eugene Meyer's Post made the positive assertion this morning that "The Representative from Texas did not deny this statement" it told a deliberate untruth.

In my speech I showed that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had reported that the District budget could not possibly stand the provisions of this bill, and it should have been the duty of Eugene Meyer and his Post to have supported the District Commissioners, and in protecting the District budget from becoming unbalanced. And I showed that the bill was unsound in many particulars, in granting carte blanche authority to the Commissioners to appoint employees without any limitation, and to fix salaries without limitation, except the maximums embraced in the 1923 act, under which the name of the position fixes the salary.

Eugene Meyer cannot run his Post like he ran the Federal Reserve. As millionaire publisher of the Post he cannot treat American citizens and their rights with the same autocratic disregard that he did when he was carrying out his policy that broke banks and ruined many cattlemen of the country. I want Eugene Meyer to understand that I shall hold him personally responsible for every libelous attack he publishes in his Post about me, so he had better instruct his jocular reporters to publish only the truth.

WAR DEPARTMENT DISAPPROVES DISCRIMINATIONS AGAINST AMERICAN CITIZENS IN H.R. 8861, "THE SUGAR BILL"

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a memorandum dated April 14 on the sugar bill, by the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs to the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following memorandum, dated April 14, on bill H.R. 8861, the sugar bill, from the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs to the Secretary of War:

APRIL 12, 1934.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF WAR

Subject: H.R. 8861 and S. 3212, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "A bill to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes"

H.R. 8861, as passed by the House on April 4, 1934, contains certain provisions which appear to be discriminatory against the insular possessions of the United States. Their enactment into law would be contrary to the long-established policy governing trade relations with all of the insular areas which produce sugar for the United States market. I desire, however, to call particular attention to those provisions of the bill which appear to be discriminatory against the interests of Puerto Rico. Of course, what may be said relative to Puerto Rico is applicable in general to other insular areas.

One objection frequently expressed is that our insular dependencies are placed in the same category as foreign countries. This feature has brought strong protests from Puerto Rico.

Reference is made to the following provisions which are considered discriminatory against Puerto Rico:

(a) On page 5, under the proposed new section 8a of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, provision is made for the allotment of quotas to all of the insular possessions for any calendar year "based on average importations or receipts therefrom into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during such 3 years, respectively, in the years 1925–33, inclusive, as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, determine to be the most representative respective 3 years adjusted (in such manner as the Secretary shall determine) * * *."

(b) The same section provides further, with reference to the insular areas, that such quotas may include "direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding the respective importations or receipts of direct-consumption sugar therefrom into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during the year 1931, 1932, or 1933, whichever is greater, and in the case of Cuba, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding 22 percent of the quota established for Cuba."

(c) On page 6 the quotas for any calendar year are fixed for the beet-sugar area of the United States at 1,550,000 short tons raw value and for Louisiana and Florida 260,000 short tons raw value.

With reference to paragraph (a) above, the manner of determining quotas is too indefinite. There is no guaranty in the bill that it would not be applied so as to discriminate against one or more areas under the jurisdiction of the United States. It would apparently be possible to select the lowest and highest years, so as to make great fluctuations in the quotas allocated to some of the areas, notably Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands. Certainly a fair administration of the law is to be expected, but the proposed legislation would permit or make possible discriminatory measures. Such a provision would create great uncertainty in crop planning and milling and in crop financing from year to year.

TABLE A.—Maximum and minimum sugar shipments to continental United States, annual averages 3-year periods calendar years 1925–33, inclusive

Areas	Calendar years	Maximum (short tons)	Calendar years	Minimum (short tons)	Difference

		[2] 822,006			[2] 275,106

The provision relative to direct-consumption sugars (par. (b) above) is discriminatory against the insular areas as regards the privileges of refining sugar. Such action cannot be justified on any grounds whatever when applied to Puerto Rico and Hawaii. The inhabitants of these islands are citizens of the United States. It has been regarded as a fundamental principle that the right of the people thereof to trade with the mainland shall be free and unrestricted and that they shall enjoy the same rights and liberties in the development of their industries as though they were on the mainland. This policy was stated in the first Organic Act of Puerto Rico, approved April 12, 1900, and is the policy upon which our trade with Puerto Rico has been developed. The following table indicates the maximum shipments of direct-consumption sugar from the various off-shore areas supplying this market. While some further expansion may be expected in Puerto Rico, such expansion will necessarily be relatively small. Whatever such expansion may be, it is of great importance to the island that its opportunities to develop industries connected with the island's basic products shall not be curtailed. The density of the population in this small area makes it desirable that every opportunity shall be afforded the people to establish industries that will create employment.

TABLE B.—Direct-consumption sugars shipped to United States, years 1932 and 1933

Areas	Maximum years	Short tons	Percentage of shipments to United States
			Percent
Philippine Islands	1932	62,927	6.0
Puerto Rico	1933	107,087	14.0
Hawaii	1932	24,321	2.4
Cuba	1932	[1] 492,635	25.3

The provision assigning fixed quotas (paragraph (c) above) to the continental beet-sugar areas of 1,550,000 short tons and 260,000 short tons to the continental cane-growing areas is also discriminatory against those insular areas whose inhabitants are citizens of the United States. Here again it is proposed to violate the principle of fair and equal treatment, particularly in that with the committee amendment, page 8, line 14, inserting the words "paragraph (a) of", the proration of any deficiencies in consumption requirements in any calendar year is imposed entirely upon the areas outside of the continental United States.

The above tables (A, B, and C) indicate that quota uncertainties might result from year to year; that the continental beet and cane areas have been specially favored; that the continental refineries have been given special consideration over those of Puerto Rico and Hawaii; and that the refineries of all of our insular possessions, including the Philippines, have been placed on a less favored status than the refineries of Cuba.

The President, in his message of February 8, 1934, on the above subject, stated in part:

"I believe that we can increase the returns to our own farmers, contribute to the economic rehabilitation of Cuba, provide adequate quotas for the Philippines, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and at the same time prevent higher prices to our own consumers.

* * * * * * *

"The average marketings of the past 3 years provide on the whole an equitable base, but the base period should be flexible enough to allow slight adjustments as between certain producing areas.

"The use of such a base would allow approximately the following preliminary and temporary quotas:" * * *. (Shown in column 2, table C).

Obviously the President did not contemplate that one area should be aided at the expense of another, but that all should share equally the advantages or disadvantages resulting from the application of the proposed law.

It is believed that the bill, as passed by the House, will not meet either the spirit or the purpose of the legislation suggested in the President's message. It will be noted that all of the insular areas under the jurisdiction of the United States are placed on a different basis from the mainland areas. Certainly the islands that are considered a permanent part of the United States, whose inhabitants are United States citizens, should be accorded the same treatment as is accorded to citizens of the mainland.

Legislation that appears to contain discriminatory provisions against the people of Puerto Rico naturally creates in their minds a feeling of uneasiness and uncertainty and even doubts as to whether they can rely upon the United States Government for fair and impartial consideration of their fundamental rights.

In view of the foregoing, the following amendments to H.R. 8861 are suggested which, if approved by you, it is recommended be transmitted to the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate for appropriate consideration by that committee:

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS

On page 5, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "the Territory of Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico."

Page 5, line 5, after the words "based on" insert the words "the maximum."

Page 5, line 8, substitute the word "the" for "such", and after the words "three years" insert the words "of maximum importations or receipts."

Page 5, lines 9 to 11, beginning after the word "inclusive," in line 9, strike out the words "as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, determine to be the most representative respective 3 years."

Page 5, line 17, after the word "included", strike out all the words beginning with the word "in", line 17, down to and including the words "greater, and", line 25. This proviso as amended will then read:

"Provided, however, That in such quotas there may be included, in the case of Cuba, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding 22 percent of the quota established for Cuba."

Page 5, line 15, strike out the words "for continental United States,".

Page 6, line 11, insert after the words "United States" the words "the Territory of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands,".

Page 6, line 19, after the words "State or States" insert the words "the Territory of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands."

Page 6, line 26, after the word "value;" insert the words "Puerto Rico, 875,000 short tons raw value; the Territory of Hawaii, 1,000,000 short tons raw value; the Virgin Islands, 9,000 short tons raw value;".

Page 8, line 14, strike out the words "paragraph (A) of."

Draft of letter herewith for your signature addressed to the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate.

CREED F. COX, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. LANZETTA. Also, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial from the Washington Herald.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 236

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on House Resolution 236.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of House Resolution 236, first, because it will put an end to discrimination against American citizens of the Negro race in the Nation's Capitol; and, second, because of the salutary effect such termination will have on the country at large.

The news that American citizens of the colored race were being discriminated against in the very building where laws giving them freedom, American citizenship, and every right and privilege as such, were enacted not so long ago, came as a severe shock to me. The very thought of the effect of such practices here might have on the Nation at large made me fearful.

Under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments the people of the Negro race were given their freedom and every right and privilege as American citizens. To forbid them entry into any public place is discrimination against color. This offense against their rights as American citizens takes a more serious aspect when it takes place under this very roof, and we, as Members of Congress, would be violating our oath of office to obey and uphold the Constitution if we tolerate and permit this condition to continue.

There can be no dispute as to the bad influence and effect such action has had and will continue to have on the people of this country if we allow discrimination against American citizens of the Negro race to continue in the House restaurant. Surely, we cannot expect the average citizen to refrain from discriminations when we, the lawmakers of this country, tolerate, permit, and allow them. What bad effect and influence our compliance may have on the rest of the country cannot be estimated, but it is just such examples on the part of persons of responsibility that have often led to most serious consequences.

I, for one, believe that American citizens of the Negro race are entitled to the same rights and privileges as every other citizen, and I shall therefore vote in favor of the De Priest resolution and thus bring to an end a practice which no longer has any place in our country, and especially in the Capitol Building of the United States.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the House has just passed a resolution introduced by the Member from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST] providing for an investigation. The resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to investigate by what authority the Committee on Accounts controls and manages the conduct of the House restaurant, and by what authority said committee or any members thereof issued and enforced rules or instructions whereby any citizen of the United States is discriminated against on account of race, color, or creed in said House restaurant, grillroom, or other public appurtenances or facilities connected therewith under the supervision of the House of Representatives.

Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths to witnesses, and shall report their conclusions and recommendations to the House at the earliest practicable moment.

This resolution is purely political, is a gesture, and means absolutely nothing, because there is nothing to investigate. The Chairman of the Committee on Accounts [Mr. WARREN] has already given to the House all the information that any committee can secure. It will be found in Mr. WARREN'S speech published in the RECORD on page 5254, March 23, 1934.

I voted against this resolution today for several reasons. First, the author of the resolution made a speech at a public gathering in Washington in which he was quoted in the Washington papers as saying he proposed to use his influence to defeat Members of the House who did not follow him and vote for his resolution. I told him personally that, so far as I was concerned, no such a speech would pass me unnoticed, and I would vote against the resolution and he could carry out his threat, as I did not intend to be intimidated by him or any other Member of the House.

Another reason that I opposed the resolution is that in my opinion it was introduced for political reasons, the author desiring to further his political interest in the recent primary in Chicago.

Of course, some Members on the Republican side of the House thought they would embarrass Democrats by forcing a vote on the resolution. They might have embarrassed some Members, but I can assure all that it in no way embarrassed me.

If those who supported the author of the resolution today desire to settle the question involved there is only one way to settle it and that is not by passing a meaningless resolution but by bringing in a resolution something along the following line:

"No Negro shall be permitted to eat in the House restaurant unless accompanied by a Member of Congress."

There is no doubt but that the embarrassment will be on the Republican side of the aisle if such a resolution is presented.

As a member of the Committee on Accounts I can say the restaurant has been conducted under the same rules as it was conducted when the Republican Party was in power and under the chairmanship of Republican members, Clifford B. Ireland, Clarence MacGregor, and Charles Underhill. They were all Republicans; and it was Mr. Ireland, a Representative from Illinois, that provided quarters where Negroes are served.

Let me quote from the speech of Mr. WARREN, the chairman of the committee:

When this restaurant was established, in 1921, under the chairmanship of Mr. Clifford Ireland, Republican Representative from Illinois, he opened a place in the basement for the serving of colored employees and visitors. Mind you, this was 4 years before I entered this body. This was continued under Mr. Clarence MacGregor, Republican Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, from New York, and it was continued by Mr. Charles L. Underhill, Republican Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, from Massachusetts, and has been continued by me. In this place we give the same service, the same food as we do upstairs, and the same cleanly surroundings prevail. The prices there are slightly lower.

I have made no rule. I am carrying out the policies and rules that have been in force ever since this restaurant was established, and before I came here.

Something was said that I initiated this thing, and that it had been going on for some time. The first knowledge of any violation of the rules that ever came to me during my chairmanship of the committee was, I think, about January 20. I would have despised myself had I not met it and accepted the responsibility that had been placed on me by this House and by the committee. [Applause.]

Again, not one single member of the Committee on Accounts, either in private or in meeting, has ever presented this matter to me or challenged anything I have done in regard to it. If I am wrong, I pause to hear anyone challenge that statement.

I believe that I am as free from racial and religious intolerance as any man in this House. In my State the races live together side by side; probably about 30 percent of our population are colored, and we are getting along in peace and harmony. This amicable relationship and understanding is reflected in the notable progress of North Carolina.

One day last week a lot of Communists came down to see us. Another day they described themselves as Socialists; another day a demonstration was made by those who claimed to be representatives of the International Labor Defense. Finally, on last Saturday, the supreme outrage occurred, when a mob of toughs and hoodlums from Howard University came down and almost precipitated a riot.

That very morning a respectable colored citizen called up the authorities of that university and pleaded that these students be not permitted to come here, but it went unheeded.

Every paper in this town the day before carried full notice, with blazing headlines, that it was going to be done. Filth, vulgarity, and profanity rang out through the corridors down there. The police told me that never in their lives had they ever taken such insults.

Three splendid ladies pushed their way out of the restaurant into that mob, came to my office, and told me that they would never put their foot in there again on account of the vile and horrible language that had been used in their presence.

A feeble effort was made 2 days ago expressing disapproval of those actions. There was one man who could have stopped it. He did not because he did not want to do it. By reasons of these demonstrations our records show that for the last 10 days the restaurant has lost considerable money, while prior to that we were making some money every day.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I have calmly and dispassionately given a recital of the facts and the truth in this matter. Personally, it is a matter of utter indifference to me. I am opposed to any change in the present conduct of the restaurant, but otherwise I do not care. I am always ready to meet, and to meet squarely, any issue that ever arises here in this body, but it is entirely up to Members of the House to settle this whole thing according to both their desires and their tastes. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN'S statement confirms mine, that there is nothing to investigate. He has told the House in plain language all that the committee can expect to learn.

Anyone who has followed this matter cannot come but to one conclusion, and that is that this resolution was advanced purely for political purposes. It might return to plague those responsible rather than redound to their benefit.

Again I say if those who advanced the resolution today are honest and sincere, then there is only one way to settle the question, and that is by the House voting on a resolution such as I have outlined above.

THE NEW DESTINY

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short letter from a farmer in Union County, Pa., on the milk question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, not a new deal.

Just a new destiny, and what will that be, or where are we going to land?

More and more is being uncovered regarding the ultimate purpose of the N.R.A.

But enough has been seen to reveal the fact that recovery is designed but along with it is an imperialistic, autocratic dictum conceived in the emulation of Mussolini by a "brain trust", made up of mostly all theoretical college professors who stand a good chance of breaking into flight when the hypodermic fails to force things faster than natural laws prompt.

In other words, after the World War, Mussolini saw the lassitude of the lymphatic grandson of Garibaldi and descendant of the House of Savoy, sinking Italy deeper and deeper back to the hand-organ and banana-stand stage.

He had visions of Napoleon at Lodi and Arcola, and camping for a year at Milan with the tricolor supreme over Italy, and five armies of Austria under Grand Duke Charles vanquished in one summer.

Before him was dead Italy, a memory of the Caesars and what Napoleon III did to break the yoke of Austria, as the Grand Emperor had done 50 years before.

Like a flash from the sky this Juno told the striking labor unions and the arrogant railroads with special contracts where to get off, and what each was to have, so that the grape pickers and macaroni manufacturers should all be busy. His patent worked.

Then he walked into the Italian Parliament, made up mostly of hereditary Senators, and told them to go home. He told the King to be orderly and all would be well with him and his dynasty. The crowing act was to march the King to the Vatican to wait outside for a time until the Pope was ready to have him come in. That closed a breach between the temporal and spiritual power since King Humbert told the Pope to take hands off of matters political. Mussolini is playing politics and has united all forces because the distance between the hereditary Senators and grape pickers was too vast, so he welded the power of all within himself.

And with the passing of Mussolini, what?

His power will vanish. His dream will have been but a shadow. Italy without a leader of Mussolini's genius, his daring, his power; Italy without resources; Italy with a high rate of illiteracy!

In America it is becoming apparent that the application of some such individual power as that applied by Mussolini is being experimented with by General Johnson. To give men work and thus speed up purchasing power was hailed and commended as a worthy temporary expedient. Members of Congress of all shades of political belief stood by the President and helped apply the hypodermic, even though they knew at best it could afford no more than temporary relief.

It is now becoming apparent that the initial program of putting men to work and forcing codes of regulation down the throats of every business man from the size of Henry Ford to the peanut vendor and shoe shine, instead of merging classes will make them, in fact it can be seen that the ultimate end of it all will be the termination of America's high standard of living, with the big-business fellow bigger and the little fellow gone.

Not competition, but division, according to the theories of the "brain trust." America parceled out into little communities to be the same for a thousand years as in Europe.

Shut off from each other by barriers set up by the code?

But that is not what was designed by Washington, Hamilton, and Jefferson. They opened the country wide and unhindered for the free flow of commerce, for industry to flourish as the result of competition, for the poor to become rich, and the rich to become poor and rich again. Opportunity.

We are eager to see the break and prosperity return, and we believe the turn is here, and was due to be here because of natural laws, and regardless of the N.R.A. and the vast expenditure of money as a temporary stimulant.

One clash of the armies of Russia and Japan would dissolve the "brain trust" and knock all codes into a cocked hat. Natural laws would instantly operate to consume American surplus.

And finally, the destiny of this Nation is in the hands of God, and God will not desert a people who have been so lavish in their contribution to the weak and unfortunate of all hemispheres.

Victor Hugo said Wellington did not defeat Napoleon, but a higher hand broke the power that had mounted to the brain of one man.

We look for the hand of fate to come out of the unknown and win back prosperity and happiness where the weakness and impotence of man stood and wondered, blundered, and failed.

THE MILK SITUATION

There is going to be something doing in the milk business without much further delay in perfecting a satisfactory code.

Nine months have been allowed to pass without anything being accomplished. The milk producers all over the country have been outrageously treated and there is open rebellion in Congress against the attitude of Secretary Wallace and most of his assistants.

The writer attended two meetings of interested dairymen and Congressmen in the big public room in the new House Office Building during the past 2 weeks. It seems some of the trouble comes from favoritism being shown the butter-and-cheese men of the Northwest against the liquid-milk men of the rest of the country.

When protests have been entered at the Department of Agriculture a number of Congressmen said Wallace would not hear them, while his assistants gave no satisfaction and were insolent. It will be recalled what happened in the West last summer when plenty of milk was dumped into creeks and otherwise destroyed. Well, this feeling is some of the left-over from that.

Congressman EAGLE, a very able Democratic Member from Texas, shot a heavy blast at the autocrats, some of whom had never seen a cow, at the last meeting we attended, and again on the floor of the House, Monday, and this vitriolic speech should be in Tuesday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Congressman EAGLE says it costs $2.30 per 100 pounds to produce milk in Texas, and the code manipulators in Washington only want to allow a sale price of $1.80 per 100 pounds. They refuse to consider the cost of production.

It looks to the writer as though the milk business is the most important branch of farming in the eight Pennsylvania counties constituting the Eighteenth Congressional District. It is therefore our intention to attend all of these special meetings and get the facts, so that we can be helpful in getting this milk business so standardized that the farmer may be able to sell his product at a good profit, and that the consumer may also have a break in the price per quart. In our first address on the floor of the House at the extra session we referred to this, but 9 months have passed since then and nothing has been done, although millions have been appropriated for the purpose of helping the farmer to a price and a market. We sat with Republican floor leader SNELL during the last meeting, and we found him and DAN REED and other New York State Members, deeply interested, and hereafter we are going to help work out something of value for the milk-producing farmers. The Members we met with have their blood up, and our farmer friends may expect something to happen very soon that will be of benefit to them.

SELLING OUT PEOPLE FOR TAXES NOT POPULAR

The following article on selling properties for taxes was written by BENJAMIN K. FOCHT, Republican nominee for Congress, and printed in his Lewisburg Saturday News, August 4, 1932:

Three weeks ago there was much ado about the sale of property for taxes by the county treasurers of Union, Snyder, and Northumberland Counties. The Union County treasurer, Mr. Howard Leiser, demurred on the ground that such action would be a cruel infliction at this time, but officially there was nothing for him to do but proceed to advertise the sales.

That is where a higher law than a misconceived and narrowly interpreted statute was invoked. The Saturday News made a public appeal, and this appeal had its effect all over the State. An appeal to our ccurt by Attorney Miller Johnson was given quick response by Judge Lesher, and since then even proposing to sell out people for taxes in times such as we are all suffering has not gone over very hot but has been universally condemned.

Such a tax law was never passed by any legislature to be narrowly interpreted when men and women are out of work and have no money. Thus taking the broad view suggested by the Saturday News and Attorney Johnson, Judge Lesher, and other Union County officials, virtually called a halt on selling properties for taxes. That law was passed to get people who have money but who are shysters and try to escape their share of public burden, but it was never contemplated to reach out and embarrass those who are thrifty in good times but hard up now, much less strip those who are able and willing to work but cannot find it, of their homes which shelter them and lands from which they draw their subsistence.

No law can mean anything so barbarous, and a great-hearted benevolent people will not see it apply in these dark days of struggle and deprivation.

To the credit of all there has been a suspension of the original design that would have ramified into countless homes and brought more sorrow than a civil war. By a few timely words of appeal to men of heart a catastrophe of tears and anguish has been averted, not only here but in adjacent counties and many that are far removed.

Of all people on earth Americans should comprehend the meaning of "suspension of the rules" and "implied powers." In parliamentary proceeding there is such a thing; Lincoln set aside the Constitution when he sent Federal troops into sovereign States, and later issued the Emancipation Proclamation after Justice Taney had declared slaves to be property in the Dred Scott case; Christ set aside all natural laws when he raised the dead and Himself conquered death; Mussolini has made a joke of the House of Savoy and Victor Immanuel, who united Italy, by mounting something more important than the throne and bossing the country; the Wright brothers suspended the action of gravitation when they took the air in a machine that was heavier than air; in all emergencies policemen and firemen suspend all other rules and preempt the right of way.

And in times like these, when men and women must suffer deprivation, and in some instances starvation, a power higher and greater than all man-made laws intervenes. Nothing since the Vandals sacked Rome and took away the right of property has anything more inhuman or lacking in the elements of civilization been suggested than to ride over vested rights and sell property for taxes so that the riot of public expenditure may go on as men's hearts sink in despair.

May this all be a lesson in this grandiose riot of spending the people's money at Washington and Harrisburg. Let there be a halt before it is too late to correct by future economy and thrift the errors of the past.

We once heard in the Senate our ideal statesman, Henry Cabot Lodge, in a mighty voice, and all earnestness, call out: "All men must be safe and they must be free." We add to that now silent voice our own sentiment and call for an end to unnecessary taxes, and for people who cannot pay, a reasonable extension but no sales of property. In these homes when the gloom is just beginning to rise and hope again has come to cheer us all, let us remember these words from Leviticus 25:17 and 23: "Ye shall not therefore oppress one another", and "the land shall not be sold forever: for the land is mine."

A FARMER'S VIEWPOINT

MIFFLINBURG, PA., April 19, 1934.

Hon. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,

House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I want to bring to your attention the production-control plan which has been adopted by the State of Pennsylvania and by the New York Milkshed, which will work a hardship on the majority of dairy farmers.

Briefly, the plan is as follows: The State control board is to set the price which is to be paid to the farmers for their milk. This price is to be paid as follows: There are three brackets or classifications which determine the price the farmers are to receive for their milk. The first bracket includes bottled milk, for which they are to be paid $2.60 per 100 pounds; the second bracket includes cream, ice cream, etc., for which they are to be paid $1.70 per 100 pounds; the third bracket includes milk used in manufactured milk products, such as canned milk, etc., for which they are to be paid from $1 to $1.40 per 100 pounds, depending on the variation in the price of butter. The third bracket is made up, practically, of surplus milk which could not be sold in the first two brackets.

The result of this classification is as follows: For example, the Sheffield Farms Co., a large distributor of milk, having a preferred market, sells almost all of its milk in the first bracket or classification, thus being able to pay the farmers from whom they buy milk $2.60 per 100 pounds. This gives the farmers selling to this particular company a preference in the price they receive for their milk. And any surplus which the Sheffield Farms Co. may have goes into the second bracket, but none goes into the lower bracket. There are approximately 14,000 farmers selling to the Sheffield Farms Co.

On the other hand, the New York Milkshed is composed of 140,000 farmers. About 20 percent of their milk goes into the first bracket, 30 percent into the second bracket, and 50 percent into the lower or third bracket.

From these facts it can be seen that the farmers selling to a company like the Sheffield Farms Co. have a preference and get a higher price for the same grade of milk than the farmers selling in the New York Milkshed.

In order to equalize the difference between these brackets, the Federal Government should set up a central milk-control board for the purpose of distributing the excess now being paid to the farmers in the higher brackets to the farmers in the lower brackets. In other words, the farmers should be paid equally for the same grade of milk regardless of the brackets in which it is sold.

For example, suppose we have three farmers living in the same vicinity producing grade B milk. The one farmer sells his milk to a company like the Sheffield Farms Co. and receives $2.60 per 100 pounds, because their milk is sold in the first bracket. The second farmer sells his milk to a company which does not have the preferred market and which supplies the second bracket. He receives $1.70 per 100 pounds. The third farmer sells his milk to a company supplying the third bracket and he receives from $1 to $1.40 per 100 pounds. Thus the first farmer receives 90 cents more per 100 pounds for his milk than the second farmer, and from $1.20 to $1.60 more than the third farmer; although there is no difference in the grade of milk produced by these three farmers. The difference in the price being due to the brackets in which the milk is sold by the distributors.

A central milk-control board established by the Federal Government could have this difference of from 90 cents to $1.60 which farmer no. 1 receives in excess of the other two farmers, paid into a general fund and then distributed to all three farmers equally, so that in the end each of the three farmers would be paid the same price per 100 pounds for the same grade milk. Under this plan each of the three farmers would receive from $1.76 to $1.97 per 100 pounds for his milk.

I hope that you will be able to secure some action on this matter by the Federal Government.

Very truly yours,

A. D. LINGLE.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 236

Mr. WOLFENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLFENDEN. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking minority member of the Committee on Accounts, I feel called upon at this time to make some reply to the reference made to me by the Chairman of the Committee on Accounts.

In his remarks, as made on March 23, 1934, the gentleman read a resolution offered by me before the Committee on Accounts on March 23, 1933. I did present this resolution, which read as follows:

> That the chairman be authorized to report out all death resolutions without a meeting of the committee, and that the chairman be empowered to use his own discretion in dealing with Members in regard to telegraph, telephone, and all other matters which properly come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts, including the management of the House restaurant and all rules and regulations pertaining to the same.

It was handed me by the Chairman of the Committee on Accounts and I offered the resolution, identical and similar resolutions having been offered and adopted by the Committee on Accounts since 1921.

The gentleman from North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, is one of the outstanding constitutional lawyers and parliamentarians of this body, and certainly no possible construction could be placed upon this resolution as authority to break the Constitution of the United States under the very dome of the Capitol itself.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, in voting for the De Priest resolution, I do so because I am firmly convinced that it is bad morals, bad law, and bad social usage for the House of Representatives to make any rule or permit any rule that even remotely countenances discrimination against any citizen of the United States in full exercise of his rights as a citizen in the National Capital.

This resolution makes such a charge, and I believe a full and fair hearing should be held. If the charges set forth are sustained, prompt action should be taken to rectify the situation complained of.

I am unalterably opposed to denying any citizen his full constitutional rights, regardless of his race, his color, or his creed.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST THE NEGRO

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, there should be no division of opinion in this House about the passage of this resolution. It simply authorizes a committee—

> To investigate by what authority the Committee on Accounts controls and manages the conduct of the House restaurant, and by what authority said committee, or any members thereof, issued and enforced rules or restrictions whereby any citizen of the United States is discriminated against on account of race, color, or creed.

I listened with interest to the statement which was made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] on March 23 upon this resolution introduced by our colleague from Illinois [Mr. DE PRIEST]. The speech of the gentleman from North Carolina on that occasion seemed to me admirable in the dignity of its manner, its moderation in statement, and its willingness that this committee should be appointed. He recognized that this matter of determining what class or race, if any, should be excluded from the House restaurant was a question for the House to determine.

It may be premature at this time to anticipate what that committee will report; but it will, I believe, find it very difficult to justify the exclusion from a public restaurant, main tained by the Government of the United States, of any class of citizens because of their color or race. Such discrimination against a race, to which nearly 0.1 of all the people of the United States belongs, is unfair and invidious.

As the House restaurant is now managed, a man or woman, whether a citizen or an alien, can freely enter, unless he is a Negro. An alien from Japan, China, New Zealand, Patagonia, or an Eskimo from the frozen regions of the Arctic Circle can come into the restaurant and no one will say him nay. Only the Negro citizen is excluded, and this notwithstanding the fact that for his benefit and to prevent discrimination against him in the most important of all rights, that of suffrage, the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution was ratified by the States, which forbade any such discrimination either by the United States or by any State "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

It would be strange, indeed, if that class of our people should not resent a discrimination which opens the door of the House restaurant to an alien of the yellow race and denies it to citizens of the United States of one racial group alone. We have in this House a Representative of that race, the gentleman from Illinois, who introduced this resolution, and I think all of us have been impressed with his usefulness as such a Member and the quiet dignity of his personality. He, as a Representative, can enter the House restaurant and can take with him one or more friends; but he knows the doors of the restaurant are closed to any other member of his race, no matter what distinction such a one may have won in some field of human activity, and even though he has offered his life in defense of our country. Consider what this means.

A member of his race can have the same access to the President as any other man, and President Roosevelt, who is a man of broad human sympathies, would be the last to close the door of the Executive Office upon any member of Mr. DE PRIEST'S race. One of this race can enter the historic chamber of the Supreme Court of the United States, and as a member of its bar argue important cases in that august tribunal. He can enter freely any other public institution maintained by the Federal Government on the broad basis that he is as much a citizen of the United States as any white man, but he cannot have a cup of coffee and a roll in a public restaurant maintained with funds from the Treasury of the United States. Such a one has paid his taxes, been liable to be drafted in time of war, and has often volunteered in time of war. Many of this race did valorous service on the fields of France, and many of them gave to the defense of their country the "last full measure of their devotion" to the flag, but under the present direction of the Committee on Accounts they are denied an opportunity to have a meal in the House restaurant.

I know of no single influence that has had such a baleful effect in all ages as racial prejudice. From the dawn of history to the present day many wars have been fought because of such prejudice. We could fittingly follow the example of the mother country, which judges every man according to his inherent worth rather than the color of his skin, and the strength of the British Empire has been the broad tolerance with which it treats men of all races who come to England. Each of them is judged on his merits; and when I was in London a few years ago, one of the most successful theatrical productions was that of Shakespeare's "Othello", in which Paul Robeson, a colored man, played the part of Othello.

The whole question of racial prejudice is at the moment of vital importance to America in our international relations. If unhappily this country should ever become involved in a war with the great Empire of Japan—and a more futile war could hardly be imagined—the chief contributing cause will be the intolerance of this country in refusing admission to this country, with some trifling exceptions, to a citizen of Japan. The Japanese Empire, one of the proudest of all nations, does not object to our quota system, under which only a few Japanese could ever enter this country as immigrants, but it does object to the fact that the quota privilege, so freely extended to nearly all other nations, is denied to them. This rankles in their breasts and is the chief reason why the shadow of possible war hangs over both countries.

We could better realize this if the positions were reversed, for if Japan allowed citizens of nearly every other country to enter its borders under a quota system, but denied to the United States any such privilege, our pride would be hurt and we would bitterly resent it.

If this be true as to an alien race, an invidious discrimination by the Federal Government in any one of its institutions against a class of its own people seems to me without any justification. We should not put this undeserved stigma upon a race which has contributed so much to the growth and prosperity of our country.

If the Negro was good enough to die for his country in the World War, surely he is good enough to be admitted to a public restaurant, maintained at the expense of the United States for the convenience of all people; and while the Committee on Accounts has seen fit to deny this privilege to one class of citizens, and only one, the House of Representatives has never so ordered and, I venture to predict, never will.

OPEN SEASON ON CRIMINALS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, throughout America millions of alarmed citizens are waiting and watching for the outcome of the Dillinger escapade. Our people are slowly yet surely arousing themselves to the realization that crime costs this Nation $15,000,000,000 a year. I have come face to face with statistics showing 12,000 murders, 3,000 kidnapings, 50,000 robberies, 100,000 assaults, 5,000 cases of arson, and 40,000 burglaries taking place every year.

When wild animals become too abundant and destructive to property, the State declares open season on them, which means that they are shot at sight by persons who enjoy the kill. If the open-season privilege fails to bring relief, the State then offers a bounty for heads and pelts. Then the fur and feathers begin to fly in earnest. Instead of merely shooting when occasion arises, men organize drives and go after the culprits for profit.

COUNTRY IS OVERRIDDEN

This country is overridden today with a form of peril a thousand times greater than any it ever faced because of the depredations of wild animals. The common enemy against which the Nation must now defend itself hunts in packs, using high-powered automobiles and airplanes for transportation, and machine guns for persuasion. Wild animals, at their worst, destroyed only property of relatively small value, but these highly organized two-legged animals go in for big loot and do not hesitate to turn a machine gun into action against all who oppose them.

Moreover, those organized enemies of civilization have not only machine guns and speedy transportation, but they have unholy alliances with law enforcement agents, lawyers, and, in some instances, with judges who are supposed to enforce the law against them. Recent disclosures exposed to a horrified populace the almost unbelievable fact that organized criminals actually control and operate penal institutions, giving orders to their keepers and conducting traffic in narcotics and running other rackets from inside the prison walls.

These disclosures tell a sordid story of partnership between criminals and those who are entrusted with law enforcement. Without such an alliance, crime could not endure on the scale that it now exists. The basis of this alliance between crooks and law-enforcement agents is, of course, profit. The criminals divide their loot with agents of the law in return for protection, and I am convinced that this is being done on a wholesale scale, throughout the country.

INVESTIGATIONS USEFUL

There is one thing no criminal and no person protecting criminals can stand, and that is publicity. I am convinced that a sweeping investigation of public officials, at regular periods, has the desirable effect of keeping them on their guard lest they be caught in questionable transactions. To illustrate the point, observe the effect the present senatorial investigation into the air-mail scandal is having. I dare say that no public official will undertake any form of graft while this investigation is under way. The most helpful factor about the investigation is the publicity connected with it. At any moment it may bring into the limelight prominent names which will be destroyed forever. The fear of such a possibility is a check on crime; especially does it discourage law enforcement agents from forming alliances with criminals; and without such partnerships, criminals are soon caught and subdued. They become bold and highly efficient only when they know that their partnership with the law makes detection or conviction practically an impossibility.

Catching criminals after they have committed crimes is not sufficient to discourage crime when it is being conducted on a wholesale scale, through a Nation-wide epidemic as that which now exists. Something must be done to affect crime before it takes place, and that something, whatever it is, must happen to all who are interested in crime, both the actual perpetrators and those who furnish them with immunity from prosecution. This country has reached the place where open season must be declared on criminals, which means, also, their partners and silent allies.

Sometimes it becomes necessary to fight fire with fire. Gentle methods will never subdue criminals. They know nothing but force and punishment. Once we all get this fact clearly fixed in our minds, and stop coddling criminals and turning them loose in the community on parole, we will have gone a long way toward outwitting these human vultures.

PLANS TO COMBAT CRIME

We must not only declare open season on criminals but we must also offer a rich bounty for their pelts, and I mean just that—their pelts. This desirable end might be reached through some combination of the following briefly described methods:

First. If the American Bankers' Association offered a standing reward of $50,000 for every person killed while engaged in an attempt to hold up a bank and $25,000 reward for every person caught and convicted of this crime, the popular pastime of bank robbery would decline in a hurry, and for the reason that every bank employee in the country would prepare to earn one of these rich bounties. The United States Government might well afford to add to these bounties by offering additional rewards and still save money which is now spent in tracing such criminals.

Second. Every municipality should create a standing reward of a substantial amount payable to those who apprehend and help to convict persons engaged in the more popular form of major rackets, such as kidnaping, bank robbery, and so forth. In the event law-enforcement agents are involved as protectors, those who disclose the alliance should receive similar bounties for their help. There is always some person connected with or cognizant of alliances between public officials and criminals who will tell for a price. This trait of human nature can be and should be capitalized as a means of discouraging alliances between criminals and law-enforcement agents.

Third. In the fight against kidnaping, bank robbery, and other similar major crimes, which now have attained the status of organized rackets, it should be obligatory for the State to offer not only immunity to those who doublecross their allies in crime but they should receive, also, a substantial reward in money—both the immunity and the reward being conditioned upon positive, corroborative evidence, to discourage perjury.

Fourth. The radiobroadcasting systems of the country should be brought into service, and daily broadcasts should be made of the descriptions of all known suspects of crime in the higher brackets, together with the posted rewards for information leading to arrest and conviction. Practically every home, hotel, and rooming house has a radio set. If each of these sets became a possible eye of detection of every criminal, and if there was a monetary motive sufficient to induce people to tune in and listen daily to these broadcasts, the system would result in quick capture of professional criminals. All filling stations (which criminals traveling in automobiles must visit daily) should be equipped with radio-receiving sets connected directly with police headquarters, so the filling station operators might earn a nice fat bonus every time a "Machine-Gun Kelly" drove up for gas.

Fifth. Possession of a machine gun by any unauthorized person should carry with it a heavy prison sentence, and the sale of a machine gun to any but authorized purchasers should carry a similar sentence. The picture, finger prints, name, and address of every person purchasing machine guns for authorized purchasers should be on file in the Department of Justice.

Sixth. Every municipality should have a citizens' vigilance committee, made up of well-known business and professional men, who would carefully inspect the work of all law-enforcement agents and who would see to it that State and municipal bounties offered by the taxpayers were paid to those entitled to them.

Policemen, prosecuting attorneys, judges, and lawyers sometimes enter into partnership with criminals because there is profit and, under present conditions, comparative safety from detection. Change the system, remove this comparative assurance of safety and supplant it by almost certain exposure of those who protect criminals and a mighty blow would be struck at the very heart of the operators of the crime wave which is sweeping this country.

Let us speak frankly and courageously and admit that the crime situation in America has become so ugly that it cannot be met with ordinary, polite, strictly orthodox methods. In the language of the street, we must become "hard boiled" and as merciless as those we are defending ourselves against. We are at war with a highly organized enemy whose system of prey is protected by men enjoying good names and high places in organized business, religion, and politics.

MUST USE STRONG METHODS

We cannot dislodge the enemy until we deprive him of the protection of his front of decency, and this front will not yield to anything except the fear of publicity and the possibility of more direct punishment.

Those who want protection must earn the right to it. Twenty men and women of proved character and integrity and moral courage could band themselves together and wage war so hotly in any crime-ridden city that criminals and those who furnish the protection would be compelled to desist. I repeat, publicity is one of the most effective weapons available for use in discouraging crime and criminal alliances. Second in importance is a system which makes the disclosure of crime and criminals profitable. Crime is carried on because it is profitable, and for no other reason, except in isolated cases. It can be discouraged by a system which makes disclosure still more profitable.

My suggestion is that the people of every city, acting through vigilantes, take steps to make it profitable for those who are aware of crime and the whereabouts of criminals to disclose that information, and that double bounties be paid when and where alliances between law-enforcement agents and criminals are proved. Crime can be discouraged, and eventually brought down to a less alarming level, by making detection sure and profitable.

Organized crime could not carry on without protection. This protection comes from two major sources; namely, law-enforcement agents and crooked politicians and lawyers, who knowingly serve professional criminals in return for fees, the very size of which marks them as being nothing more nor less than a division of the criminal's profits. Here is a problem which deserves the attention of the American Bar Association. Also, there should be rigid laws passed which will discourage lawyers from representing known professional criminals under penalty of becoming accessories to crimes committed by those criminals. Professional criminals are dangerous to society, but they are not half as dangerous as so-called "respectable" citizens who shield criminals with their names and lawyers who provide them with legal protection.

ROOSEVELT LEADS WAY

The President of the United States has demonstrated not only that the people of America have declared open season on exploiters of all sorts and on professional criminals and racketeers but he has also given us a fine demonstration of what can happen when Mr. John Public begins to take an interest in his own affairs instead of leaving everything to professional law-enforcement agents and crooked politicians. No President who ever occupied the White House has been more fully supported in spirit and in deed than President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and the basis of this universal support is the fact that he has shown by his every act that he means to help the people rid themselves of all and sundry persons who have heretofore lived and grown fat from exploitation of their fellow men.

There has never been a time in the history of this country when it was so easy to get a following to back up leaders who have the courage and the honesty of purpose to throw themselves on the side of common decency in this battle for the rights of the people and against the might of gangsters and legally protected exploiters.

Crime will be lowered and criminals will be driven into a corner when the people organize themselves back of a plan that will make the punishment of criminals so certain and so terrible that men will not turn to crime as a profession. When the criminal goes out looking for victims, all rules are suspended, and he takes any form of unfair advantage that may suit his purpose. In dealing with him, when he is caught and before he is caught, all rules should also be suspended, and he should be hunted and punished as ruthlessly as if he had no legal rights whatsoever. As a matter of common sense and justice (although not legal), the professional criminal might well be treated as one who has forfeited all rights to legal protection.

Professional criminals know and respect only a power greater than their own. We have that power, and we should have the courage to use it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate bill No. 59 to the foregoing bill with an amendment.

In lieu of the language inserted in said House amendment insert the following:

(1) Any sugar, imported prior to the effective date of a processing tax on sugar beets and sugar cane, with respect to which it is established (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury), that there was paid at the time of importation a duty at the rate in effect on January 1, 1934, and (2) any sugar held on April 25, 1934, by, or to be delivered under a bona fide contract of sale entered into prior to April 25, 1934, to any manufacturer or converter, for use in the production of any article (except sugar) and not for ultimate consumption as sugar, and (3) any article (except sugar) processed wholly or in chief value from sugar beets, sugar cane, or any product thereof, shall be exempt from taxation under subsection (a) of this section, but sugar held in customs custody or control on April 25, 1934, shall not be exempt from taxation under subsection (a) of this section, unless the rate of duty paid upon the withdrawal thereof was the rate of duty in effect on January 1, 1934.

The Senate insists upon its amendment, asks a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. COSTIGAN, Mr. REED, and Mr. COUZENS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PHYLLIS AND HAROLD LOUIS PRATT

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 472) for the relief of Phyllis Pratt and Harold Louis Pratt, a minor, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the words "Phyllis Pratt", strike out the word "and" and insert "in her own right and as legal guardian of."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

FARMER DELEGATES FROM OHIO, ETC.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, tonight in the caucus room of the old Office Building on the third floor, there is to be a meeting of farmer delegates of the National Farmers' Union from Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana in support of the Frazier-Lemke bill. All Members are invited to attend this meeting.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, this meeting is called at the request of farmers themselves. These farmers are from Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio. Their avowed purpose is to secure the enactment of the Frazier-Lemke bill. They know, and no one can fool them, that before the bill can be voted on the motion to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from further consideration of the bill must receive 145 signatures.

Yesterday, April 24, in my remarks you will find a rather complete explanation of this bill. You will also find there the reasons that are cited to prove that this bill is the only legislation that can be enacted during this session of Congress to save thousands of farmers from confiscation of their farms, their homes, and bankruptcy.

Those reasons are twofold. First, the failure of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program materially to advance prices of grains and livestock in the Corn Belt. Second, the failure of the Farm Credit Administration to refinance adequately farmers' loans which are about to be foreclosed.

Only today I received a telegram from John K. Chaney, a farmer living in Wood County, Ohio, who has given much of his time to the saving of farmers about to be foreclosed. Mr. Chaney wires me that a farmer, Francis Kunesh, Ney, Ohio, owns 240 acres of land. I happen to be familiar with the land in that particular territory. It is level, black land, well drained, very fertile, and in the most productive belt in Ohio. That land in 1909 was easily worth $100 an acre. The Farm Loan Act of 1933 makes it mandatory for land to be apprized at its 1909 value, then lend the owner 50 percent of that appraised value. Yet Mr. Kunesh's application has been rejected. His application was for $5,000, or approximately $20 an acre.

Yet this loan was refused by the Federal land bank at Louisville, has been foreclosed, and the foreclosure will be confirmed next Monday by the common pleas judge of Defiance County unless I am successful in having the Federal land bank intervene and save this man. Accordingly, Mr. Ernest Rice, general agent for the Farm Credit Administration at Louisville, was notified today, and I feel sure that he will order a reappraisal of this farm and notify Judge Openlander of his action.

A communication under date of April 21 was received from Hon. Harry W. Frick, State representative from Tiffin, Seneca County, Ohio. Mr. Frick advises me of the dire straits in which the owners of a farm of several hundred acres of the best farming land in the county, situated just outside the city limits of Tiffin, Ohio, find themselves.

The owners have made application for a loan of $22,000 and were granted $14,800 by the Federal Land Bank of Louisville, Ky. This farm, which is of the highest fertility, and which in 1909 was worth $150 an acre, and the value greatly enhanced because of its close proximity to a thriving city of 15,000 people, would amply support a loan for the required amount, and it cannot be refinanced with a lesser amount of money.

The ability and industry of the owners to pay off the mortgage is beyond question. They are the owners of a dairy herd which brings them an income of around $200 a month now, at the ridiculously low prices of dairy products.

Such cases as these come to my office literally by the score. Hundreds of them are on file now awaiting reappraisals which have been promised. Hundreds of others have been reapprized, and many of them rejected. The Farm Credit Administration set-up is not in sympathy with distressed farmers. It is "banker" minded. It is averse to taking any action which will eliminate the strangle hold of the money kings and bond grabbers of this country on those unfortunates who are losing their homes and their farms by the confiscation route every time the sun rises and sets. This is why we demand action on the Frazier bill.

It is not alone for the farmers who are fighting for freedom against slavery and serfdom of the money lenders that I speak; it is for all others of our distressed citizens who are forced to borrow money from the Shylocks.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has lent billions of dollars to bankers—good and bad—to insurance companies, to railroad companies, to mortgage-loan companies, to 36-percent loan sharks, upon good security, and upon questionable security. The bankers hoard this money which the Government, through the taxpayers, has advanced.

Under present laws and regulations they are required to keep twice the amount of actual currency on hand as in former days. In the majority of cases they serve only as depositaries of the people's money. The ordinary man or woman cannot borrow money from them. Small industries cannot borrow money from them, with the result that the captains of industry and the money kings get the bulk of the swag. This unfair and piratical system must be corrected. The same opportunity to borrow money from the Government at low rates of interest must be afforded to the unemployed worker, to the distressed small business man, small industrialist, and to others.

Naturally, the Government must have good security. So, in accordance with this viewpoint, I am introducing today in the House of Representatives a bill that will make possible loans to the individuals and classes heretofore mentioned. An individual borrower will be required to give the same security that is now required by the Morris Plan Banks, or in lieu of that, give security that is acceptable in the normal course of banking business.

My bill authorizes and empowers the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make personal loans secured by promissory notes of the borrower with one or more comakers, or with other acceptable security. It provides that section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Act as amended is amended by adding after the first paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans, through such agencies as it may designate or create, to individuals, partnerships, or corporations, upon the security of promissory notes of the borrowers with not less than one comaker, or with such other security in lieu of comakers' endorsements as the Corporation may deem adequate, upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe pursuant to this section.

The only difference in securing individual loans under my bill and through the lending agencies now in effect, is that instead of paying 7, 8, and 10 or 12 percent, the borrower will pay only 4 percent, since my bill provides that the rate of interest on all such loans shall be 4 percent per annum. [Applause.]

As further evidence of my avowed policy to help all of our financially stricken people, I heartily approve of the action we are now taking to bring the McLeod bill on the floor of this House for vote. We do not expect nor ask that the bill be enacted as drafted. We are willing that it shall be so amended as to include all closed banks, whether members of the Federal Reserve System or not.

We are willing to accept an amendment that will limit pay-offs in full to all accounts which do not exceed $2,500. What we want is action on some bank depositor pay-off bill before this Congress adjourns.

I, myself, have introduced a bill which is based on the principles of the McLeod bill, but which contains the amendatory provisions herein mentioned.

No one can say that the plan proposed under these bills is not a good plan. No one will seriously contend that it is not a humanitarian move. No one will maintain that the plan is not a commendable one. The plan should not by any means be confined to national banks or State member banks of the Federal Reserve System. Every depositor in a State bank is just as much a citizen of the United States as the man who placed his funds in the national bank, and as such a citizen he is fully entitled to be a beneficiary of the proposed plan.

Depositors in the State banks cannot lose their all and at the same time be taxed to support a plan that would benefit the national bank depositor. It goes without question that heretofore all banking laws, whether State or national, were so worded as to be misleading to the general public. No sane and intelligent people would ever have intrusted their hard-earned life savings in banks had they known the weakness of the so-called "safety" that the bankers themselves provided. To clarify this statement, let me say that the laws and statutes on our books were deceiving in that they could be construed one way and interpreted another.

Those laws were, and still are, essentially drafted for the benefit of the bankers instead of the depositors. In a civil and criminal investigation of defunct banks in my own State of Ohio it was proved conclusively that depositors were deliberately misled and misinformed by bankers and public officials sworn to the solemn duty of upholding the banking laws and protecting the rights and interests of depositors, big and little, high and low.

They were mouthpieces for bankers' propaganda, and preached and talked safety and confidence in the banks and in the bankers. The banker proclaimed blatantly and with much gusto, "This bank inspected by the State banking department." Again, "This bank is a member of the Federal Reserve System."

Here arises the important question as to why the Government of the United States should pay off these depositors who were duped and defrauded, the same as were innocent purchasers of Insull stock, railroad stocks and bonds of industry, stocks and bonds of public utilities, duped and defrauded by the banking racketeers and pirates.

The laws were inefficient, incomplete, as full of holes as a moth-eaten coat, and utterly unable to protect those whom they were expected to protect—the depositors. Since banking laws permitted and countenanced these inconsistencies and permitted public confidence to be raped and embezzled, then it is a moral obligation of our Government and of the Congress of the United States to make it possible for these toiling masses to be reimbursed for the losses incurred through no fault of their own.

These losses do not represent speculation. They do not represent investment with hope for gain in capital. They represent life savings deposited for a competence in declining years, deposited for the education of their growing children, deposited for a rainy day, deposited to buy more conveniences and necessities of life.

If these deposits had been made for the purpose of reinvesting, if they had been made for the purpose of speculating on the New York Stock Exchange, or for the purpose of speculating on the Chicago Board of Trade, or for the purpose of speculating in lotteries, or for the purpose of speculating in other gambling deals, then, as Kipling says, "That is another story."

And now, today, to those who contend that, if bank depositors are reimbursed then the Government must reimburse those who lost in stocks and bonds, in security and bond investments, my answer is, "That is another story."

Under the plan we propose, we will help the little depositor, instead of the big one as some claim. This is not mere conversation. It is not propaganda. I can prove to you that in my own State the plan we now propose, namely, a limitation of full pay off to $2,500, will relieve thousands of our citizens.

In an official report received recently from Hon. Theodore H. Tangeman, director of commerce, for the State of Ohio, I find that during the 4-year period ending December 31, 1933, 178 banks have closed, impounding deposits of $513,011,119. Of the 178 banks closed during the period covered by this report, 143 remained in liquidation on December 31, 1933; 27 having been reopened and 8 sold. The report indicates that, of the $513,011,119 of deposits impounded in the closings, $233,745,333 have been released to depositors through cash dividends, offsetting obligations, reopenings and sales; representing an average percentage return to depositors of 45 percent. The report states: This does not mean that every depositor in each closed institution has received 45 percent of his deposit; some have received more, others less, depending on the circumstances surrounding liquidation in each unit.

The comparison of deposits by the member and nonmember banks, closed from January 1, 1930, to December 31, 1933, discloses the following:

	Number	Deposits
State nonmember banks	158	$166,787,033
Federal Reserve member banks	20	346,224,086
Total	178	513,011,119

From the foregoing, it is apparent that the average amount of deposits in the nonmember banks was $1,055,614, and the average total amount of deposits in the 20 Federal Reserve member banks was $17,311,204.

In liquidating these banks, the sum of $36,449,006 was borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and solvent banks in Ohio. Of this amount, we find that one bank in Cincinnati received $1,307,670, the 5th-3d Union Trust Co. of Cincinnati. The Union Trust Co. of Cleveland received $13,343,491 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and $5,000,000 from the National City Bank of Cleveland, Ohio. The Guardian Trust Co. of Cleveland received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $11,162,036 and $5,188,809 from the National City Bank of Cleveland, Ohio, making a grand total of $32,839,970 received by three large banks, while 25 smaller banks received the comparatively small sum of $3,610,038 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and from some 12 or 15 Ohio banking institutions.

These statistics and figures are given to indicate that the big bankers and particularly in Ohio were the beneficiaries of the millions that were obtained to pay dividends. These large banking institutions in the case of the Union Trust Co. and the Guardian Trust Co. of Cleveland also proved to be the worst racketeers and violators of the law.

A number of officials of these banks have been and are still being indicted. For these racketeers I hold no briefs nor sympathy. I am not so much interested in securing relief for the big depositors as I am for the small ones.

This is a frank statement. Nevertheless, it is only by taking care of the little fellow first that we can ever get this country back on its feet again. [Applause.]

LOVETTE v. REECE

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 358

Resolved, That O. B. Lovette was not elected a Representative to the Seventy-third Congress from the First Congressional District of the State of Tennessee, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That B. CARROLL REECE was duly elected a Representative to the Seventy-third Congress from the First Congressional District of the State of Tennessee, and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELLIS v. THURSTON

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 359

Resolved, That Lloyd Ellis was not elected a Representative in the Seventy-third Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of the State of Iowa, and is not entitled to a seat as such Representative.

Resolved, That LLOYD THURSTON was elected a Representative in the Seventy-third Congress from the Fifth Congressional District of the State of Iowa, and is entitled to a seat as such Representative.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION CONTEST—M'ANDREWS v. BRITTEN

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, and ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That James McAndrews was not elected a Representative to the Seventy-third Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of the State of Illinois, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That FRED A. BRITTEN was duly elected a Representative to the Seventy-third Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of the State of Illinois, and is entitled to retain his seat.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard briefly on this matter.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, when I asked that these resolutions be taken up this afternoon, I agreed with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS] that if any time was to be consumed I would not offer them until tomorrow. If Members wish to be heard on the resolution, I shall ask unanimous consent that it be taken up as the first order of business tomorrow after the reading of the Journal and the completion of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will let the House decide the matter now. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois desires much time. I suggest that the matter be disposed of now.

Mr. PARKER. I should be pleased to do that, but for my agreement with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS].

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to a brief statement; but if there is to be any extended discussion, I shall object, for we have been trying during the course of 2 or 3 weeks to get this vocational-education bill to the floor of the House.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution at this time and that it may be taken up tomorrow immediately after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is privileged, and the gentleman can call it up at any time.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 324.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 324

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 7059, a bill to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories; and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] the usual 30 minutes on his side for control on the rule.

Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose to consume only a few minutes in presenting this resolution with the understanding that this was a unanimous report from the Committee on Education, as I believe it was.

In order to conserve time for the consideration of other bills that are pressing for action, the Committee on Rules has granted but 1 hour of general debate for the consideration of this bill. I have had no requests from members of my committee on this side for time on the rule; and, in order to accommodate some members of the Committee on Education who desire to speak on the bill, unless there is objection, at the conclusion of my brief statement I shall be glad to let the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS], Chairman of the Committee on Education, yield the balance of the time that might be left to me on the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I know of nothing that I may add to the report of the committee on this bill. This program of Federal aid to vocational education has been the law of the land for quite a number of years. I have always been an ardent advocate of these appropriations, and, although some gentlemen for whose opinions I have the very highest respect and regard differ from my attitude upon the matter, I feel that the appropriations out of the Federal Treasury for this purpose by experience and trial have amply justified themselves by way of benefit conferred upon the youth of our country.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does this bill make any change in the method of allotment that has been followed in previous bills?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If I am in error in answering this question it will be corrected by members of the committee when they come to discuss the bill; but my information is that the provisions of this bill conform substantially to the provisions of the existing George-Reed Act, which is the authorization under which this appropriation has been made for the last 3 years. I may state, Mr. Speaker, that the committee has added one feature to this bill, which, although it does not increase the appropriation, I think is most desirable in order to make it more equitable in its application as representing benefits conferred upon all classes of our population.

Under the original bill these sums were only extended for vocational education in agriculture and in home economics. The pending bill provides that one third of the appropriation authorized by it shall be applied to industrial and manual training outside of rural communities. In other words, it will give to the boys and girls of industrial sections who may desire to secure some form of manual or industrial training equal opportunity in this respect to those in the rural sections of the country.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, this policy has become almost a national policy upon the part of Congress. As originally introduced this bill provided that these appropriations should be permanent in their nature. I think very properly the Committee on Education has limited its operation to a period of 3 years, authorizing an appropriation of $3,000,000, out of the Federal Treasury to be allocated to the States under the old system which we so well understand.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Is there anything in this bill that requires an equal appropriation by the States receiving the benefit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; as I understand, it preserves the old 50-50 principle.

Mr. SNELL. Just the same as it was originally passed?

Mr. DOUGLASS. It is the same provision as in the Reed bill, 50-50.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I ask the gentleman how much additional cost this puts upon the Federal Treasury per annum?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unless I am in error, this provides no additional cost out of the Federal Treasury over and above the current authorization for this purpose. If I am mistaken, I should like to be corrected. I may say to the gentleman from Alabama that under the terms of the Economy Act a reduction was made in the amount actually allocated the present fiscal year. I do not know the exact amount of the curtailment, but it was probably 25 percent. I shall ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ELLZEY] to state whether or not this authorization is the same as in the present law minus the deductions under the Economy Act.

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. Under the operations of the George-Reed Act there was $2,500,000 allocated. This bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000, but an additional $1,000,000 has been added for the training in trade and industry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unless there are other questions, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] 30 minutes, to dispose of as he sees fit. And, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS], chairman of the committee, may yield the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL].

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favor of this bill, and may I preface my remarks by saying a few words about the purpose and the value of vocational education, using this term in the broad sense to include the other subjects here mentioned, not merely trade and industry but agriculture and home economics as well. May I also be permitted to relate an incident that occurred in the legislature of my own State in the committee on education at the time when it was my privilege to be serving as chairman of that committee?

At the first meeting of the committee a gentleman who came from a farming district, arose and said: "Before we go any further, I think that I ought to make plain my position with regard to this here education. I do not know as I am much for it, anyway, and I will tell you why. When I was a boy a fellow came to our town, and he came to our school to talk to us boys about the value of education. This is what he said: 'Boys, as I was walking along the road this morning I saw a man sitting on the bank watching five other men dig. Now, boys, why was that fellow sitting on the bank? It was because he had education; you get education, and you can sit on the bank and watch the other fellow dig.' And he added: 'The trouble nowadays is that everybody has education, and everybody wants to sit on the bank, and nobody wants to do the digging.'"

Having told this story, I must, in justice to the gentleman whom I have quoted, add that he proved to be a man of great sagacity and of most uncommon common sense, and one of the most useful and helpful members of the committee.

With regard to the larger problem which he presented I have no solution to offer. Were I building Utopias after the modern fashion, I might perhaps suggest that this situation might be met, as my friend William James once suggested, by drafting all the young women and young men into a large army, and requiring them to serve for a year, or possibly 2 years, under strict military discipline, compelled to do the jobs that no one wants to do—the unpleasant jobs, the drudgery jobs. But I am not building Utopias, and I shall pass over that larger question. There is, however, another question closely connected with it which immediately concerns us. As our educational system in this country has developed, it has become more and more standardized, the wheels have been well oiled, all the children are moved forward together from grade to grade in the grammar school, from grammar school to high school, and from high school to college or university without having been properly prepared for any promotion. The result is a twofold evil. In the first place, there is a very large number of persons who go through this mill and come out at the end who are by their education spoiled for the tasks for which they are by nature adapted, and at the same time not qualified for those pursuits to which they aspire. We have a very large number of young men and young women in this group, and they constitute a menace to civilization. These people remind me very much of a man named Peter Soderini. I do not know much about him, but his life history is told in these brief lines:

> The night that Peter Soderini died,
> He at the gates of Hell himself presented,
> "What! You come to Hell, poor soul demented, > Go to babies' limbo," Pluto cried.

These people find themselves very much in the position of Peter Soderini. They are persons who, in the words of the Scotch proverb, are "Nae fit for Heaven, and would ruin a' Hell." This is the group that constitutes the great recruiting ground for our criminals, high and low.

What we have been doing through this educational process is setting up an industry for the mass production of social misfits. The second unfortunate result is that there has been a very great exaggeration of the importance, the worth, and the dignity of what might be called the "kid-glove" jobs. Vocational education aims to remedy both of these defects. In the first place it drives home the truth that a skilled trade is as honorable and as useful a way of earning a living as any other, and is entitled to just as much social recognition. The second and the more important result is that it ties up education to the native interests and aptitudes of the pupil, laying the foundations for a sound education, and preparing him to be a self-supporting and self-respecting citizen.

Mr. Speaker, I come from a State that is very much opposed to all types of grants in aid that are to be matched by the State, and particularly to such grants when they apply to education.

We are able to bear our own educational burden, and we feel that every State should do the same, and that if a State is not able to do so it has no right to be a State but should become again a Territory, in which case the Federal Government could carry all of its burdens. But there is this to be said with regard to this particular bill. The purpose of the Smith-Hughes Act and the purpose of the George-Reed Act, of which this is the sequel, was not to take care of vocational education in the States. The aid given by the Federal Government is a mere trifle. In my own State of Connecticut what we receive from the Federal Government amounts to $35,000 in round numbers, and what we spend is $330,000. The Federal contribution is, therefore, a very small part of the cost. These measures, however, were introduced in the first place not to pay for this work but in order that the Department of Education of the Federal Government might pass on to the States this general program of educational work, stimulate their interest in it, get it started, taking it for granted that the States would then carry their own burden.

If this bill were permanent legislation, I should be unalterably opposed to it. It was introduced as permanent legislation. This the committee refused to sanction. It was first suggested that the period be limited to 5 years. I myself would have preferred to have it 1 year, but, as a compromise, it was made 3 years. All the members of the committee were agreed that this is no time to withdraw this relief; that this period of depression is not the time to economize on this important work.

I feel, therefore, that it is necessary that this aid should be continued for the coming year, and I am willing to support the proposal that it should be continued for 3 years. I hope the measure will be enacted into law.

I do not know that it is necessary to take any more time to discuss this question; but I do hope that those who are opposed to grants in aid on principle, as I am, will not regard this as a bar to voting for this bill. The amount is small; the work is of vast importance; we must continue this stimulation of interest in all of our communities. At the same time we expect and demand that they stand on their own feet, when once they get their own houses in order, and do not come back knocking at the Federal door.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAKEWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentleman tell the amount of a Federal tax dollar that goes to education?

Mr. BAKEWELL. I cannot give the gentleman that figure, but it is relatively very small.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman has not that in percentage or in amount?

Mr. BAKEWELL. No; but it is a very small amount. This bill is only $3,000,000; and in these days, when we talk in terms of billions, that is a bagatelle.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAKEWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. In view of the national interest in maintaining an intelligent citizenry, does the gentleman not believe there is a difference in principle between Federal aid in behalf of education and Federal aid in behalf of other projects to which such aid is given?

Mr. BAKEWELL. I do; but I should like to say that the real danger of Federal aid to education, we all realize, is Federal domination of education in the States. This is the worst thing that could befall. Education must be left to the States and to the local communities if it is to be well and effectively done. We fear where money is given, dictation will follow.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. May I say to the gentleman that in that I thoroughly agree with him?

Mr. BAKEWELL. I would say further that, in my judgment, nothing is more important in a republican form of government than an enlightened and educated citizenry, and nothing is more menacing to the welfare of the country than ignorance, save only one thing. There is one thing that is worse than ignorance and more menacing than ignorance, and that is conceit of knowledge where no real knowledge exists; and this is what results when we keep putting these children through the schools in this mechanical fashion. They come out in the end with very, very little knowledge of very many things, and this is the real danger to the country.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. And does not the gentleman believe that that very situation may arise out of the fact that under present economic conditions many communities and some States may not be able to give to the growing generation the kind of education that the gentleman has denominated as real education?

Mr. BAKEWELL. Yes. I think this bill will help bring about the result that we all desire, and for that reason I favor it. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I shall have but one more speaker tonight, and I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek consideration and advocate the support of the vocational education appropriation bill, H.R. 7059. This measure as proposed is planned and designed to meet a problem of national need and importance. It is of vital interest and deep concern to the citizens of the State I have the privilege to represent in Congress. The great Commonwealth of Wisconsin pioneered in the field of vocational education. Long recognized as a State of liberal and progressive trends and tendencies, it early appreciated the need and necessity of a large group of our people for part-time vocational education. With resolution and courage, Wisconsin accepted the challenge this condition presented and with vision, wisdom, and energy planned a system of part-time vocational education that serves efficiently a large number of its workers, youth and adult, rural and urban, with exceptional educational opportunities. In the year 1911 our legislature enacted a part time school law that for 23 years has been part of the organic law of the State. To obtain this enabling legislation was no easy task. It met with strong, vigorous opposition that was active and organized. As a plan of education it was condemned and criticized as impractical, ineffective, and expensive. Fortunately, success attended the untiring, unselfish effort of a group of educational pioneers and experimenters, and in their labors they created a system of vocational education involving three great principles, all essential to the success of the plan. The principles laid down as the foundation for this program are as follows: First, a separate administrative board representing the groups directly affected in the administration of the part time school law, namely, employers, employees, farmers, and the public; second, a separate fund provided by a mill tax, thus insuring adequate financial support; third, an effective part time school attendance law for juvenile workers.

The administration system as applied in the representative principle has proved sound and effective. Representatives of capital, labor, farm, and the public assures a broad and impartial policy and management. Partisanship under this plan of administration is impossible, for all divisions of industry and workers have a voice and a vote and receive equal and just consideration. This balance of representation is true of both State and community boards. The vocational management and the vocational school is a joint project of all these community interests and divisions and treat impartially and with equity all the problems of the whole group. Wisely it provides an adequate financial support by an application of local mill tax, not to exceed 1½ mills, and further provides a State aid to supplement these local taxes. A strong and effective school-attendance law for juvenile workers assures educational influence in the lives of all of our youth and requires school attendance to all juveniles until the age of 18 years is reached. With the growth and development of vocational education throughout the Nation, Federal aid was urged, and in 1917 the Smith-Hughes Act guaranteeing these aids became law. It created a Federal Board for Vocational Education and granted aid to the States for trade, industrial, home-making, and agricultural education, provided the States do their share in appropriating funds for the same purpose. Under this plan of local tax support and State and Federal aid, vocational education in Wisconsin has made great strides and grown to flourish to great service and accomplishment. This attainment is registered in the record that points to 38 vocational schools, 43 evening schools. These units are part of the city vocational training program. One hundred departments of vocational agriculture and 22 departments of home economics are established and are serving the rural plan. These schools are spread out in all sections of the State. They are well housed and equipped. They are manned by instructors, men and women, qualified by character, ability, and education to train, direct, and guide the groups that are served. The influence of the vocational school has reached out to directly contact more than 100,000 of our people in this current school year—men and women, both youth and adult, employed and unemployed, of the rural and urban districts—making these institutions and their activities real community centers for people of all ages and all callings, whom it trains, guides, and educates.

In the current school year it involved an expenditure, in round figures, of $2,558,000. Local tax raised in excess of $2,000,000 of that amount; State aid contributed $339,000, and the Federal aid totaled $162,000. Note that the large burden is on the local community and that the State aid supplements it in a generous manner, and that the Federal aid is not in excess of 6½ percent of the total. Planned as it is on well-grounded principles of education, administration, and instruction; developed, supported, and fortified by these factors of tax, we have erected a strong, comprehensive, and effective plan of education for great numbers of people. It has succeeded in a large measure through the years, and no better testimony of this truth is registered in a recent statement following an extensive survey as made by an interim committee on education. In part, this report states—

Wisconsin has reached the enviable position of world-wide leadership in the field of vocational education. Educators appearing before the committee from both the Middle West and East were high in their praise of what is being done educationally in Wisconsin for the working youth and adult. Scores of reports, books, and surveys suggest Wisconsin as worthy of imitation in the educational field. Early in the work of the interim committee it was apparent that vocational education offered no major problems for solution.

The record that vocational education has made in its steady growth and progress throughout the Nation justifies the Government making it a permanent part of its educational program. Its services, as rendered under normal conditions, have proven large and effective, and through the years' scope of its service and the field of its activities has grown and widened.

It is not difficult to understand that in a period of depression which has prevailed for a period of more than 4 years, with its unemployment and lack of work opportunity for the toilers of America, that out of this condition would grow a greater demand for such an institution. This is particularly true in the unemployed youth of our Nation. Thousands of them, graduates of our high schools, mentally alert and physically able, face a world which offers no work opportunity; with a strong desire for further education, they are denied that opportunity by lack of funds. Hopeless and discouraged, in idleness and despair, are we to leave them to the streets and the influence of unrest, discontent, and crime? More than any other institution in our whole scheme of education can vocational schools serve in this, the hour of their despair. It grants to them continued educational opportunity and training, organized effort, and discipline, a real force to assist them through these years of trial and trouble; and in the education they attain and the discipline they will meet they will be built up to serve when opportunity presents itself. In healthy study and occupation they will find new hope, cheer, and happiness. This is not the only group to know and receive the benefit of vocational training, but the adult, employed and unemployed, through this program can add to their educational equipment and opportunity, giving them better training, better viewpoints of life, and added equipment for intelligent and efficient service. As a nation we are conscious of the fact that it is a national obligation to educate our people. As a nation we cannot neglect that duty; to forget it is unwise and un-American. This Federal appropriation has contributed much to the growth and the progress of vocational education for the last 17 years. It is an essential part of it. In many instances it means the very existence of these institutions. In eliminating Federal aid it will have the effect of reducing State support and encourage local tax reductions. It would be a destructive policy that would threaten with defeat this successful form and method of practical part-time education.

It is my belief that in the continuation of this support and the passing of this appropriation at this time that it will fortify vocational education in the State and in the Nation and continue in force and effectiveness this plan that contributes so much to the welfare of our people. Investigation would show that organized labor and all groups of workers are definitely behind vocational education. Their leadership has urged in State and Nation the growth and development of this plan. It has the stamp of approval of the industrial leadership of America, particularly that group that make it a part of their management to study the needs, the aims, and objectives of their workers. This group has shown a sympathetic and understanding support of vocational part-time education. Able, farsighted, and forward-looking educators approve and encourage this educational development as a worthy and essential part of the national educational progress. The support of the Congress is sought to make this appropriation of $3,000,000 at this time. In my opinion, it would be a wise and patriotic action for us to take. [Applause.]

SUGAR BEETS AND SUGAR CANE

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H.R. 8861, to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman consulted the minority members of the committee?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I have seen the other Members.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the language inserted in said House amendment, insert the following:

"(1) Any sugar, imported prior to the effective date of a processing tax on sugar beets and sugar cane, with respect to which it is established (under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) that there was paid at the time of importation a duty at the rate in effect on January 1, 1934, and (2) any sugar held on April 25, 1934, by, or to be delivered under a bona fide contract of sale entered into prior to April 25, 1934, to any manufacturer or converter for use in the production of any article (except sugar) and not for ultimate consumption as sugar, and (3) any article (except sugar) processed wholly or of chief value from sugar beets, sugar cane, or any product thereof, shall be exempt from taxation under subsection (a) of this section, but sugar held in customs custody or control on April 25, 1934, shall not be exempt from taxation under subsection (a) of this section, unless the rate of duty paid upon the withdrawal thereof was the rate of duty in effect on January 1, 1934."

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman explain in a few words what this does?

Mr. JONES. It does what was intended to be done by the other amendment. In exempting from the tax certain sugar held in stock, there was not included in the House amendment stock of domestic sugar on hand, also sugar made in this country and to be used for manufacturing purposes other than as sugar.

Mr. SNELL. It means what you intended to mean in the original bill?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, how much time is left on the rule?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 29 minutes left and the gentleman from Massachusetts 15 minutes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DARDEN (at the request of Mr. ROBERTSON), indefinitely, on account of death of a friend.

To Mr. MARLAND, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'MALLEY (at the request of Mr. BROWN of Kentucky), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mrs. CLARKE of New York (at the request of Mr. SNELL), indefinitely, on account of death in the family.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TOMORROW

The SPEAKER designated Mr. PARSONS to act as Speaker pro tempore tomorrow.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1934

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, whose blessed Son came not to be ministered unto but to minister: We humbly beseech Thee to bless all who have dedicated themselves to the service of their fellow men, that, being inspired by Thy love and following in the steps of the blessed Christ, each in his separate vocation may worthily minister to the weary and heavy-laden, to the friendless, sick, needy, and to those who are oppressed with wrong.

So shall Thy suffering children everywhere rise up to call Thy servants blessed; for the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together. Prosper Thou the work of our hands this day, and grant that we may ever worship Thee in the beauty of holiness. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, April 25, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

HOARDERS OF SILVER—TRANSMITTAL OF INFORMATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on yesterday a communication addressed to the Secretary of the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, indicated a purpose on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury hereafter in transmitting responses to the resolution of the Senate, no. 211, adopted March 20, 1934, relating to hoarders of silver, to transmit future communications to the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

It is suggested for the advice of the Secretary that, under the precedents and proper custom, the information should be transmitted direct to the Senate in response to the Senate's resolution and the Senate will take action in referring the same to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes the Secretary of the Treasury will take note of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is so assumed.

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT—EDITORIAL FROM LIBERTY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD and lie on the table an editorial appearing May 5, 1934, in Liberty, from the pen of Mr. Bernarr Macfadden, under the title "Congratulations to Our Hard-Working Chief."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Liberty, May 5, 1934]

CONGRATULATIONS TO OUR HARD-WORKING CHIEF

By Bernarr Macfadden

More than a year with President Roosevelt, and the business situation continues to improve.

We have climbed out of the mire of the world's worst depression. We are on our way to dependable prosperity—not the hectic money-mad period from which we were suffering in 1929, but that which is substantial and dependable.

When the President first assumed his official duties we were on the verge of revolution. Conditions were not unlike those which brought on the French Revolution. Our citizens were scared. Big business men were fearful of the future; they did not know what was coming.

And then a new powerful leader—courageous, confident—lifted us out of the slough of discouragement and hopelessness.

As a Nation we were not unlike a man without a head, moving swiftly toward wreckage and ruin, realizing fully the fate that was before us and yet powerless to avoid the inevitable crash.

We have to thank our President for much of the change that has been wrought in the business status of this Nation. He saved us from national bankruptcy; he saved us from something that was probably far worse—for an unorganized people in which there are millions of unemployed would soon have been ruled by gangs and reckless, hungry mobs.

We can doubtless constructively criticize some of the activities of the administration, but our President has admitted again and again that experiments were necessary; that we were dealing with serious emergencies which required dependable remedies; that if the measures adopted proved to be ineffective, other methods would be tried.

But action and more action was necessary to save the Nation from ruin. And we got action and then some from the President, beginning with the day of his inauguration. The closing of the banks proved to the country that we had a daring, self-reliant leader at the helm. The Nation that was wobbling around like a chicken with its head off was quickly supplied with an intelligent directing force. Orderly regulations were substituted for chaotic confusion.

An example of the outstanding efficiency of our Chief Executive was demonstrated in his settlement of the automobile strike. Both business and labor leaders were satisfied with his decisions, and the fear on the part of big business that organized labor would be favored now seems to be groundless. The rights of the citizens—constitutional government—were upheld.

We supported the President even before he was nominated. We believed that he could furnish the executive ability so sadly needed at Washington. The series of articles of which he was the author, published in Liberty previous to his nomination, definitely informed the country just where he stood politically. And we intend to continue to support his administration. But that does not close our columns to constructive criticism.

During the first year of his occupancy of the White House it was the duty of citizens everywhere to stand together, to fight as a unit. But now that the general situation has become more nearly normal, it is just as much our duty to be watchful and to assist our Chief Executive with constructive advice. He has plainly stated that he invited suggestions from the lowliest citizen.

The white light of publicity is now filtering through all our governmental activities. The public everywhere is awakening to the revolutionary changes that are being made, and the people are expressing their opinions. Out of the hectic arguments that naturally ensue, definite dependable conclusions should be formed.

We all have reason for being profoundly grateful to our new leader. He may have made mistakes; in fact, he expected to make them. But his constructive accomplishments so far outweigh any failures he may have made that we can afford to ignore them.

Long live the President!

"May his reign be prolonged" is undoubtedly the wish of the majority of the citizens of this great Nation.

ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Postmaster General, Hon. James A. Farley, recently delivered an address in dedicating a new Federal building at Newark, N.J. I ask that that address lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. JAMES A. FARLEY, POSTMASTER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, AT THE CORNERSTONE EXERCISES OF THE NEW FEDERAL BUILDING, NEWARK, N.J., SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1934

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, every time I come to New Jersey I indulge in reminiscence. My mind today goes back to that eventful day in the summer of 1932 at Sea Girt, when that most tremendous and inspiring outpouring of people under the leadership of Mayor Frank Hague voiced its approval of the candidacy for the Presidency of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I can see from this delightful gathering that you haven't changed your minds since then.

I know and feel that the people of New Jersey are behind the new deal, behind the liberal leadership of our great and beloved President.

May I here say that the administration is certain of the spirit of your own State leaders, and I know that they are doing everything possible to promote the success of the Roosevelt administration. I refer particularly to my great personal friend of many years' standing, your own distinguished Governor, A. Harry Moore.

I want also to express my appreciation of the tireless efforts of your State chairman, Representative MARY T. NORTON, and I am most grateful for whatever assistance your congressional representatives have given the administration in the special and the present session of the Congress.

It is a real pleasure to me to be in your city, presided over by my good friend Mayor Meyer Ellenstein, and to participate in these exercises with your postmaster, John F. Sinnot, Jr.

Before proceeding further with my remarks, I desire to express to Mr. Chambliss and the committee in charge of these exercises my appreciation for their many courtesies and the effort put forth by them to make this day one never to be forgotten by persons privileged to be present at this ceremony.

The invitation extended to me by the citizens of Newark to participate in the ceremonies incident to the laying of the cornerstone of your new Federal building is greatly appreciated. I look about me and see the familiar faces of those whom I have long known and with whom I have worked. Let me tell you collectively what I wish I had time to tell each of you individually—no one appreciates or reciprocates more than I do the loyalty and warmth of your friendship and your welcome.

The patriotic sentiments that rise in our hearts on such an occasion as this cannot but inspire a deeper affection for our country. We feel more keenly, as we envision in our minds the magnificent building to be erected here, the honor and respect we owe to those who founded and built this great city and State and Nation. With strong faith in God, indomitable courage, persevering industry, and intelligence, the first settlers of 1666 and their descendants put their very lives into founding a city and a State which has become one of the cornerstones of the Federal Union.

These men and women gave a distinctive character of independence, loyalty, industry, and thrift to Newark that it has retained to this day. The surging throngs of new settlers from Great Britain, Ireland, Germany, Italy, and all parts of the world have partaken of this individuality that marks your citizens and has also added all that is fine of the culture of their native lands.

This is attested to by your happy homes, your beautiful parks, the splendid architecture of your churches and public buildings, your sculptured monuments to the bravery and patriotism of your sons, your schools, your great insurance and financial organizations, and your world-famous manufactories. More than that, it is attested to by the character of your citizenship. Whether on the battleground or in the forum, in the church, the schools, the Halls of Congress, in your great industries, in the fields of literature and art, or in public office the men and women of Newark have won endurable and enviable fame. Truly Newark is a representative American city.

As we lay this cornerstone today I look into the future and fancy I see your children's children in the years to come passing and viewing with reverence this symbol of your city's connection with the Federal Government. Let us hope that they may be able to say of us that we have not only kept unsullied all which was handed down to us in our National, State, and municipal governments that was good but that we also cast out of public life and affairs all that was bad and unwholesome. Let us hope they may truly say we left them a better and finer appreciation of the active interest each citizen should take in his country's government and the rectitude with which every official should carry out the trusts imposed upon him. Let them be able to say we left them a greater heritage of toleration for those of divergent opinions, more sympathy for the unfortunate, and a code of kindlier manners and better laws.

Your city and your people have long had the closest connection with the Federal Government and have always been intensely patriotic. Two of your sons, Burnet and Sergeant, were delegates to the Continental Congress. Newark was plundered and almost destroyed by the British in 1777 because of its revolutionary sentiments. Here General La Fayette received his warmest welcome when he made his triumphal journey through the United States after the Revolution. While we are on this subject, some early postal history may also be of interest.

There was a post office at Newark under the British colonial government. When Benjamin Franklin was Postmaster General under the Continental Congress he provided a space in his postal account ledger for Newark, but there are no entries therein. It is apparent the position of postmaster at Newark under the Continental Congress was a hazardous occupation. However, the ledger opened May 1, 1782, shows entries for the quarterly period from October 5, 1784, to January 5, 1785, which indicate the post office came under the control of the Continental Postal System about October 1784. John Burnet is shown as postmaster. It appears he was continued as postmaster under the Constitution and submitted his first financial account thereunder on February 16, 1790. Since that time 23 men have served as postmaster.

The first post office erected by the Government in Newark was in 1855 and the second was occupied in 1897. The one we lay the cornerstone for today will be the third. I hope to be able to be here at its dedication and enjoy its beauty and appreciate its utility with you.

It is well to have a knowledge of the happenings of the past as a guide for the present and the future. The era in which we live is remarkable for the rapid changes that are taking place in all of life's activities. This is true especially of the Post Office establishment. The great increase in the use of the telephone and telegraph, the changed methods of transportation, the increased use of motor-vehicle and air service and the decrease in railroad service, the use of mechanical devices in handling mail, the increase in radio advertising and consolidated advertising sheets instead of circularizing through the mails, and the use of other methods of advertising have naturally affected our revenues and our methods. These, taken in connection with the depression of the past few years, have given us a greatly reduced revenue and in many places a considerable surplus of employees. We are also confronted, and rightly so, by an insistent demand upon the part of the taxpayers to reduce governmental expenditures, as every dollar we spend over and above the revenue of the Post Office Department comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers in one way or another.

It is fitting, as Postmaster General, that I refer to these matters. As taxpayers I know you want me to, and I want you to know what my policy is as head of the postal establishment.

On March 2 I issued an order declaring that it would be necessary in the balancing of the Post Office budget to make additional furloughs and other retrenchments. I feel that the public is entitled to have its Post Office Department operated without any cost to the taxpayers. However, I am very happy now to say that due to improved business conditions and increased postal receipts, on last Monday, April 16, I issued an order, effective May 1, which revoked my previous order of March 2. It is a source of much satisfaction to me that conditions have so improved that I feel justified in carrying out my purpose as set forth at that time, and I want to take this occasion to express my appreciation to both the employees of the Postal Service and the public for their sympathetic cooperation.

The first Secretary of the Treasury, Alexander Hamilton, who supervised Post Office Department finances, believed that the postal establishment should be a revenue producer. Later Secretaries and postal officials felt that surplus revenues should be used for extending and improving service. This is a sound policy.

As time went on, with the various services that were added to our original job of delivering communications, it was found to be difficult to make the Department entirely self-supporting, though this was possible at times, particularly in the period from 1911 to 1919, with the exception of 2 years. Since 1919, however, there has been, until March 4, 1933, a steadily growing deficit. In 1932 this amounted to the staggering gross sum of $206,885,830.79. Even though we deduct from this very large deficit the cost of franked and penalty mail, and so-called "air mail and ship subsidies", etc., there still remains a net deficit of $152,246,188.

The present administration has placed emphasis upon the importance of a balanced Budget. When I accepted the office of Postmaster General, I felt it my duty to put into effect those measures which would reduce, and as soon as possible wipe out, this deficit, bearing, of course, in mind service to the public and justice to postal employees, with the result that the net deficit for the past fiscal year was approximately $48,000,000. As I have already stated, the Post Office budget stands balanced today, and it is a real pleasure and satisfaction on the part of myself and my associates in the Department to be able to announce to the public that no further payless furloughs and retrenchments are necessary to continue this sound policy.

While I am speaking on Post Office matters, let me say a few words about the annulment of the air-mail contracts, which in some quarters has been deliberately misconstrued and misrepresented and which has also been the object of much political sniping.

When one goes behind the fogs and smoke screens raised by selfish financial and political interests he finds that these contracts were conceived and executed by collusion and fraud and that millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money were being distributed to selected groups in violation of the plain mandate of the law that such contracts could only be let by competitive bidding. Some of the concerns whose contracts were canceled were owned or affiliated with powerful banking interests, holding, and manufacturing companies.

Unconscionable profits had been made, and exorbitant salaries and bonuses had been derived from stock promotions based on these fraudulent contracts. The system in vogue was unsound and dishonest, and it was my plain duty, under the law, to end it all and put the air-mail system on a sound, honest, and legal basis.

It was to be expected that the financial interests back of the companies whose contracts were annulled would exert every effort to bring about the restoration of these contracts. It is, therefore, not surprising that some of these companies through their connections have literally covered the country with hostile propaganda.

Much has been said in the air-mail propaganda to the effect that the air-mail contracts were annulled without a hearing. As a matter of fact, when the contracts were canceled the Post Office Department was in possession of written minutes of the meetings of the air-mail contractors which showed conclusively that there had been collusion between the contractors themselves and between the contractors and officials of the Post Office Department and that the contracts thus executed were fraudulent and were entered into without competitive bidding as required by law.

There was also before the Department at the time the contracts were annulled official copies of the transcript of evidence taken before the Senate investigating committee which contained the sworn admissions of representatives of a number of these air-mail contracting companies and which admissions made it perfectly clear that the contracts were fraudulent and contrary to the public interest.

The administration is earnestly seeking to put into effect a sound and legal air-mail policy and to correlate all the phases of aviation in which the Government is interested into a constructive program.

In conclusion, my friends, as we continue to erect on this cornerstone a beautiful edifice for the use of future generations, let us also continue to aid with our hearts, our minds, and our hands our great leader—the President of the United States—in erecting a Government edifice of laws and business ethics that will insure the happiness and prosperity of all the people. We have gone far along this line.

With a faith and courage responsive to his own, the rank and file of the people, regardless of political connections, have given President Roosevelt their whole-hearted support. In turn, he has given them a leadership that has lifted this country out of the slough of despond. Every day sees a rapid advance along the road to better business conditions. The trials of the winter are passed. There are better understandings of human rights and property rights. There is a fairer distribution of the products of labor. The ranks of the unemployed are diminishing. The price of farm products has increased rapidly within the past year; in many instances has more than doubled. There is a feeling of hope and confidence abroad. There is no longer fear of bank failures, and there is ample money for all lines of legitimate business. Factories long idle are now in operation; industrial employees are in a position to again purchase from the farmer, and thus in turn the farmer can again buy the products of industry and bring back to a great industrial State like New Jersey that prosperity and happiness which once was yours. Much remains to be done, but with your help our country will reach greater heights of prosperity and happiness than ever before. And of these blessings it is my wish that the people of Newark will have the share they so well deserve.

A bill (S. 3471) supplementary to, and amendatory of, the incorporation of Columbus University of Washington, D.C., organized under and by virtue of a certificate of incorporation pursuant to the incorporation laws of the District of Columbia as provided in subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

A bill (S. 3472) for the relief of Stefano Talanco and Edith Talanco; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3473) for the relief of Marion Von Bruning (nee Marion Hubbard Treat);

A bill (S. 3474) for the relief of Marion Von Bruning (nee Marion Hubbard Treat); and

A bill (S. 3475) for the relief of Henry C. Zeller and Edward G. Zeller with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income tax paid to the United States for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1916, and ending September 30, 1917, in excess of the amount of tax lawfully due for such period; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3476) to prohibit the making, passing, or negotiation of spurious checks or other financial paper purporting to be payable by institutions in other States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3477) for the relief of Raymond Grove; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3478) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to build a stadium at the end of East Capitol Street, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3479) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", approved February 27, 1929; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the following bills, and they were rereferred as indicated:

S. 3202. A bill to correct the military record of Robert George Lechleiter; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 3239. A bill to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Monocacy, Md.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

INVESTIGATION OF AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO., ITS SUBSIDIARIES, ETC.

Mr. DILL submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 225), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the operations, relationships, and activities of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., its subsidiaries, affiliates, and other concerns in which it or they have any direct or indirect financial interest or in which any of its officers or directors hold any office or exert any control and shall report to the Senate the facts as ascertained and make recommendations for such legislation as the committee deems desirable.

In making said investigation, the committee shall, among other things, investigate and report particularly on the following subjects:

(1) The financial structure and relationship of the company and its subsidiaries and affiliates and the extent to which its holding company structure enables it to evade regulation or taxation; the extent of interservice contracts between the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its subsidiary companies, and particularly contracts with the Western Electric Co. and other manufacturers of electrical communication equipment, if any; also the sale prices of telephone equipment to telephone operating companies, the profits upon such sales, and the effect of such sales upon the rate base of operating companies when used as a basis for telephone charges in the various States; and the probable savings by telephone operating companies purchasing equipment under a system of competitive bidding;

(2) The activities of and expansion by the company and its subsidiaries and affiliates into fields other than telephone communication, including teletype service, telephoto service, broadcasting, motion-picture distribution, and the manufacture of electrical equipment;

(3) The methods of competition with other companies and industries, with reference to equality of service, reasonableness of rates, both local and long distance, depreciation accounting practices, discriminatory practices, suppression of patents, method of accounting for royalties accruing on patents, sale, and refusal to sell equipment to competing companies, maintenance of exorbitantly high prices because of monopolistic control, and particularly the relationship of the company with Electrical Research Products, Inc., and its relation to independent motion-picture organizations, and its practices in the interests of the company;

(4) The extent to which local subscribers have borne the cost of the research developments for long-distance appliances, radio, motion-picture, and other inventions not related to the improvement of local service;

(5) The reasons for voluntary reductions in long-distance charges and the failure to reduce local charges during the past few years of generally falling prices;

(6) Its relation as an employer with its employees, and the extent of its reduction in number and wages of employees while maintaining exorbitant salaries for high officials and a continuous high dividend rate; and

(7) The methods whereby the company or its subsidiaries or affiliates or its officers or directors have sought through propaganda, or the expenditure of money, or the control of channels of publicity to influence or control public opinion or elections.

That the said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpenas or otherwise; to require the production or inspection of all accounts, books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, and other assistants, and stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee, or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation, shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, not to exceed $25,000.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 472) for the relief of Phyllis Pratt and Harold Louis Pratt, a minor.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59 to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 3673) to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 3673) to amend the law relative to citizenship and naturalization, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

CLAIM OF STATE OF VERMONT, WAR OF 1812

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 224), as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to audit the claim of the State of Vermont with respect to advances and expenditures made by such State for military purposes during the War of 1812–15, with Great Britain, and after applying the rules of evidence and settlement to this class of claims, provided for in resolution of May 14, 1836 (5 Stat.L. 132), and in section 12 of the act approved March 3, 1857 (11 Stat.L. 229), to submit to the Senate a report containing the results of an audit of such claim, in conformity with said rules.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the resolution calls for an audit of the claims referred to, with a view to such further action as may be found justified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

THE TAYLOR GRAZING BILL

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial coming from the pen of one of the outstanding editors of western America, Mr. Graham Sanford, editor and owner of the Reno Evening Gazette, bearing on the subject of "The Taylor Grazing Bill", a measure which is now pending before the Senate of the United States.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Reno (Nev.) Evening Gazette, Apr. 14, 1934]

THE TAYLOR GRAZING BILL

Pending in the United States Senate is the Taylor grazing bill which passed the House of Representatives this week. Drawn for the alleged purpose of preventing overgrazing of the public lands and the soil erosion resulting therefrom, its effect will be to authorize the Interior Department to create grazing districts upon the open and unappropriated public domain and charge fees to all stockmen using it for grazing purposes. Heretofore the unreserved and unappropriated public domain, which in this State consists of arid and almost worthless land, has been a grazing common, free to all users. Altogether, in all of the States, it comprises 180,000,000 acres. Fifty-three million of these open lands lie in the State of Nevada. If this bill is passed and approved, this State will then find that more than 90 percent of its entire area will be controlled by Federal agents operating in or out of Washington, inasmuch as 12,000,000 acres of its public lands have already been withdrawn as forest, Indian, and other reservations. The ordinary police powers of the State, therefore, will extend to less than 10 percent of the State's total area. It is a situation that not only Nevada but other public-land States, even though they are affected in less degree, view with the most serious concern.

There is no doubt that the open public lands in this State, amounting as before stated to 53,000,000 acres, have been seriously overgrazed. This is a fact that cannot be denied. However, 9 years ago the Nevada Legislature began to take steps to correct the situation, with the result that it has enacted a series of laws which vest grazing privileges in the stockmen of the State according to the well-established western principle of prior occupancy and beneficial use. In effect, it applied to the public lands the same doctrine of law that has long been applied to the public waters throughout the West, namely, that senior rights to their use for grazing purposes are vested in those who can prove continuous seniority of beneficial use. By the application of these laws the legislature hoped to protect the old, established graziers, whose operations are precarious at best, and also protect the public lands from the serious overgrazing to which they were being subjected. The result of this legislation has been beneficial. Most of the ranges are still overgrazed, it is true, but much of this overgrazing is owing to the unprecedented droughts from which the State has suffered. Also wise discretion has been exercised in enforcing the provisions of these laws in order to protect graziers with junior rights. However, they have operated to drive from the State many of the tramp sheepmen who own no real property, pay no taxes, and devour the ranges, and as time passes they will still further protect the ranges from overgrazing as individual stockmen retire from the field.

The weakness of the State's legislation lies in its failure to provide a system of supervision that will prevent stockmen from overgrazing the lands allotted to them. However, this is a matter with which future legislatures can effectively deal.

Meanwhile the protest of this State should be heard in Congress with respect to the Taylor bill.

It completely ignores the principle that the public lands within the States really belong to the States and that their present ownership by the National Government is but a trusteeship to be administered in the interest of the States alone.

By placing this vast area of land under the direct control of Federal agents it would reduce several of the more thinly populated Western States to little better than a colonial status.

It ignores the fact that the States themselves are in better position to administer these lands than a distant Federal department.

There is but one method by which overgrazing can be prevented and that is by reducing the number of animals on the ranges. If they are moved therefrom in wholesale fashion where are they to be corralled and fed? There are very few hay or grain farms in Nevada. Farming, as it prevails elsewhere, is almost unknown here. Should this reduction, therefore, be accomplished by persons familiar with the range livestock industry and its difficult problems, or by persons largely unfamiliar therewith?

Over a long period of time numerous ranching outfits have been developed in this State. The acreage of their tillable land is very small. In a Midwestern State one of these cultivated areas would support no more than a single family.

Here, however, their operators run their livestock on the open ranges, and it requires 140 acres of this land to support one cow and 40 acres to support a single sheep. One of these outfits supports many families and contributes a large amount in taxes to this State, because it is appraised for taxation, not upon the value of its cultivated land but upon the value of its range as well. In other words, much of the investment of the owner lies in the public land upon which he grazes. Under any permit system almost the entire investment and the fortunes of this owner would be at the mercy of a Federal department. Almost at will it could render his little home ranch worthless by depriving him of his grazing privileges. Accordingly, range lands are as necessary and should be made as appurtenant to livestock ranches as appropriated public waters are recognized as necessary and are made appurtenant to the cultivated farms in irrigation regions. And what would happen to the taxable values of Nevada's ranching outfits under an unsympathetic range administration?

The House vote shows that several Western States are in favor of the Taylor bill. That being the case, they should have it. Perhaps their situation is far different from that of Nevada, and it probably is. However, the bill should not be made applicable to any State that elects to reject its provisions. On a former occasion, when a similar bill was pending, one of the Houses wrote into it a section that such Federal regulation should not be extended to any State that elected to reject it. A like section should be incorporated in the Taylor measure. Nevada, then, if her own plan of regulation fails, can accept its provisions when convinced that it is to her interests to do so.

EFFECT OF N.R.A. ON SMALL BUSINESS INTERESTS

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, recently there was published in the RECORD a letter addressed to the Vermont delegation in Congress by the Governor of Vermont with respect to the effect of the N.R.A. on the small business interests of that State. There has since appeared in the Burlington Daily News a very instructive editorial with relation to that letter from the Governor. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Burlington (Vt.) Daily News, Mar. 29, 1934]

A BLAST FROM VERMONT

The little businesses and industries are being ruined by big business through the very codes of the N.R.A. designed to help the little interests and the consumers.

Why?

Because big industry and big business, relieved from the antitrust laws by the N.R.A., have been up to their old tricks, underbidding, openly or secretly, the little industries, which are the backbone of Vermont, and in this have been aided by big business interests outside the State.

Governor Wilson is right.

Unless the little interests of our State, both in industry and in business, do not get relief very soon they will be forced to stop—to go out of their business, that they have slowly built up by their own initiative, without Federal or State aid, and to the "manifest benefit of the hundreds of little communities built up around them", as he says.

His reasons for writing our Members of Congress were twofold: That if the N.R.A. is to be continued, remodeled so that the little interests may live under it, and have an equal chance to live, with the great predatory corporations, who have failed, as Governor Wilson says, "to live up to either the letter or the spirit of the N.R.A. codes."

The great truth the "brain trust" overlooked is that you cannot make individuals or corporations honest by moral suasion.

It was not the antitrust laws that were throttling industry and business, but selfishness and greed, working through the depression.

There is another mighty body of citizens that are preparing to join the little interests and make open war on the N.R.A. unless there are changes made soon in it, that have made the millions of homes the cornerstone of America, the women, the home makers and keepers, who head the great army of consumers.

So strong has become their protest against rising prices of everything they have to buy to make and keep the home that a special committee composed of Secretaries Perkins, of Labor, Wallace, of Agriculture, and Roper, of Commerce, has been formed to take measures to put an end to this ever-growing rise in prices of everything that goes into maintaining a contented and happy home.

It is not "a living wage" so much as a reasonable, stable price for the commodities used in the everyday life of the consumers.

There will be a showdown soon—there must be, with a vast majority of the citizens of America demanding an equal opportunity to live and for the pursuit of happiness.

The influence of the housekeepers and the small interests in industry and business make an aggregate that will shape the coming changes in the N.R.A. in the interests of all the people, not a few great interests.

Governor Wilson is right. He frankly says, "I have no solution to offer", but something is bound to happen; is undoubtedly happening now down in Washington.

The unrest among labor begun this time in the homes of the men.

It is no use to raise wages if every raise is passed on to the consumer.

That is a vicious circle that has been worked before, and the only interests who profited thereby were a few great predatory interests, who have been, and are, squeezing the very heart and life out of the common people in any way that would help them to greater wealth.

LEWIS P. THAYER.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SPEECHES AT MEETING OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the speeches on the program of the joint committee on unemployment, at the Cosmos Club in Washington, D.C., Saturday, April 21, 1934, broadcast by the National Broadcasting Co.

There being no objection, the speeches were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(Dr. Sidney E. Goldstein, of the Free Synagogue in New York, chairman of the executive committee, the joint committee on unemployment, was chairman of the luncheon and outlined the program of the committee, which calls for socialization of the national income through taxation, an immediate appropriation by the Federal Government of at least $1,000,000,000 for relief of the unemployed and their dependents, and of $500,000,000 for family maintenance allowances and scholarships for children; at least $3,000,000,000 additional credit at once for public projects; Federal contribution to unemployment-insurance systems; limiting hours of labor to a maximum of 30 hours a week in all continuous industries and employment, with payment now made for longer hours; writing down long-term debts and interest rates; a Government marketing corporation, to buy, process, and distribute farm products; and ending the labor of children and the aged.)

WHAT KEEPS FUNDS AWAY FROM PURCHASERS

(By Prof. John Dewey, chairman joint committee on unemployment)

Want and scarcity in an age of plenty for all is the contradiction that now stares us all in the face. Lack of purchasing power stalls the entire agricultural and industrial machine. The cause for this destructive absence of purchasing power is simple and evident. The income that goes to property—that is, to investors through dividends, rent, and interest—is out of all proportion to that which goes to farmers, to workers in factories, stores, and offices. Hence the mass purchasing power of the Nation as a whole is paralyzed.

Only about 1 percent of the total population, some 340,000 persons, has, according to official income-tax figures, a taxable income of $5,000 or over. Moreover, two thirds of the total income of this group of 1 percent came from dividends and interest, omitting even at that all income from tax-exempt bonds.

The National Bureau of Economic Research reports that for 1932 the total national income from every source was a little less than fifty billions, and that one third of this whole sum was income on property, namely, dividends, interest, rent, and withdrawals of accumulated surplus. The 1 percent already referred to got three fifths of the total amount paid out in dividends.

These facts prove that the great mass of the people—farmers, laborers, and the white-collar class—do not get much more than a subsistence income on the average. How can they be expected to furnish the mass purchasing power absolutely necessary to provide permanent recovery?

It is absurd to suppose that 1 percent or even 10 percent, having excess income, can keep the industrial and agricultural machinery going. Moreover, the most conservative estimate made by engineers and business executives is that present plant is not producing more than three fifths of what it could turn out if all of it were brought up to the level of the most efficient enterprises. How is work going to be supplied to the eight or ten million now supported by charity (if at all), because of their lack of work, unless mass purchasing power is created by much higher levels of income for the mass of the population, so as to provide the sale of goods that will enable farmers and manufacturers to sell what they are capable of producing?

The demand exercised by invested capital for dividends on stocks and interest on bonds and loans is thus the chief single cause for lack of adequate mass buying power.

Apart from radical change in the whole system, there is but one way of increasing mass purchasing power. The Government must become an employer of labor on a much larger scale than at present. A much more extensive program of housing than is now contemplated would give direct employment to many and indirectly provide labor and income for more persons through stimulation of capital goods industries. Government ownership of natural monopolies and quasi-monopolies would increase mass purchasing power by relieving the consumer of the present diversion of what he pays into dividends and interest. The change in our taxation system required, if the Government is to become a large scale employer, would assist in directing a larger part of the national income into channels where it would provide mass buying power.

The conservative propertied interests of the country are the ones most directly interested in having a redistribution of national income that will increase mass purchasing power and so prevent the present creeping paralysis from rendering the productive plant of the Nation increasingly idle and nonproductive.

THE BATTLE OF THE PRODUCERS AND CONSUMERS AGAINST EXPLOITERS

The farmers know they are exploited because they are forced to sell the products they produce at prices fixed by someone else and invariably below the cost of production. The consumers know they are exploited because they must buy at prices fixed by someone else and often exorbitant. They know that the cost of living is so high that many of the average families cannot buy the food products that are needed to prevent hunger and preserve health. The producer is exploited in the sale of his products at prices over which he has no control, and the consumer is exploited in the purchase of food products and other necessities at prices over which he has no control.

A concerted effort is constantly being made to lead the consuming public to believe that the farmers are responsible for the high cost of living and that the bulk of the high prices they pay goes to the farmers.

The three A's of the Agricultural Department issues a biweekly bulletin called the Consumers' Guide. In the issue of April 9 they explain where your food dollar goes. In 1929, on 14 principal food products, 52 cents went to the processors and distributors, and 48 cents to the farmer. In 1933, 69 cents went for processing and distributing, and 31 cents to the farmer. In March 1934, according to this bulletin, 62 cents of your food dollar went to the processors and distributors, and 38 cents to the farmer.

They state in another issue that in 1932 the farmer got 33 cents of the total consumer's dollar, and in 1933 the farmer got 35 cents. At that rate, during the last 2 years, for a product for which the farmer received $1, the consumer paid $3.

The spread is too wide. It is impossible for the average consumer to absorb the 65- to 67-cent spread in each dollar's worth of food products that he buys. This is the result of the exploitation through the profit system which is largely responsible for the present so-called "depression" and has all but wrecked our whole economic structure.

The dairy farmer receives from 2 to 4 cents per quart for milk, and the consumer pays from 10 to 16 cents. The cost of distribution plus the profit of the distributors is the big item in the price the consumer pays for milk. The bulk of the milk is handled by holding companies or what amounts to a Milk Trust. This Milk Trust makes an enormous profit and pays their officials enormous salaries. The farmer is robbed in the price he receives and the consumer is robbed in the price he pays.

Out of the meat dollar the producer gets 31 cents, the packer 38 cents, and the retailer 31 cents.

Recently I received a newspaper clipping from North Dakota which listed the local price of wheat at 66 cents per bushel. There was also an "ad" of a local flour mill, quoting the price of flour at $6 per barrel, and feed at $16 per ton.

The price of wheat was based on the Minneapolis price, 400 miles away, less the freight; and the price of flour manufactured in the local mill was based on the Minneapolis price plus the freight. The value of wheat that went into a barrel of flour, at quoted prices, is $2.97; deducting this from the price of a barrel of flour is $3.03, plus 56 cents, the value of the feed, makes $3.59, and represents the amount received by the miller for grinding the barrel of flour, which is 62 cents more than the farmer received for producing the wheat and hauling it to the mill.

Bread at that time was selling for 8 cents per loaf. Approximately 292 one-pound loaves are made from a barrel of flour, and the consumer pays $23.36 for the bread made from $2.97 worth of wheat. The farmer gets a little less than 1 cent for the wheat in a pound loaf of bread; the miller gets a little over 1 cent for grinding the flour that goes into the loaf; the baker gets about 4 cents for baking, and the retailer gets 2 cents for handing the loaf of bread over the counter. They all get a profit but the farmer who produces the wheat. The processor and the distributor must get their profit even though the farmers sells at a loss.

There is an old saying among the farmers—take the gambler out of the bread basket. It is impossible to give the farmer an honest market as long as the speculators and gamblers manipulate and fix his prices. Last year the Chicago Board of Trade bought and sold over 10,000,000,000 bushels of wheat, which was 20 times as much as all the wheat produced in the whole United States last year.

Under the N.R.A. program, codes have been put into effect having for their purpose the regulation of prices to provide for cost of production for the processor and manufacturer, the wholesaler, jobber, and distributor, and in many instances the prices have gone up. All industries are being taken care of under the N.R.A., with the exception of agriculture, on a cost-of-production and a fair-profit basis.

The three A's, through the processing tax and the allotment payments, are attempting to increase farm prices to what is known as the "pre-war parity price." It is admitted that a portion of the processing tax has been passed back to the producer, and a part of it has been passed on to the consumer. It is also conceded that if farm prices are brought up to the parity price, they will still be under cost of production, and therefore agriculture will not be a prosperous business even with the parity price—which they are not getting.

The latest A.A.A. figures on parity prices—April 4—are to the effect that wheat is only 65 percent of parity price; cotton, 77 percent of parity; corn, 57.1 percent; butterfat, only 65.8 percent; beef cattle, only 63.2 percent; and hogs, only 41 percent of parity price.

The Agricultural Department seems to be carrying out the Biblical instruction of not letting the right hand know what thy left hand doeth.

The A.A.A.'s division of the Agricultural Department is advocating a drastic reduction of acreage of production of certain crops, like corn and wheat, in order to reduce the so-called "surplus." Another division of the Agricultural Department is putting out a bulletin advocating that an adequate diet of wheat flour per capita at moderate cost is 122 pounds, which would be a reduction of per capita consumption of wheat flour of 48 pounds per year. This, if carried out, would reduce consumption materially while the A.A.A. are at the same time reducing the acreage to cut down production to the present needs.

There is also another division putting out a bulletin which instructs the farmer how to produce a larger yield per acre of corn, and the A.A.A. are insisting on the reduction of acreage at the same time to cut down the production.

A marketing bill (S. 3333) has been introduced in both the House and Senate to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products. It sets up a Farmers and Consumers Financing Corporation, with authority to control the processing and distribution of products from the producer to the consumer. The purpose of the act is to provide a market for the sale of agricultural products and to eliminate, as far as possible, the commissions and charges that are exacted upon agricultural products from the time such products leave the producer until the same reaches the consumer, and to thereby increase the price which the producer receives and decrease the price the consumer pays.

There should be more cooperation between the producers and the consumers. The cost of processing and handling farm products must be cut down. Unnecessary middlemen must be eliminated.

The farmer is entitled to cost of production just as much as anyone else in any other line of business, and the consumer is equally entitled to buy these farm products at a reasonable price.

If codes are to be continued, give the farmer a code based on cost of production just as the codes for the other industries; eliminate the gambler in food products and other necessities of life; let us have a market control that will eliminate the exploiters; cut out graft; provide for efficient distribution at reasonable cost and give the consumers service instead of exploitation. Cooperation between the producers and consumers will easily bring about these results.

THE 30-HOUR WEEK AND THE MINIMUM WAGE

(By Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, JR., Chairman of the House Committee on Labor)

The House Committee on Labor a year ago unanimously reported a 30-hour work week bill to apply to all those workers employed in the manufacturing industries of this country. The Senate of the United States twice last year voted in favor of limiting the hours of industrial workers to 30 hours per week. Last year we were prevailed upon to give industry an opportunity of putting its own house in order, with a direct promise that weekly hours of labor would be reduced to a point where the millions of unemployed industrial workers would be provided with gainful employment in industry. That promise has not been kept.

Those in control of manufacturing in this country have not only repudiated their implied promise to the Congress of the United States, but they have ignored or refused the request of the President of the United States, publicly made on March 5, that hours of labor be shortened and wages of industrial workers be increased.

The House Labor Committee has again unanimously reported a 30-hour work week bill with wages to be paid to the workers for 30 hours which they now receive for 40 or more hours per week.

The industrial workers of our country, the Congress of the United States, and the President of the United States, were promised by industry, that, with the suspension of the antitrust laws, permitting industry to get together legally, that industry would find employment for our millions of unemployed industrial workers. What do we find?

The vast majority of codes approved by General Johnson provide for a work week of 40 hours. We are told that the average hours prevailing in 1929 were 50 per week, and some persons try to create the impression that the reduction from 50 hours per week to 40 hours per week would absorb many of the unemployed. The truth is, that with the added productivity per worker, the average worker today produces more in 40 hours per week than they produced in 50 hours in 1929. The people of America are not blind. There may be some amongst us who follow the lead of the ostrich who sticks his head in the sand, hoping that he will not be seen, but, from our knowledge of the American people, I have no hesitancy in saying that the sooner industry hides its body in the sand, and places its head up where it can see what is going on, the sooner will their investments be safeguarded.

Not only are the codes in effect dominated by the employing interests, as they alone govern American industries through their control of code authorities, but, contrary to the understanding and intent of Congress, very few of these codes provide for any representation of the workers. In passing the N.R.A., Congress and the American people understood that the N.R.A. would bring about real partnership in industry on the part of employers with bona fide representatives of the workers. The Connery 30-hour work week bill will make effective the understanding of real partnership in industry as it specifically provides that there shall be equal representation on all codes of both employers and workers.

I am particularly conversant with the industries of my own district, which happen to be basic industries, namely: textiles, shoes, leather, and electrical products. What are the facts? The textile industry was placed on a 40-hour week under the code, with a minimum wage of $13 per week in the North and $12 per week in the South. The textile workers of Massachusetts were not averaging 40 hours per week when the textile codes went into effect, nor for many, many months before it. I want to point out that the minimum wage of $13 per week provided for textile workers in Lawrence increased the wages of very, very few textile workers there.

The reason for this being that the minimum wages prevailing in Lawrence before the code took effect were in excess of the minimum wages provided in the code. In the case of shoes, this industry normally employs some 205,000 workers. When the code took effect 160,000 were employed and 45,000 were unemployed. We were promised that the code would provide employment for the unemployed, and, after 6 months of operation, we find that only 4,000 of these unemployed shoe workers have secured employment.

After 10 months' trial of the N.R.A., dominated as it is by employers who have continued to exploit the worker, and exploit the consumer, without any restraint on the part of the Government, the House Labor Committee unanimously demanded that if the eight or ten millions of unemployed workers of our country are to secure employment it is essential that Congress enact the Connery 30-hour work week bill now on the House Calendar, with wages no less than they now receive, which we all will admit are too low.

The Congress of the United States, to my mind, fully realizes the necessity of forcing American industries to do that which the President of the United States asked them to do, and which they have not done. The farmers of America are suffering at the present time owing to the lack of purchasing power on the part of our industrial workers. In passing, I want to compliment the Washington representatives of the farm organizations for their foresight in endorsing the Connery 30-hour work week bill. They realize that they can hardly expect to receive the costs of production for their products with from eight to ten millions of industrial workers unemployed or dependent upon private or public charities.

Incidentally, let me say that the Congress of the United States has never sanctioned the formation of company-controlled unions under the N.R.A. On June 8, 1933, under the leadership of Senators NORRIS and WHEELER in the Senate, and myself and other Members of the House, Congress specifically rejected an amendment which would have legalized company unions.

To all real Americans who desire to assist in promoting the welfare of our country the one vital and absorbing question is that of providing our millions of unemployed with gainful employment at a fair, living wage. At this time the only legislative manner in which this can be done is the immediate passage of the Connery 30-hour work week bill with the same wages for 30 hours that they now receive for longer periods.

RAILROAD POLICIES WRECK PURCHASING POWER

(By A. F. Whitney, president Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and chairman Railway Labor Executives' Association, and read by Berle A. Whitney)

Few, if any, industries are more overcapitalized than the railroad industry. While the capitalized structure of this industry has constantly enlarged, a million railroad employees have been thrown into the bread lines, and 400,000 more have been forced to work part time and receive less than a subsistence wage.

Deficits were supposed to have been incurred in the railroad industry in the years 1932 and 1933, but actually a large return was realized in each of these years. Other industries consider they have earned a net income if the investors who have supplied the capital have any return whatever above operating expenses. The railway capital structure, with its overload of bonded indebtedness, is such that more than half of the actual capitalization is represented by bonds.

No other industry earning a net of 1.8 percent on investment, at the bottom of the depression, would have reported a deficit. But the railroads report their earnings in a manner that makes return to the owners largely a fixed charge, and net income is calculated only after a half billion dollars have been paid to the owners of the industry. The word "deficit", therefore, is misleading. In 1932, when the carriers reported a deficit of $139,000,000, there was actually a profit from railway operations of $326,000,000. In 1933, when the class I roads reported a deficit of $14,000,000, there was, in fact, a profit on operations of $474,000,000.

Class I railways paid to these bondholders $22,000,000 more in interest in 1933 than in the prosperous year of 1929. The last 2 years are alleged to have been the worst in railroad history, but they have been the golden-harvest period for the coupon clippers. Is it any wonder that life-insurance companies regard railroad securities as being among the soundest?

Railway employees have not been the only ones to recognize the injustice of the financial policies of the railroad industry. Even the Coolidge Commission, which was financed by the owners of railroad securities, pointed out the need "to reform the top-heavy structures" of railway capitalization. The Federal Coordinator of Transportation, Joseph B. Eastman, in his report of January 20, 1934, said: "Many railroads are overcapitalized, whatever test be applied." President Franklin D. Roosevelt has recognized the necessity for "scaling down of fixed charges" in the railroad industry. He has appealed to the bondholders to volunteer to reduce their interest rates.

Have railroad policies wrecked purchasing power? The answer may be found in the fact that while the gross total compensation received by rail workers has been reduced 52 percent, security owners received $22,000,000 more in 1933 than in 1929. While railway employees have been forced to accept starvation or the bread lines, while their living standards have been shattered, and their families have endured unspeakable privations, railway security holders received increasing returns. Is it any wonder that all business, industry, and transportation are stagnant when we go on concentrating wealth, notwithstanding the fact that about 4 percent of our people already own 80 percent of our wealth?

Financial policies in the railroad industry have forced workers to accept such starvation wages as $5 and $6 per week, wages so low that the President of the United States felt called upon in his letter made public on March 20, 1934, to point out the need for establishing minimum rates in this industry. These financial policies not only have destroyed purchasing power but they have impaired service to the public. In 1933, United States railroads ripped up enough track to build a line from Boston to Chicago (1,050 miles).

HAS THE N.R.A. INCREASED MASS PURCHASING POWER

By Prof. Paul F. Brissenden, Columbia University

It is not easy to estimate the effect which the N.R.A. has had upon purchasing power. At the best it is scarcely possible to do more than make approximations. The situation has been complicated, of course, by the presence of other factors which have affected wages and employment, and it is impossible to determine to what extent the N.R.A. and to what extent other causal factors may have been responsible for the changes that have taken place in the purchasing power of the American people.

The N.R.A. was launched at a time somewhere near the midpoint of the business uprising which marked the spring and early summer months of 1933. Improvements in wages and employment which marked these months cannot, therefore, be attributed in any great measure, perhaps not at all, to the N.R.A. Yet, although these improvements are not primarily attributable to the N.R.A., they may have been in some degree the result of it, even though the N.R.A. did not actually get going much before September, because the imminence of the codes may have induced many employers to expand operations and produce as much as possible under low-cost conditions before codification and high costs should come upon them.

For like reasons the autumn recession in business, with its declines in wages and employment, is not necessarily chargeable entirely, or even in part, to N.R.A. operations. It was partly—it may have been almost entirely—a consequence of the collapse of and ban late in July—and perhaps also of some easing of public apprehension about inflation.

There has been some increases in employment, in aggregate pay rolls, and in per capita earnings since the N.R.A. was launched. What occurred in manufacturing, the most important divisions of industry covered by the N.R.A., can be summarized by saying that from June 1933 to February 1934, while the total cost of living increased by 7.6 percent, employment increased 17 percent, aggregate pay rolls 29 percent, and per capita earnings 10.2 percent. Increase in the cost of living reduced the increase in total pay rolls to 21.4 percent and the increase in per capita earnings to 2.6 percent. If one begins with September, when the N.R.A. was well started, one finds that between then and February of this year, while the cost of living increased 0.5 percent, employment fell off 0.5 percent, pay rolls increased 4.5 percent, and per capita earnings increased 4.9 percent. Allowing for increase in cost of living, we get for this period increases of 4 percent and 4.4 percent in the purchasing power of pay rolls and per capita earnings, respectively.

As already noted, it is difficult to say to what extent these increases in mass and per capita purchasing power have been produced by the operation of N.R.A. codes. Some light may be shed on this question by comparing the changes which took place (between September and December 1933) in pay rolls and per capita earnings in manufacturing and in all industries (except building construction and railroads) with the corresponding changes in those 18 of the 30 industries coded by October 1, for which employment and pay-roll statistics are reported by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics. The figures follow:

	Percentage change between September and December 1933, in—
	Total pay rolls	Per capita earnings
All manufacturing industries	−6.6	−1.6
18 industries under N.R.A. by Oct. 1, 1933	−7.2	−3.3
All industries (manufacturing and other)	−2.2	−1.5

These figures seem to warrant the conclusion that the effect of code operations, while perhaps beneficial insofar as reemployment is concerned, has been distinctly bearish in its effect upon both mass and per capita purchasing power. If the figures given at the outset for manufacturing for the period from June to February are at all indicative of the situation in industry generally, what seems to have occurred during the past year, whether in part as a result of the N.R.A. or in spite of it, has been a considerable increase in employment and in pay rolls and a less considerable increase in per capita earnings. As we have seen, allowing for the increase in the cost of living, the increase from June to February in the purchasing power of total pay rolls in manufacturing was 21.4 percent and the increase in the purchasing power of per capita earnings was 2.6 percent. The increases are possibly attributable to the new deal as a whole but apparently are not the result of code operations.

THE CHURCH AND LIVING STANDARDS

By Prof. Jerome Davis, of Yale University

I endorse the new deal, but it has not gone far enough. The working class has borne the brunt of this depression. Incomes among the professional classes did not drop until 1932. The workers' income dropped immediately in 1930. Today the average worker's income is only $696 a year. Dividends and interest have been well maintained, while labor income, representing the very life of the workers, has dropped almost one half from 1929 to 1933.

Living standards still often are in the starvation zone. Prices are rising faster than wages. The great need in America at the present time is to increase purchasing power and to provide jobs for the unemployed. As the Secretary of Agriculture has stated, "America must choose" not only between national isolation and a world neighborhood, but between an economic order which is run for a small profit-seeking minority and an economic order which is planned for the benefit of all the people. We must go forward with the development of public works. Cities and towns throughout the United States must be encouraged to begin the construction of public utility plants. This will serve two purposes: On the one hand it will give employment to the unemployed; on the other it will reduce rates to the consumer. The day of monopoly privilege is rapidly drawing to an end.

In the past we have had a double standard of morality in industry, one standard for the employer, another standard for the worker. Employers receive vacations with pay, salary during illness, they have the unquestioned right to organize. The workers do not receive salaries during vacations or illness, and their efforts to organize are fought in many cases by the employing group. American citizens can secure economic justice. They can urge the passage of the Wagner unemployment insurance bill and the Wagner labor bill. They can demand their right to jobs. They can demand that the national income be redistributed by taxation to increase purchasing power and prevent collapse.

WHAT CONGRESS SHOULD DO BEFORE ADJOURNMENT

By Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary the People's Lobby, Washington, D.C.

Congress, before it adjourns, should enact the following legislation—an essential part of a new deal that's different from the old deal.

Appropriate a sufficient amount to maintain until next March the unemployed and their dependents, for whom work at fair wages cannot be ensured. It will be at least $1,000,000,000. Only the Federal Government can pay this bill.

Repeal at least $1,000,000,000 of Federal consumption taxes, and levy about $4,000,000,000 more taxes on incomes, including income from Government bonds, estates, and corporate surpluses and profits, and land values, than the revenue bill now in conference provides.

Pay processing taxes on farm products out of the Federal Treasury.

Enact the Frazier-Sinclair bill creating a Government Marketing Corporation empowered to buy, process, and sell farm products to ultimate consumers.

Enact substantially the bill Senator CUTTING will introduce to nationalize banking and credit.

Enact a real pure food and drugs act.

Enact the Fletcher-Rayburn stock-market control bill as it was before the Wall Street extractors extracted the teeth put in to prevent those same extractors from robbing producers of any spare change they might have left.

Enact legislation nationalizing the railroads, oil resources, bituminous coal, and water-power resources of the Nation, paying owners only for values they have created.

Enact legislation to reduce interest rates on long-term debts.

Direct the Trade Commission or a congressional committee to devise a plan to squeeze the water out of overcapitalized corporations.

Reduce tariffs.

Amend the Public Works section of the N.I.R.A. to empower the Federal Government to assess costs of improvements it finances, in whole or in part, upon property benefited thereby, to stop the subsidizing.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. Under the unanimous-consent agreement of yesterday the calendar is in order, and the clerk will state the first bill, which is Calendar No. 792.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 493) to protect labor in its old age.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill was under consideration yesterday, and certain of the committee amendments were agreed to. It is a very important measure, and I am in hearty sympathy with the purposes of the bill. There are several Senators who are in attendance upon committee meetings this morning, among them the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who desire to be present when the bill is further considered. Therefore, I am compelled to ask that it go over at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EXPLOSION AT NAVAL AMMUNITION DEPOT, LAKE DENMARK, N.J.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to order of business 671, being House bill 4013, and for its present consideration. I was absent yesterday on an important engagement when the bill was called and unable to be here at the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 671, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 4013) to provide an additional appropriation as the result of a reinvestigation, pursuant to the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat., p. 2047, pt. 2), for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosion at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N.J., July 10, 1926.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I recall that when the bill was called yesterday there was objection to its consideration by some Senator. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to make a statement explaining the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the bill is to reimburse some of the people who were injured by a tremendous explosion in the navy storehouse for explosives at Lake Denmark in my State. I happen to know a good deal about it, because I own property which borders for about a mile on the Government property involved.

For 10 miles around the place where the explosion occurred houses were knocked down, windows were broken, people were knocked down, and a tremendous amount of damage was done in every direction. The bill is approved by the Comptroller General, and merely compensates the people for the actual damage done to their houses and property by this explosion.

Is that a sufficient explanation of the measure?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it appears that the report of the committee is unanimous and that the claims were just.

Mr. KEAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, was this what is called the "Black Tom" explosion?

Mr. KEAN. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 4013) to provide an additional appropriation as the result of a reinvestigation, pursuant to the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat., p. 2047, pt. 2), for the payment of claims of persons who suffered property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosion at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N.J., July 10, 1926, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $17,691.58 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to make payment of claims for property damage, death, or personal injury due to the explosions at the naval ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N.J., July 10, 1926, to the respective persons and in the respective amounts as recommended by the Comptroller General of the United States and as fully set forth in House Document No. 257, Seventy-second Congress, first session, and letters of the Comptroller General to the Congress, dated January 14 and February 10, 1933, pursuant to the act of March 2, 1927 (44 Stat., pt. 3, p. 1800), and the act of February 2, 1929 (45 Stat., pt. 2, p. 2047): Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MOUNT OLIVET CEMETERY CO.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, yesterday I was obliged to be absent, due to sickness in my family.

There is on the calendar, on page 8, a bill (S. 1757) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mount Olivet Cemetery Co. in the District of Columbia." I understand that objection was made to the bill yesterday because it was thought the District Commissioners were not in favor of it. The District Commissioners were in favor of the bill with certain amendments, all of which have been incorporated in it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may now be considered and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1757) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mount Olivet Cemetery Co. in the District of Columbia", which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to add at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mount Olivet Cemetery Co. in the District of Columbia", approved on the 10th day of June 1862 (12 Stat.L. 426) be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding at the end of section 2 of the said act of the 10th day of June 1862 the following:

"The said corporation may use for burial purposes the tracts of land now owned by it and known, respectively, as the 'Hoover tract', designated for purposes of assessment and taxation as parcel 153/23, fronting on Bladensburg Road, and the 'Mertoon's tract', designated for purposes of assessment and taxation as parcel 153/42, fronting on West Virginia Avenue, the said two tracts having an aggregate area of approximately 12 25/100 acres, and all of the provisions of the aforesaid act of the 10th day of June 1862 shall apply to both of the said tracts with like effect as if the provisions of this act had been included therein at the time of its enactment: Provided, That no part of parcel 153/23 lying within 120 feet of Bladensburg Road shall be used for burial purposes; the strip of land hereby exempted from use for burial purposes being the easterly 120 feet by full width of said parcel 153/23 fronting on Bladensburg Road."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUNDS OF TAXES TO BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 605, Senate bill 2816, which was objected to yesterday. I have the assurance of the Senator who objected yesterday that he will not object today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2816) to extend the time for the refunding of certain taxes erroneously collected from certain building-and-loan associations, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That claims for the refunding of any taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected from any building-and-loan association, or savings-and-loan association, under the provisions of section 231, paragraph 4, of the Revenue Acts of 1918 to 1926, both inclusive, may be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue not later than 6 months after the passage of this act, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine, in accordance with law but without regard to any statute of limitations, such claims as may have been presented heretofore and not allowed and such claims as may be presented within the period above named, when and where and only when it be found and determined that such taxes were collected upon the erroneous interpretation of the law passed upon and condemned by the United States Supreme Court in the decision rendered in the case of United States against Cambridge Loan & Building Co., reported in 278 United States Supreme Court Reports, page 55: Provided, That no interest shall be allowed on any of these claims.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such claimants as have presented or shall hereafter so present their claims, any amounts allowed in the determination of any claims so defined and which shall have been presented in accordance with this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

CUSTODY AND MAINTENANCE OF SUPREME COURT BUILDING

The bill (H.R. 8889) to provide for the custody and maintenance of the United States Supreme Court Building and the equipment and grounds thereof was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who reported this bill, is necessarily absent in attendance on the Finance Committee. There is one provision in it, namely, section 4, which imposes on the Chief Justice of the United States certain administrative duties and responsibilities. I doubt the propriety of that feature of the bill. I therefore ask that it go over, at least until the Senator from Texas, or some other Senator familiar with the subject-matter of the bill, may be present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, during the morning I was engaged in the Committee on Finance in the hearing on the tariff bill when the Senate took up House bill 8889. I ask unanimous consent that we revert to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 8889) to provide for the custody and maintenance of the United States Supreme Court Building and the equipment and grounds thereof, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol shall have charge of the structural and mechanical care of the United States Supreme Court Building, including the care and maintenance of the grounds and the supplying of all mechanical furnishings and mechanical equipment for the building. The operation and maintenance of the mechanical equipment and repair of the building shall be performed under his direction, and he is authorized to enter into all necessary contracts.

SEC. 2. Employees required for the performance of the foregoing shall be (a) appointed by the Architect of the Capitol, with the approval of the Chief Justice of the United States; (b) compensated in accordance with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 5, ch. 13); and (c) be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1920, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 5, ch. 14).

SEC. 3. All other duties and work required for the operation, domestic care, and custody of the building shall be performed under the direction of the Marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States, who shall be superintendent of the United States Supreme Court Building, and employees (including elevator operators) required for the performance of such duties shall be appointed by the Marshal, with the approval of the Chief Justice.

SEC. 4. Appropriations for the work under the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol shall be disbursed by the Marshal as the Chief Justice may direct upon certified vouchers submitted by the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, when the bill was reached, I will say to the Senator from Texas, I stated that the Senator was necessarily absent on the business of the Senate, and pointed out the fact that the bill seemed to contemplate the imposition of some administrative duties on the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The provision I had in mind was section 4, which reads as follows:

Appropriations for the work under the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol shall be disbursed by the Marshal as the Chief Justice may direct upon certified vouchers submitted by the Architect of the Capitol.

I am wondering whether the committee and the Senator from Texas have given careful consideration to that part of the language quoted as follows: "as the Chief Justice may direct"?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that the committee did not give any particular study to that provision; but the committee took the view that we were vesting that authority in the Chief Justice on the same theory that the Constitution provides that the Capitol shall be under the control of the Senate and House of Representatives. While the Chief Justice, no doubt, will delegate this authority to some of his clerks and assistants, we felt that the ultimate control of the building and its management ought to be vested in the Chief Justice of the Court, because it is the residence of the Court, and there otherwise might be some clash.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I still have some doubts as to the propriety of requiring or directing the Chief Justice to review expenditures of this character. I shall move an amendment, so that, if the Senator consents to it, this question may be considered by the conferees of the two Houses.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move to strike out the language on page 2, line 21, as follows: "as the Chief Justice may direct."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment, or to the bill going to conference as so amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I state now, Mr. President, that when the Senator from Texas has looked into the matter I shall be content to abide his conclusion with respect to it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I have sent for the Architect of the Capitol, and we will go into the matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I assume that the next procedure will be that the Senate insist on its amendment to the House bill and ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that after the bill goes to the House, if the House accepts the bill with the amendment, it will not be necessary to have a conference.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true, if the House accepts it.

MUCIA ALGER

The bill (S. 1541) for the relief of Mucia Alger was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mucia Alger, widow of William E. Alger, late American consul at Fernie, British Columbia, the sum of $2,500, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died March 19, 1917, while in the Foreign Consular Service.

MARY SEELEY WATSON

The bill (S. 3161) for the relief of Mary Seeley Watson was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mary Seeley Watson, widow of the late John J. Crittenden Watson, formerly Foreign Service officer, American consulate, Dundee, Scotland, the sum of $5,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died of illness incurred while in the Consular Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

FLUCTUATION OF WATER LEVELS, LAKE OF THE WOODS

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 35) to provide for the determination and payment of claims for damage sustained by the fluctuation of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods in certain cases, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas in order that the claims of settlers whose property was damaged by reason of fluctuations in the level of Lake of the Woods may be judicially determined, thereby following the expressed intent of the investigation made by the International Joint Commission under a reference from the Governments of the United States and Canada dated June 27, 1912, which terminated in a treaty between the United States and Great Britain in respect of Canada, proclaimed July 17, 1925, in which the two Governments adopted certain recommendations, among which was one that each Government shall on its own side of the boundary assume responsibility for any damage or injury that may have resulted to it or its inhabitants from the fluctuations of the level of Lake of the Woods or of the outflow therefrom caused by the construction of dams in the outlets of Lake of the Woods which have destructively flooded the lands along the United States shores and given rise to complaints of landowners: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the conventions between the United States and Great Britain to regulate the level of Lake of the Woods concluded on the 24th day of February 1925", approved May 22, 1926, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of War shall forthwith file a certified copy of the report and awards made by him under section 3 of this act with the clerk of the United States district court, or his deputy, in the district and division of the district in which the lands involved are situated; and thereupon the same proceedings shall be had in such court on such report and awards as upon awards of the Commissioners in the case of condemnation proceedings under the provisions of section 1 of this act.

"(b) There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $73,270.97 to carry out the purposes of this act.

"(c) Upon the filing of such certified copy of the report and awards the Secretary of War shall be deemed to have completed his duties and functions under this act, as amended, except those relating to the construction of protective works and to the carrying out of protective measures under section 2 of this act, as amended; and all duties, powers, and functions vested in the Secretary of War by this act, as amended, except those relating to such construction of protective works and such carrying out of protective measures, shall hereafter be exercised by the Attorney General with the same force and effect as if he had originally been named in this act."

The preamble was agreed to.

ANNA ELIZABETH RICE DENISON

The bill (S. 2713) for the relief of the estate of Anna Elizabeth Rice Denison was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anna Elizabeth Rice Denison, widow of Frank C. FIRST LT. WALTER T. WILSEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2973) for the relief of First Lt. Walter T. Wilsey, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after "$147.50", to insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to First Lt. Walter T. Wilsey the sum of $147.50, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, which amount was stolen from the safe of Company A, Fourth Motor Repair Battalion, Quartermaster Corps, Camp Holabird, Md., on March 6, 1925, and reimbursed to the said company by Lieutenant Wilsey: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN FOR EXTRA PAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1724) providing for settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men for extra pay provided by act of January 12, 1899, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is authorized and directed to receive and settle claims of officers and enlisted men who were appointed or enlisted in the Army under the act of March 2, 1899 (30 Stat.L. 979), for 1 or 2 months' extra pay provided by the act of January 12, 1899, as amended (30 Stat.L. 784), notwithstanding the disallowance of their claims for such extra pay by the former accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] if this bill was amended in accordance with the recommendation of General McCarl?

Mr. STEPHENS. This bill was amended, as I recall, in accordance with the suggestion which came to the committee. As a matter of fact, General McCarl, the Comptroller General of the United States, proposed the amendments which were adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 561, Senate bill 3138. Yesterday the bill was called and there was some discussion of it, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] asked that the bill go over. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has explained the necessity for the passage of the bill, and the Senator from Ohio advises me that he has investigated the matter and has no further objection to the passage of the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3138) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to aid in financing exports and imports, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 15, ch. 14), is amended by inserting before section 6 thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5c. With the approval of the President, the Corporation is authorized and directed, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, to establish or to utilize export or import trading and banking corporations in which the United States shall own, directly or indirectly, the entire beneficial interest, and to subscribe for and purchase the common and preferred stock and obligations thereof, for the purpose of aiding in financing and facilitating exports and imports between the United States and other nations or the agencies or nationals of either of them."

D. F. PHILLIPS

The bill (H.R. 2666) for the relief of D. F. Phillips was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and hereby is, authorized to consider and pass upon the application of D. F. Phillips, former rural free delivery carrier at Resaca, Ga., for the benefits of the Compensation Act approved September 7, 1916, on account of an injury occurring in the year 1919, notwithstanding the provisions of section 20 of said act requiring that all claims be filed within 1 year from the date of injury: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H.R. 2682) for the relief of Bonnie S. Baker was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. That bill is not approved by the Department, and I ask that it go over unless some Senator is prepared to explain it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Vandover, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for injuries sustained by G. C. Vandover, who, while acting within his capacity as an employee of State Hospital No. 4, Farmington, Mo., had his right leg shot off by a discharged soldier, then a patient in such hospital and a Federal Government charge: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2439) for the relief of the Goldsmith Metal Lath Co., Price-Evans Foundry Corporation, and R. W. Felix was announced as next in order.

Mr. BULKLEY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ALBERT W. HARVEY

The bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Albert W. Harvey was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Albert W. Harvey, Rutland, Vt., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $49.15, being the amount expended by said Harvey for damages incurred in an accident in which an automobile was seized by a Federal prohibition agent in the performance of his duties for the Government.

JOSEPH DUMAS

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $1,500 to Joseph Dumas, of Waterville, Maine, in full payment and settlement for all claims against the United States for injuries received by said Dumas on September 9, 1927, at said Waterville, through the negligence of an employee in the United States Railway Mail Service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3285) to provide for the regulation of interstate and foreign communications by wire or radio, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ELIZABETH MILLICENT TRAMMELL

The bill (S. 1200) for the relief of Elizabeth Millicent Trammell was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Elizabeth Millicent Trammell, widow of H. Eric Trammell, late third secretary of American Embassy at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, the sum of $3,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

WIENER BANK VEREIN

The bill (S. 1263) for the relief of Wiener Bank Verein was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $30,208.67 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for payment to the Wiener Bank Verein or its attorney in fact in the United States, representing interest at 4¾ percent on certain cable transfers which the embassy at Constantinople undertook to make by cable communications to the Secretary of State on January 13, 1917, and on February 25, 1917, payment of which was deferred, as set forth in Senate Document No. 18, Seventy-second Congress, first session: Provided, That no payment hereunder shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury except at the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided further, That full authority is hereby vested in the Secretary of State to determine, in his discretion, whether payment in whole or in part should be made, withheld, or deferred.

SAMUEL W. CARTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 358) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to hear and determine the claim of Samuel W. Carter, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "that", to insert "jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon"; in line 4, after the word "Claims", to strike out "be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed" and to insert "notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitations"; in line 7, before the word "adoption", to insert "alleged"; and on page 2, line 4, after the word "barred", to strike out "because of the use of the patented device by the Government for more than 2 years, not by any existing statute of limitations, nor", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitations, to hear and determine the claim of Samuel W. Carter for compensation for the alleged adoption and use by the Government of the United States of a certain invention relating to the design and construction of propeller blades for which original letters patent of the United States No. 1471590 were issued to him on October 23, 1923, and for which letters patent of the United States Reissue No. 16387 were issued to him on July 20, 1926. Said claim shall not be considered as barred because of the fact that the claimant was on the retired list of the United States Army and receiving compensation from the United States Government at the time the patented article was invented.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA CARROLL TAUSSIG

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2744) for the relief of Anna Carroll Taussig, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$25,000 as compensation" and to insert "$5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government", and to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anna Carroll Taussig the sum of $5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government for permanent injuries sustained while riding in an automobile which was run into by a large post-office auto truck used in the mail service, owned by the United States, whereby Anna Carroll Taussig lost her right eye and was permanently scarred and disfigured: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? The Department has recommended against it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the claim originally was for $25,000, and the committee recommended $5,000.

The bill, as amended, provides for the payment of $5,000 to Anna Carroll Taussig, in full settlement of all claims against the Government, for permanent injuries sustained while riding in an automobile which was run into by a large post-office truck used in the mail service, owned by the United States, whereby Anna Carroll Taussig lost her right eye and was permanently scarred and disfigured.

The records show that this accident happened on the morning of April 21, 1918, about 12:45 a.m. at Powelton and Lancaster Avenues, Philadelphia, Pa.; that it was raining very hard at the time; that the cars collided at the intersection of the avenues; that there were no lights of any kind on the mail truck; that the only lamp of any kind was a lantern with a badly smoked chimney on the left-hand side of the truck; that this lantern was not lighted, and from all appearances had not been lighted; that the claimant suffered the loss of her right eye, cuts on the chin and the right side of her face.

The chauffeur of the mail truck was arrested but was exonerated by the magistrate before whom he appeared, but there is no evidence of this hearing. The officer who arrived on the scene soon after the collision and who placed the driver of the mail truck under arrest, did not arrest the driver of the car in which the claimant was driving. The affidavit of this officer states that "the marks on the street showed that the United States mail truck, in attempting to stop, had skidded, turning almost a complete circle" and that the left front and side of the mail truck had collided with the left front part of the other car. He further testified that a light was still burning after the accident on the car in which the claimant was riding, but that there were no lights of any kind on the mail truck. Other affidavits of persons who arrived on the scene soon after the accident support the officer's statements.

Notwithstanding the report of the Post Office Department to the effect that it would not be justified in recommending favorable action with reference to this claim, your committee is of the opinion that the mail truck, running without lights and apparently at an excessive rate of speed, was responsible for the accident. It is accordingly recommended that the bill do pass, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BONNIE S. BAKER

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to order of business 819, being House bill 2682, for the relief of Bonnie S. Baker. This bill was objected to a moment ago by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I can state the facts briefly.

The claimant in this case was a postmaster, and it is stated in a letter from the Post Office Department that at the office where she served there was no safe provided for the safekeeping of money belonging to the office, nor was there any drawer in which the money could be placed and locked up.

The assistant postmaster, the father of the postmaster, left the office, locked the doors, put the windows down, and went over to get some lunch, about 50 feet from the post office. While he was away someone smashed the window, broke into the office, and stole a tin box in which the money was kept. The Post Office Department does not really and strongly oppose the payment of the claim.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in all these post offices a bond is required of the postmaster to cover such losses, is there not?

Mr. STEPHENS. In this instance, at least, the postmaster paid $100.29, the amount of money that was stolen.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, it is a small matter, and if the Senator thinks the bill ought to be passed, I shall not object, but I call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the great number of these cases. The claims are not preferred by the postmasters themselves, but by the bondsmen, who come and seek to collect from the Government what they have had to pay out after receiving premiums on the bonds. That is often the case, and I think the practice is bad and should be stopped. I do not think the Government ought to make the bondsmen good.

Mr. STEPHENS. I know nothing about a bond having been required in this matter.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am interested in what the Senator from Tennessee says, because there is a similar case in my own State. Bonds are required by the Government, and if Congress is forever to reimburse after losses, then why should there be any bond at all? Why should the postmasters be required to put up bonds?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is, of course, right about that.

Mr. DILL. Are all these bonds such that when the money is lost the postmaster is held to the bondsman?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot say about each individual case.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senators a question. Do they know that there is any bond against burglary required in the case of a postmaster? If so, that would have something to do with it.

Mr. DILL. There ought to be a bond against burglary and against robbery and hold-ups.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true; but if there is such bond required, it has not been brought to the attention of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the fact is that the bond is against the loss of money while the person who is bonded holds the office. I am not objecting to the Senator's bill, but I call the attention of the Senate to the facts. It is very bad practice. I know the bondsmen come in most frequently and get Congress to restore money they have had to pay out by reason of making good on bonds. In other words, the bondsman guarantees the postmaster and the Government guarantees the bondsman. That ought not to be.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, it is a personal bond, and I think the character of cases to which the Senator refers is where an assistant in a post office defaults.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to say one word, if I may. Where it is demonstrated that the bondsman paid funds where there were extenuating circumstances which developed later, it would certainly seem to me perfectly right that the bondsman should be reimbursed. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee is so fair and just that he would not want to see any concern held up by the Government when there was no fault involved in the matter and where it afterward developed that the loss could not have been guarded against by the bondsman.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not want to do anybody an injustice, but, using this case as an illustration, where a bondsman signs a bond to guarantee the safety of money to the Government, and the bondsman has to pay, regardless of how the money is lost, he has received premiums for that service, and the bondsman ought to pay, beyond all doubt.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, there is a difference, of course, between a bond running in favor of a man's honesty in his handling of money and insurance against robbery or burglary.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is quite a difference.

Mr. DILL. Which is this? In what category does this case fall?

Mr. STEPHENS. It is a question of burglary. A window was smashed, and a tin box in which the money was locked up was stolen.

Mr. DILL. There is a case of a hold-up in my own State where $13,000 was taken, in the city of Seattle. It seems to me there ought to be insurance of some kind against robbery or burglary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEROKEE FUEL CO.

The bill (S. 2371) giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Cherokee Fuel Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and it hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the Cherokee Fuel Co., Inc., Kansas City, Mo., for damages and for losses resulting from the cancelation by the depot quartermaster at St. Louis, Mo., of a contract between the United States Quartermaster Corps and the claimant, dated July 1, 1920, for furnishing coal at Camp Funston, Kans., to the Quartermaster Corps.

BLACK HARDWARE CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1585) for the relief of the Black Hardware Co.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill. It involves a large sum, and the facts seem to be somewhat doubtful.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is a bill which seeks to reimburse the claimant for customs duties illegally and improperly collected. The situation is substantially as follows:

The claimant was an importer, at some port of Texas, which I have momentarily forgotten, of steel bars which were used in construction work. He paid a tariff charge of three fifths of a cent a pound under a certain section of the Tariff Act of 1922.

After he had been doing that for a substantial period of time, he found that a competitor in a nearby Texas community had been importing like steel bars and paying at a rate of one fifth of a cent a pound under a different section of the tariff law, the difference in the rate making about $2 difference on the ton.

Subsequently the matter of the correct tariff charge went to the Court of Customs Appeals, and that court held that the payment of the lower rate of one fifth of a cent a pound was the correct rate under the proper classification.

The bill seeks to reimburse this Texas concern for the excess of two fifths of a cent a pound over the rate which the court declared to be the proper and the legal rate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see this statement in the report from the Secretary of the Treasury:

> As to the merits of this bill, I have to state that if the importers had availed themselves of the remedial provisions of the law (sec. 514 of the tariff act above mentioned) in the same manner that the other importers apparently did, a refund of the duty paid could have been secured, and it appears to this office that the claimants in this case are solely responsible for failure to file a proper protest. The Department is compelled to deny many cases coming before it because of the failure of the importers to file statutory protests against the liquidated assessment of duties, and it must decline to give its approval to the passage of a measure for the benefit of one importing firm which did not avail itself of the avenue of relief provided by law for all importers.

In other words, apparently the Department feels that under the facts of this case the claim ought not to be paid.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think the Department asserted a general rule which it always follows. The crux of the matter is that the claimant, not knowing of the lower rate being charged other importers and not knowing what the law really was, paid an excessive rate. It did not file its protest until it had learned that other importers bringing in like articles were paying a rate two fifths of a cent a pound less than that which had been collected from it.

It is perfectly clear that an improper and excessive and unlawful rate was collected, and the real question is whether the United States is going to keep that to which it is not entitled under the law, or whether it will return it to the company to which it rightfully belongs, in equity.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does the Treasury Department recognize the fact as alleged by the Senator, that the collection was wrongfully made?

Mr. WHITE. The Court of Customs Appeals directly passed on that question, and I think there is no question as to the fact.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The court found that the money was wrongfully collected?

Mr. WHITE. The court found that the lower rate which had been collected from other importers was the proper rate under the proper classification.

Mr. McKELLAR. This case did not go to the Court of Claims, did it?

Mr. WHITE. No; it did not go to the Court of Claims, but another case involving the principle went to the Court of Customs Appeals and was there passed upon.

I take it the Senator from Texas knows more about the details than I do, but I have correctly stated the substantial facts and the main question involved.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is it not true that the time for the protest under the law had expired before the injured party knew that he had a right to file the claim?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is the heart of the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Black Hardware Co., a Texas corporation, with principal offices at Galveston, the sum of $12,888.11 to fully refund to said company the difference between the rate of customs duties erroneously assessed and collected from it on corrugated iron bars at Galveston, Tex., between December 30, 1924, and September 27, 1926, under paragraph 304 of the act of 1922, and the rate of duty assessed and collected on the same class of merchandise in the same customs district, at Houston, Tex., during the same period, under paragraph 312 of said act, without the knowledge of said company, and which latter rate, subsequently, was decided to be according to law.

LOSSES SUSTAINED BY RIPARIAN OWNERS IN MARSHALL COUNTY, MINN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1803) for the relief of certain riparian owners for losses sustained by them on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County, in the State of Minnesota, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, after the sum "$1,030.68", to insert the following:

The sums of money paid under the authority hereof shall be in full and final settlement of all debts, demands, and claims of the persons receiving the same and of their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives against the United States on account of the losses sustained by them through the opening up of their lands on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County in said State of Minnesota to homestead entry.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the appropriation of which is hereby authorized, the following sums of money to the following persons or their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives: A. N. Eckstrom, $2,792.25; Margit Vaule, $3,894.80; Bernard Larson, $57.24; K. O. Flakne, $1,027.20; L. M. Larson, $31.64; Mrs. Gusta Petterson, $870.57; Ava Luella Dale, $2,031.33; Elmer Odie, $2,638.08; George E. Olson, $2,325.35; J. M. Silberstein, $1,860.28; Peter Christianson, $786.84; R. Rierson, $983.55; Ruth Lyons Rose, $196.71; Mary C. Moran, $834.24; Clarence Larson, $1,337.01; Mrs. O. B. Johnson, $528.01; Christian Burckland, $1,370.88; Karen Knutson, $507.60; Engebret S. Moe, $1,015.20; Nels A. Fosen, $964.50; Christian Larson Ring, $289.20; Elizabeth Risberg, $3,128.56; Axel Nelson, $3,620.30; G. F. Cashman, $301.69; D. B. Bakke, $3,482.70; and Frank W. Erickson, $1,030.68. The sums of money paid under the authority hereof shall be in full and final settlement of all debts, demands, and claims of the persons receiving the same and of their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives against the United States on account of the losses sustained by them through the opening up of their lands on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County in said State of Minnesota to homestead entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE E. BROAS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1161) for the relief of Alice E. Broas, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,000", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Alice E. Broas, of Chevy Chase, Md., as payment in full for personal injuries sustained by being struck by an automobile driven by Pvt. Cyrus L. Scribner, United States Army, on April 22, 1931, at Washington, D.C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA HOUGHTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Virginia Houghton, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,000", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 to Virginia Houghton, of Chevy Chase, Md., as payment in full for personal injuries sustained by being struck by an automobile driven by Pvt. Cyrus L. Scribner, United States Army, on April 22, 1931, at Washington, D.C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY V. SPEAR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1163) for the relief of Mary V. Spear, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1 line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,500", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Mary V. Spear, of Chevy Chase, Md., as payment in full for personal injuries sustained by being struck by an automobile driven by Pvt. Cyrus L. Scribner, United States Army, on April 22, 1931, at Washington, District of Columbia: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOTHER'S DAY

The resolution (S.Res. 218) favoring an expression on Mother's Day of our love and reverence for motherhood was announced as next in order.

Mr. DILL. Let that go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. The resolution is in conformity with our usual annual custom.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the resolution proposes permanent legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not think it does. It is merely a Senate resolution.

Mr. DILL. But it is permanent legislation; is it not?

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President.

Mr. DILL. I have no objection if it is not permanent legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. DILL. I withdraw the objection.

The resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas, by House Joint Resolution 263, approved and signed by President Wilson, May 8, 1914, the second Sunday in May of each year has been designated as Mother's Day for the expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country; and

Whereas there are throughout our land today an unprecedentedly large number of mothers and dependent children who, because of unemployment or loss of their bread-earners, are lacking many of the necessities of life: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon our citizens to express, on Mother's Day this year, our love and reverence for motherhood;

(a) By the customary display of the United States flag on all Government buildings, homes, and other suitable places;

(b) By the usual tokens and messages of affection to our mothers; and

(c) By making contributions, in honor of our mothers, through our churches or other fraternal and welfare agencies, for the relief and welfare of such mothers and children as may be in need of the necessities of life.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3420) to provide for the regulation of securities exchanges and of over-the-counter markets operating in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to prevent inequitable and unfair practices on such exchanges and markets, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HARRY P. HOLLIDGE

The bill (S. 1281) for the relief of Harry P. Hollidge was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harry P. Hollidge, the sum of $903.70, in full settlement of all claims against the Government for damages to his automobile as the result of a collision with a Packard truck belonging to the War Department, said collision occurring on the evening of March 27, 1919, on the Baltimore-Washington Pike.

A. J. HANLON

The bill (S. 2322) for the relief of A. J. Hanlon was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of A. J. Hanlon, special disbursing agent, Bureau of Prohibition, San Juan, P.R., with the sum of $223.75, said sum representing the amount paid on vouchers to Juan R. Toledo, prohibition agent, as per diem in lieu of subsistence for the period June 13 to July 21, 1929, which sum was disallowed by the General Accounting Office.

HECTOR H. PERRY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 424) for the relief of Hector H. Perry.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have some explanation of this bill? There seems to be some doubt about it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee desires an explanation, I can give it to him very briefly.

This is an unusual case. It is for the relief of a veteran of the World War. He fought through the war and was in nearly every battle that was fought. There was no one in the war who had more battle service. After he came home, he deserted—in 1920. He went back in 1928 and surrendered, and was tried by court martial, and discharged dishonorably. The man was without mental stability; there is no doubt but that he was very greatly troubled in his mental processes after he came home. Whether it was caused by the war or not, we do not know.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who introduced the bill, wrote a letter in which he set out the fact that the man was mentally unsound; and I think the reports from the doctors and the hospitals all show that during the period after he deserted, and before he surrendered himself, he was mentally incapacitated; but we thought his battle service was such as to entitle him to the relief he seeks.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see on the first page of the report a large number of engagements in which this soldier participated. I think the Senator from Kentucky is entirely right, and that this man should be given the relief he seeks.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Hector H. Perry, who was a member of the Medical Detachment, Second Regiment United States Engineers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 21st day of September 1928: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

THOMAS E. READ

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1505) for the relief of Thomas E. Reed, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after "Thomas E.", to strike out the name "Reed" and to insert in lieu thereof "Read", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Thomas E. Read, otherwise known as Thomas Griffiths, who was a member of Company I, Twenty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 12th day of February 1900: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Thomas E. Read."

ARTHUR BUSSEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2357) for the relief of Arthur Bussey, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$59,697.85, with interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from June 18, 1919" and to insert in lieu thereof "$29,848.93", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur Bussey the sum of $29,848.93, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages for loss of, or damage to, personal property consequent upon the taking of his plantation, Riverside, in Chattahoochee County, Ga., for military purposes, under the act of July 2, 1917.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill from either the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] or the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bill was reported by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will not make a brief statement in explanation thereof.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, to set out all the facts in this case in detail would require several hours, but I shall endeavor to be as brief about it as I can.

Mr. Bussey owned a very magnificent plantation in Georgia. He had it equipped with everything that made for happy living conditions and for earning money. He had 1,782 acres in the farm. He had ample water and lighting arrangements; he had a cotton gin, a nursery, and other things too numerous to mention. He had a vast amount of very fine stock, cattle and horses, hogs, sheep, and goats. The Army wanted that plantation in 1917 for an Army camp of some kind. They went down there and simply took it. They did not even file a condemnation proceeding. They put Mr. Bussey off. That led to a long controversy. Finally they bought the land, and, as the War Department contends, they bought the land and paid for the personal property.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in order that we may expedite the matter, may I ask the Senator about the opinion of the Court of Claims? Did not the Court of Claims pass upon this very question?

Mr. LOGAN. The Court of Claims held they had no jurisdiction.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Court of Claims denied the claim on the ground of lack of jurisdiction?

Mr. LOGAN. That is my recollection; but I am quite sure that it was a case of tort. The Court of Claims did hold, however, as I read the opinion, that the $445,000 which was paid covered only the land. Then there was some small payment for the personal property.

Mr. Bussey claims that there was $108,000 due him by way of damages to his stock and to his growing crops, and the Court of Claims fixed that damage at fifty-nine-thousand-and-some-odd dollars.

To be perfectly frank with the Senator and with the Senate, I have not the slightest doubt that a considerable amount was and is due Mr. Bussey. The record is so voluminous that I could not determine accurately just what it was. He claimed $108,000. The Court of Claims cut that in two and set the amount at $59,000. Then the committee cut that in two and fixed it at $29,000, giving him one quarter of what he claimed was due him.

Mr. GEORGE. And that without interest.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; that without interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the plantation was on the site where Fort Benning, Ga., now is, which is a military reservation. Is that correct?

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was afterward necessary for the Government to have it?

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose it was. The Government said they had selected it because of all these improvements that Mr. Bussey had on his plantation; that he had houses for them to live in without the necessity of the Army's constructing them; that he had a storehouse with merchandise and groceries in it and he had a dairy, a large barn. The took it because, as expressed by one of the officers, it was an ideal place, and they needed it at once.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have such confidence in the Senator from Kentucky and in the Senator from Georgia, who are interested in this bill and who have examined the facts, that I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MACK COPPER CO.

The bill (S. 3349) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitation, to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. against the United States for just compensation for the taking and use, and the damages and waste inflicted by the taking and use, of certain real property owned by the Mack Copper Co. and situated in San Diego County, State of California, which real property was taken, used, and occupied by the United States as an Army cantonment, training camp, or for other military purposes during the period from on or about May 15, 1917, to on or about June 1, 1922, not heretofore paid by the United States to the Mack Copper Co.

SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims of the United States, in the hearing and determination of any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act, is authorized, in its discretion, to use and consider as evidence in such suit, together with any other evidence which may be taken therein, the testimony and other evidence filed by Mack Copper Co. and the United States, respectively, in case no. D–134 on the docket of that court entitled "Mack Copper Co. against the United States", wherein the court rendered a judgment on the 6th day of June 1927.

SEC. 3. From any decision or judgment rendered in any suit presented under the authority of this act a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party thereto, as is provided by law in other cases.

PIKE NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

The bill (H.R. 2858) to add certain lands to the Pike National Forest, Colo., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands be, and the same are hereby, added to and made a part of the Pike National Forest, in the State of Colorado, and are to be hereafter administered under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests:

Provided, That the inclusion of any of the aforesaid land in the Cochetopa National Forest shall not affect adversely any right existing under the public-land laws at the date of the approval of this act.

JUDSON B. ISBESTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2497) for the relief of Judson B. Isbester, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, or dependent relatives Judson B. Isbester, formerly a private, Company M, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, and who subsequently had two periods of honorable service in Company I, Thirty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, as James E. Dolan, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Company M, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry on the 12th day of April 1909: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, or other emoluments shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] tell us about that case?

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, this man was a soldier during the Spanish-American War, serving in the Philippine Islands. He was sent to Silver City, N.Mex., where he was under observation for some ailments, and got into some trouble and was convicted in a civil court of assault with intent to kill by stabbing. He was discharged from the Army without honor. Since that time he has reenlisted and served two enlistments in the United States Army under the name of Dolan; at the expiration of both those enlistments he received an honorable discharge, and the last time he was discharged with "character excellent." During his last enlistment he served in the World War overseas.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the explanation is satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Judson B. Isbester."

PUBLIC-SCHOOL FACILITIES FOR INDIAN CHILDREN IN WASHINGTON

The bill (S. 2769) to provide funds for cooperation with Marysville School District, No. 325, Snohomish County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there are several bills similar in character to the one now before the Senate. I should like to have some Senator explain what the necessity for them is, if there is such necessity. Can the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] explain them?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, there are, I think, about three bills on the calendar which provide appropriations to assist in the enlargement of public schools in order to accommodate Indian children who will attend such schools. It has been the policy of the Indian Bureau to do away with Government boarding schools for Indians wherever it is possible to do so, and to put the Indian children in the public schools. In many instances so much of the land in the counties is exempt from taxation because it is owned by Indians that the public-school authorities are unable, under their tax laws, to build schools sufficiently large to take care of the Indian children. The Department feels that if a little money can be appropriated by the Government to assist the school districts in building or enlarging the public schools which the Indian children will attend, it will take care of the situation. Several of the Government schools have been closed, the Indian children have been thrown out of school, there is no place for them to attend school, and they are not attending school this year because of that circumstance.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, cannot the money for that purpose be secured from the Public Works Administration? To appropriate money out of the Treasury when a similar work is being done, let us say, by the Public Works Administration seems probably not to be wise.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think it is contemplated to get the money from the Public Works Administration, if it can be obtained there, and that will be perfectly all right, but many of us are very much interested, as the Department is interested, in having these appropriation bills passed in order that the assistance may be given the public schools so that they may take care of the Indian children.

Mr. FESS. Will the Senator advise us whether this is a new departure?

Mr. FRAZIER. It has been practiced in some instances—in fact, several instances—but it is rather a new departure. The policy of closing down Government boarding schools wherever possible and taking care of the children in the public school was inaugurated during the last administration, because it was felt the Indian children are thereby given a better advantage by mixing with the white pupils and become better equipped to take their place among the white people when they leave school.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I am not a member of the committee, but I will say, in answer to the Senator from Tennessee, that I think there is no additional money to be expended. The policy of the administration under Mr. Collier, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, is to dispose of and vacate what they call the nonreservation Indian schools, or schools which are not on the reservations. There are a number of them in the country. By closing those schools they are throwing some of the children into the public schools. The money saved by the abandonment of the Federal schools for the Indians is to be used to assist in building schoolhouses and maintaining schools operated by the public. So I think there is no additional sum of money taken out of the Treasury on account of the change of policy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the Senator from Oregon always persuades me very strongly by anything he has to say, but I think we are establishing a precedent that probably will give us trouble in the future. However, during the many years I have been in the Congress I do not recall ever to have voted against a bill providing for the education of the youth of this country, and I do not suppose I am going to vote against this bill, and I shall not object.

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I have no interest in the matter at all, except as we are all interested in the proper education of the wards of the Government. I know there has been a policy, built upon retrenchment, to dispose of the nonreservation Indian schools. However, the Indian children must be educated, and the task is now being imposed on the taxpayers and the public schools. I think we should do our part toward these children without any additional expense to the taxpayer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The bill does carry an appropriation from the Federal Treasury of nearly $40,000.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but what is carried in that way is saved by the abandonment of the nonreservation schools. That is the general impression I have, and I only offer that suggestion in connection with the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "be", to strike out "expended from any moneys now available, and applicable, or that may become hereafter available, for construction under provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933", and insert "appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $38,000 for the purpose of cooperating with Marysville School District No. 325, Snohomish County, Wash., for extension and improvements of school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all the Indian children of the district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL FACILITIES FOR INDIAN CHILDREN AT BROCKTON, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1977) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Brockton, Mont., in the extension of public-school building at that place, to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 55, town of Brockton, and county of Roosevelt, Mont., for the extension and betterment of the public-school building at Brockton, Mont.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district, and that accommodations in said enlarged building to the extent of one half its capacity shall be available for Indian children from the Fort Peck Reservation: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I presume this bill is based on the same principle as is the bill just discussed?

Mr. FRAZIER. The situation is exactly the same. The subcommittee visited that school in Montana last fall.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection to the consideration of the bill, the question is on its engrossment and third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALTERNATE BUDGET OF BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2874) authorizing the submission of an alternate budget for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, in addition to the budget provided for by law, there shall also be prepared and submitted an alternate budget for the Bureau of Indian Affairs which shall be segregated by functions of the service and jurisdictions, such expenditures to be classified thereunder in accordance with approved character and object designation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, this is rather an extraordinary proposal for legislation. I wish to ask what number of budgets will be required to be prepared and submitted and how many different subjects will be treated in the new budget?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the history of this proposal is that when the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs was investigating the expenditures made by the Indian Bureau it was found to be exceedingly difficult to ascertain where the money went which Congress had actually appropriated. The Senate Committee on Appropriations included in the Interior Department appropriation bill for the next fiscal year an amendment for an alternative budget. The Senate adopted that amendment which provided that at the next session of Congress in January 1935 the Indian Bureau shall submit its budget in the ordinary way and then in a new way which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs claims will furnish the committees of Congress with greater and more detailed information than we have had heretofore and would actually tell the Congress where the money appropriated will be expended.

We took the matter to conference after the Senate had adopted the committee amendment, but the House conferees objected because it was legislation on an appropriation bill. It was understood, however, by the conferees that the Senate having adopted the committee amendment providing for an alternative budget, we would by legislation allow the two kinds of budgets to be submitted for the next fiscal year. That will enable the appropriating committees of both the House and Senate to see whether there is real merit in this proposal in which the Indian Bureau is so much interested. I think that as a matter of good faith, in carrying out our part of the bargain as conferees on the part of the Senate, this bill should be passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I make a statement, if the Senator will yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I recall what took place in both the Committee on Appropriations and also in the conference committee, and I derived the very distinct impression from the testimony of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the real purpose of the proposed alternative budget was to cause lump-sum appropriations to be made. Whether this bill shall be passed or not, I want to say that I shall never agree to lump-sum appropriations for the Indian Service, and I do not believe the Senator from Arizona will. I am very much opposed to lump-sum appropriations; and I have the idea, from the testimony of the Commissioner, that the purpose of this bill is ultimately that the Congress shall give to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs a certain sum of money and let him allocate it as he may see fit. If that be the case, I am quite sure that we will have quite a contest about it before any such policy shall be adopted.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that I am just as much opposed as is he to lump-sum appropriations, but I cannot see any harm in permitting the Bureau of Indian Affairs to make up the regular Budget which will come to the Congress in the usual way, and also make up a budget in an alternative form to which we can give attention and consideration. The proof of the pudding is going to be in the eating. If the alternative budget provides for nothing but lump-sum appropriations it is not going to be looked upon with favor either in the House of Representatives or in the Senate; I can guarantee that.

I must say that I believe the Senator from Tennessee misinterpreted the real intent of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. My understanding from what Commissioner Collier said was that when the alternative Budget is submitted next January the Congress will have more information than it has ever had heretofore with respect to the details of the appropriation for the Indian Bureau.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be true, and if it means more details as to the specific appropriations for the Indian Bureau I will certainly not have any objection to it, but, so far as lump-sum appropriations are concerned, especially for the Indians who are the wards of the Government, I shall never agree to them, and I want to say right now that in my judgment we are not going to have them.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think the object of this bill is to prevent just the thing the Senator from Tennessee is protesting against, namely, to prevent lump-sum appropriations by setting out the different items so that we may know what the appropriations are for.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senate should understand that estimates will be submitted in the regular Budget in the customary way, just as they have been submitted for years, but, in addition thereto, at the next session of Congress, the same sums of money will be presented in an alternative form for the consideration of the Committees on Appropriations. It will only be done once.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have not as yet obtained the information which I sought in the beginning. It is provided in the bill that the alternate budget for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be segregated by functions of the service and jurisdictions. I inquire how many are the functions of the service and how many are the jurisdictions of the service, and what are they?

Mr. HAYDEN. There are 110 jurisdictions, if my memory serves me well. There are 110 different reservations or agencies where funds are expended. The functions of the service, broadly speaking, relate to education, conservation of health, Indian lands, industrial assistance and advancement, probate matters, roads and bridges, irrigation and drainage, general support and administration, and so on. They are functions which are divided into about a dozen different categories. We are told that it will be shown how the money for each function of the Indian Service will be expended at each jurisdiction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection of the testimony is that the Commissioner's idea was to furnish the functions, and he himself would make a statement as to how the money should be divided, but that was not to go in the bill. If I am wrong about that the Senator from Arizona may correct me, but that is the distinct impression I got. I am very much opposed to selecting the 10 or 12 functions which the Commissioner may designate and appropriating lump sums for those functions, and then allowing the Commissioner to allocate the funds as he may desire. I am opposed to such a plan, and I am sure the Senator from Arizona is also opposed to it.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am sure Congress will never legislate in such a broad and indefinite way. It should be provided that for the function of education, for example, so many million dollars shall be expended, and then that money divided to show just how much shall be expended at certain jurisdictions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

RATES OF PAY AND COMPENSATION FOR LABOR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3041) to effectuate the purpose of certain statutes concerning rates of pay for labor, by making it unlawful to prevent anyone from receiving the compensation contracted for thereunder, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 2, line 2, after the words "shall be fined not more than", to insert "$5,000"; in the same line, after the words "imprisoned not more than", to insert the word "five"; and in line 5, after the words "Secretary of the Treasury", to insert "and the Secretary of the Interior jointly", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall induce any person employed in the construction, prosecution, or completion of any public building, public work, or building or work financed in whole or in part by loans or grants from the United States, or in the repair thereof to give up any part of the compensation to which he is entitled under his contract of employment, by force, intimidation, threat of procuring dismissal from such employment, or by any other manner whatsoever, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 2. To aid in the enforcement of the above section, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior jointly shall make reasonable regulations for contractors or subcontractors on any such building or work, including a provision that each contractor and subcontractor shall furnish weekly a sworn affidavit with respect to the wages paid each employee during the preceding week.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should be unwilling to have the bill passed without the Senate understanding its purpose. Much has been said on the floor recently about what is known as the "kick-back" where employers or subemployers have indecently and immorally taken from employees a part of the wage which it was supposed they were being paid. The testimony before our committee investigating crime is so startling as to indicate that as much as 25 percent of the money supposed to be paid out of Federal funds for employment is actually repaid to employers in this improper manner. The purpose of the bill is to attempt to put some check upon that practice.

I may say in this connection that Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has written me a letter, from which I quote but a sentence:

> It has been a common practice for contractors constructing Federal buildings to pay the employees the prevailing rate as determined by the Secretary of Labor, and then have them return a certain amount to the contractor. That is a most vicious practice.

It is the purpose of the bill to have the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior, having charge of public works, require that an affidavit be made as to the pay roll each week so that we may have some way of reaching those who may be guilty of this practice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJUSTMENT OF STATUTES TO TWENTIETH AMENDMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2745) to provide for changing the time of the meeting of Congress, the beginning of the terms of Members of Congress, and the time when the electoral vote shall be counted, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 3, line 6, after the word "thereof" to insert "first Monday after the second Wednesday in December"; on page 3, line 10, after the word "thereof" insert "by the fourth Wednesday in December"; on page 3, line 13, after the abbreviation "Supp." strike out "VI" and insert "VII"; on page 3, line 14, after the word "thereof" insert "on the fourth Wednesday in December"; and after line 22 insert "6th day of January"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 152 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 3, sec. 41) is hereby amended by striking out the words "4th day of March" and inserting in lieu thereof "20th day of January."

SEC. 2. Section 25 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 2, sec. 7) is hereby amended by striking out the words "4th day of March" and inserting in lieu thereof "3d day of January."

SEC. 3. Section 1 of the act entitled "An act providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators", approved June 4, 1914 (U.S.C., title 2, sec. 1), is hereby amended by striking out "4th day of March" and inserting in lieu thereof "3d day of January."

SEC. 4. The first sentence of section 20 of the act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands", approved August 29, 1916 (U.S.C., title 48, sec. 1091), is hereby amended by striking out the words "4th day of March" and inserting in lieu thereof "3d day of January."

SEC. 5. The second sentence of section 36 of the act entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", approved March 2, 1917 (U.S.C., title 48, sec. 891), is hereby amended by striking out the words "4th of March" and inserting in lieu thereof "3d day of January."

SEC. 6. The act entitled "An act providing for the meeting of electors of President and Vice President and for the issuance and transmission of the certificates of their selection and of the result of their determination, and for other purposes", approved May 29, 1928, is hereby amended as follows:

(a) By striking out the words "first Wednesday in January" in section 1 of such act (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 3, sec. 5a) and inserting in lieu thereof "first Monday after the second Wednesday in December."

(b) By striking out the words "by the third Wednesday in the month of January" in section 5 of such act (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 3, sec. 11b) and inserting in lieu thereof "by the fourth Wednesday in December."

(c) By striking out the words "on the fourth Wednesday of the month of January" in section 6 of such act (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 3, sec. 11c) and inserting in lieu thereof "on the fourth Wednesday in December."

SEC. 7. The first sentence of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon", approved February 3, 1887 (U.S.C., title 3, sec. 17), is amended by striking out the words "second Wednesday in February" and inserting in lieu thereof "6th day of January."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill contains several paragraphs mostly affecting dates in existing statutes. I should like to have the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] state whether the bill is proposed pursuant to the recently adopted twentieth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the only effect of the bill is to carry out the provisions of the so-called "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution. It has no other object and accomplishes nothing else. The statute as it exists now provides for the counting of the Presidential vote on the second Wednesday in February. Under the newly adopted amendment to the Constitution that date has to be changed because the President goes into office on the 20th of January. There are a number of dates running through the statute which have to be changed accordingly.

Other changes pertain to the dates on which the Presidential electors shall meet and cast their vote and send the result to the Vice President and the Secretary of State. It will probably be necessary for some of the States to change some of their statutes, and it is desirable that the bill be passed now in order that when the legislatures meet that may be done at the earliest possible time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There are no changes provided for in the bill except those that are fairly contemplated by the amendment to the Constitution to which we have referred?

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct. That is the object of the bill and there is nothing else in it of which I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3185) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, with respect to farm prices, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 2 (1) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "To establish and maintain such balance between the production and consumption of agricultural commodities, and such marketing conditions therefor, as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will (A) give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period; and (B) reflect current farm labor costs, interest payments on farm indebtedness and taxes on farm property, as contrasted with such costs, interest, and taxes during the base period."

SEC. 2. Section 9 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) For the purposes of part 2 of this title, the fair exchange value of a commodity shall be the price therefor that will (A) give the commodity the same purchasing power, with respect to articles farmers buy, as such commodity had during the base period specified in section 2; and (B) reflect current farm labor costs, interest payments on farm indebtedness, and taxes on farm property as contrasted with such costs, interest, and taxes during the base period specified in section 2; and the current average farm price and the fair exchange value shall be ascertained by the Secretary of Agriculture from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to have the author of the bill discuss its provisions and purposes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, when the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed, an amendment was attached in the Senate providing that in establishing farm prices under the act and in the formula to give the farmer dollar a parity with the dollar of industry, cost of production should be taken into consideration. That amendment was stricken out in conference because it was said the cost of production could not be determined.

That formula provides that in determining the purchase power of the American dollar and in trying to achieve parity of the dollar for the farmer, it shall be based upon the index of the price level of commodities which the farmer buys. The bill provides that in addition to the index of the price level of the commodities which the farmer buys there shall be taken into consideration, in order to achieve the parity of 1909–14, the increased indebtedness and expenditures for debts which the farmer must make, the increase that has taken place in his taxes. It provides also that the increased cost of labor shall be taken into consideration.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Is not that practically what is incorporated in the proposed amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act on which we acted this morning?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I did not read that measure in full. The bill which is now under consideration has the approval of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH. Section 9 of the proposed amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act is almost verbatim a copy of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That may be.

The purpose of the bill now before us is to raise the parity price of the farmer's dollar. I am informed that the survey shows that if this bill is enacted into law, then if and when the agricultural dollar comes to a parity as intended by the act, it will raise the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar about 10 percent.

I am told that if the parity in this bill had been incorporated in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and were in full effect, it would make the price of wheat 10 cents a bushel higher under the present price level, and the price of cotton about 1.6 cents higher than it is under the present formula.

Parity has not been achieved with agricultural products under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I do not know whether or not it ever will be achieved; but, if it is, the farmer will have a 10-percent advantage in the purchasing power of his dollar over what he will have under the present provisions of the act.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can give the Senator a very concrete example of the need for this bill.

Yesterday when we passed the sugar control bill, it contained a new and entirely novel provision in respect to agricultural legislation, permitting minimum wages to be fixed in respect to sugar-beet cultivation. Under the existing law, that arbitrarily increased cost of production cannot be taken into consideration in fixing the parity price for the farmer. I made that statement upon the floor of the Senate yesterday. Unless something of this sort is available to permit the parity price to be adjusted pursuant to costs of production, the farmer cannot obtain the parity price which the legislation assumes to give to him.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Absolutely.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have examined the provision; and after the statements which have been made by the several Senators I do not wish to object to the consideration of the bill. I think it should pass.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think the bill involves too much to pass it in 5 minutes. I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope the Senator will not object to its passage.

Mr. FESS. I desire to examine it. I never saw it before.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over upon objection of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 857, being Senate bill 3185. I have conferred with the Senator from Ohio, who objected to the consideration of the bill, and he has kindly consented to withdraw his objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I see upon reading the bill that all it does is to include mortgage indebtedness, taxes, interest, and freight rates in making an estimate of the average price. I see no objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The bill (S. 3147) to amend the act approved June 28, 1932 (47 Stat.L. 337), was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 28, 1932 (47 Stat.L. 337), be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out in the eighth line thereof the word "three" and substituting therefor the word "five."

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO INDIANS

The bill (S. 3396) to amend the act of January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. 506, sec. 2139; U.S.Rev.Stat., sec. 241, title 25, U.S.C.), transferring certain jurisdiction from War Department to the Department of the Interior was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. 506, sec. 2139, of the U.S.Rev.Stat.), be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 241. Intoxicating liquors; sale to Indians or introducing into Indian country: No ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor or liquors of whatever kind shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian country. Every person who sells, exchanges, gives, barters, or disposes of any ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquors of any kind to any Indian under charge of an Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any ardent spirits, ale, wine, beer, or intoxicating liquors of any kind into the Indian country shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 2 years and by fine of not more than $300 for each offense.

"Any person who shall sell, give away, dispose of, exchange, or barter any malt, spirituous, or vinous liquor, including beer, ale, wine, or any ardent or other intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever, or any essence, extract, bitters, preparation, compound, composition, or any article whatsoever, under any name, label, or brand, which produces intoxication, to any Indian or ward of the Government under charge of any Indian superintendent or agent, or any Indian, including mixed bloods, over whom the Government, through its departments, exercises guardianship, and any person who shall introduce or attempt to introduce any malt, spirituous, or vinous liquor, including beer, ale, and wine, or any ardent or intoxicating liquor of any kind whatsoever into the Indian country, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 60 days and by a fine of not less than $100 for the first offense and not less than $200 for each offense thereafter: Provided, however, That the person convicted shall be committed until fine and costs are paid. But it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce ardent spirits, ale, beer, wine, or intoxicating liquors into Indian country that the acts charged were done under authority, in writing, from the Interior Department or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the Interior Department."

HEIRS OF WAKICUNZEWIN

The bill (S. 2957) for the relief of the rightful heirs of Wakicunzewin, an Indian, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the respective heirs of Wakicunzewin, deceased Sisseton-Wahpeton allottee, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to existing law, the sum of $2,888.90, as follows: Waste, $481.49; Cankumazwin, $481.48; Hotonnahowin, $240.74; Ticahdeiyotanke, $240.74; Mnimapson, or Charles Boesdi, $240.74; Cetanhote, or Grayhawk, $120.37; Hankadutana, or Charles Blackbird, $60.20; George Young, $60.19; Cankutopewin, $481.48; and George Track, $481.48: Provided, That, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount due any beneficiary may be deposited to the credit of the individual and handled in the same manner as other individual Indian moneys: Provided further, That, should any of the persons named herein be not living upon the date of the passage of this act, his or her share shall be credited to and become a part of the estate of such beneficiary.

CONSOLIDATED HIGH-SCHOOL BUILDING, SHANNON COUNTY, S.DAK.

The bill (S. 2940) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of Shannon County, S.Dak., in the construction of a consolidated high-school building to be available to both white and Indian children was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of Shannon County, S.Dak., for the construction and equipment of a consolidated public high-school building, at Pine Ridge, S.Dak.: Provided, That said school shall be conducted for both white and Indian children without discrimination, and that practical training for vocations and home economics be provided, and that the cost of education of white children shall be defrayed by the State and local public-school authorities, in accordance with such agreement or agreements as may be made between the Secretary of the Interior and State or local officials, and any and all sums of money obtained by reason of such agreement or agreements shall be available for reexpenditure for support and maintenance of said school.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3148) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat.L. 555), which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "party", to insert "with the consent of the court first had and obtained", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all suits filed under the act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims", approved May 14, 1926 (44 Stat.L. 555), either party, with the consent of the court first had and obtained, shall have the right to amend the pleadings at any time prior to the entry of final judgment so as to include all claims said Indians may have under said act against the United States and any defense the United States may have thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, EAST ALBURG, VT.

The bill (S. 3374) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain from East Alburg, Vt., to West Swanton, Vt., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain from East Alburg, Vt., to West Swanton, Vt., authorized to be built by Jed P. Ladd, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1929, heretofore revived and reenacted by act of Congress approved June 15, 1933, are extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 15, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

OSAGE INDIAN ALCOHOLICS AND NARCOTICS

The bill (S. 3382) to cover the handling of Osage Indian alcoholics and narcotics was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill. I thought already there were strong laws in force on this subject. I wonder what changes are proposed.

Mr. McNARY. The author of the bill is not in the Chamber at the present time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let it be passed over for the moment. I may wish to recur to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over for the present.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently said: This morning in my absence, Mr. President, Senate bill 3382 was passed over. I was absent from the Senate in connection with hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill in order that I may make a brief statement, and then, after having made my statement, I shall ask for the consideration of the bill, if there be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3382) to cover the handling of Osage Indian alcoholics and narcotics.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what changes does that bill make in the present law?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, just a statement or two with regard to the necessity for this bill. It is a departmental bill, recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Osage Indian Tribe until a few years ago was a very poor tribe of Indians. Oil was discovered on their reservation, and during the past 15 years something like $250,000,000 have been secured as royalties on their oil land. The Indians, about 2,000 of them, have had about a quarter of a billion dollars to spend in 15 years. I do not suppose they are different from other classes of people receiving that amount of money. The result, however, has been that a great number of these Indians have become addicts to liquor and to narcotics, and many of them have become, it may be said, uncontrollable and unmanageable. Because of their physical and mental condition, caused by abuses in the use of liquor and narcotics, it is thought that for their best interest they should be removed from the reservation and placed somewhere where they can be given proper medical care. That, however, cannot be done without legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Do the provisions of the bill accomplish that purpose?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I make no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the superintendent of the Osage Tribe of Indians shall become satisfied that any member of the tribe is an habitual drunkard, or an habitual user of narcotics, then it shall be the duty of such superintendent to file a complaint in the United States District Court in the district in which such Indian may reside charging said Indian with being an habitual drunkard from the use of intoxicating liquors, or an habitual user of narcotics, and if the court shall find that such Indian is an habitual user of intoxicating liquors or an habitual user of narcotics, it shall order that such Indian be committed to some institution designated by the court where treatment is given for habitual drunkards, or habitual users of narcotics; and said court shall order and direct that such Indian remain in such institution until the proper authorities thereof shall be of the opinion that he or she is sufficiently recovered from the use of alcoholic liquors, or narcotics, to be able to refrain from the use of said such intoxicating liquors or narcotics. The cost and expense of treating such Indians shall be paid out of the Indian's funds or property by the Secretary of the Interior where such funds or property are in his charge or under the charge or supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, then the same shall be paid out of the income of such Indian as a member of the Osage Tribe of Indians derived from the resources of the tribe. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the district courts of the United States to hear and determine such cases, and the judgment of such courts thereon shall be final. The court shall hear and determine said actions without a jury. It shall be the duty of the United States district attorney in the district where such cases are filed to prosecute the same.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall sell, trade to, or dispose of any intoxicating liquors or narcotic drugs to any member of said Osage Tribe of Indians who has been committed as provided in section 1 above shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the United States penitentiary for a term of not less than 1 year or more than 5 years and shall pay a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, and such person shall not be eligible to a parole unless said fine is paid, and then only under such rules and regulations as are provided by the Department of Justice of the United States.

OSAGE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 3393) relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be paid to each adult member of the Osage Tribe of Indians not having a certificate of competency his or her pro rata share, either as a member of the tribe or heir or devisee of a deceased member, of the interest on trust funds, the bonus received from the sale of oil or gas leases, and the royalties therefrom received during each fiscal quarter, not to exceed $1,000 per quarter, and if such adult member has a legal guardian, his current income not to exceed $1,000 per quarter may be paid to such legal guardian in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That when an adult restricted Indian has surplus funds in excess of $10,000 there shall be paid such Indian sufficient funds from his accumulated surplus in addition to his current income to aggregate $1,000 quarterly: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may cause payment to be made of additional funds from the accumulated surplus to the credit of any Osage Indian under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Whenever minor members of the Osage Tribe of Indians have funds or property subject to the control or supervision of the Secretary of the Interior the said Secretary may in his discretion pay or cause to be paid to the parents, legal guardian, or any person, school, or institution having actual custody of such minors such amounts out of the income or funds of the said minors as he deems necessary and when such a minor is 18 years of age or over the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion cause disbursement of funds for support and maintenance or other specific purposes to be made direct to such minor. The payments above provided shall be subject to such control and supervision as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem proper. Rentals due such adult members from their lands and their minor children's lands and all income from such adults' investments, including interest on bank deposits to their credit, shall be paid to them in addition to the current allowances above provided.

The Secretary of the Interior may, upon the request of any member of the tribe, invest any or all of the funds of such member in a life annuity insurance policy, which upon his or her death will go to the heirs of Indian blood of such member; or may, upon the request of any member of the tribe, use the funds of such member to buy a life annuity insurance policy for any member, of Indian blood, of his or her family, or any near relative of Indian blood, such insurance policies to be held in trust by the United States and not subject to sale, cancelation, or transfer of any kind without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior during the life of such member or his or her heirs. The annuities coming from such life-insurance policies shall be paid to the persons designated therein. Such policies and the income therefrom shall not be subject to attachment, garnishment, or execution and may not be pledged as security for any indebtedness; and it shall be stated in such policies that they are held in trust for such Indians.

The Secretary of the Interior may invest the accumulated funds to the credit of restricted members of the Osage Tribe, after paying the taxes of such members, in United States bonds, Oklahoma State bonds, real estate, first-mortgage real-estate loans not to exceed 5 percent of the appraised market value of such real estate (where the member is a resident of Oklahoma, such loans shall be on Oklahoma real estate), stock in building-and-loan associations in Oklahoma, livestock, or deposit the same in banks (banks in the State of Oklahoma to be preferred), or expend the same in such other way as may be for the best interests of such members, such expenditures, investments, and deposits to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That no investment of any of the funds of such members shall be made without their consent.

SEC. 2. That part of section 17 of the act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat.L. 561–579), which provides for the change of designation of homestead allotments of Osage Indians to an equal area of their unencumbered surplus is hereby amended to read as follows: "That any and all members of the Osage Tribe may change the present designation of their respective homesteads to an equal area of their unencumbered surplus lands in Osage County, upon application to and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the members of the tribe whose balances at the Osage Indian Agency are insufficient for the payment of ad valorem taxes on taxable lands may in the same manner change the present designation of their respective homesteads to an equal area of their unencumbered inherited, purchased, or otherwise acquired lands in Osage County: Provided, That each tract after the change and designation shall take the status of the other as it existed prior to the change in designation, as to alienation, taxation, or otherwise, and that any order of change or designation shall be recorded in the proper files of Osage County: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, where the same would be for the best interests of the Osage Indians, allotted or unallotted, to permit the sale of surplus and homestead allotments or any other lands, wholly or in part, of such Osage Indians, and to remove the restrictions, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and upon such terms as he shall approve."

SEC. 3. That section 3 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat.L. 1478), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That section 7 of an act of February 27, 1925 (43 Stat.L. 1008), be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows: "That none but heirs or devisees of Osage Indian blood shall inherit or take any right, title, or interest to any restricted lands, moneys, or mineral interests of the Osage Tribe, from those of one half or more Osage Indian blood who hereafter die; but in no event shall an heir or devisee not of Osage Indian blood receive more than one half of such an Osage estate: Provided, That this section, except as to limitation on amount or portion of estate to be taken by those not of Osage blood, shall not apply to spouses under marriages existing prior to February 27, 1925."

METLAKAHTLA INDIANS OF ALASKA

The bill (H.R. 4808) granting citizenship to the Metlakahtla Indians of Alaska was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Indians of the Tsimshian Tribe, and those people known as Metlakahtlans, who emigrated from Metlakahtla, British Columbia, Canada, to Annette Island, in the Alexander Archipelago in southeastern Alaska in the year 1887, and there established a colony known as Metlakahtla, Alaska, and any and all other British Columbia Indians who joined them there not later than January 1, 1900, and have since resided continuously therein, having been faithful and loyal to the Constitution, laws, and the Government of the United States, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States.

SEC. 2. The granting of citizenship to the said Indians shall not in any manner affect the rights, individual or collective, of the said Indians to any property, nor shall it affect the rights of the United States Government to supervise and administer the affairs of the said Metlakahtla Colony. And any reservations heretofore made by any act of Congress or Executive order or proclamation for the benefit of the said Indians shall continue in full force and effect and shall continue to be subject to modification, alteration, or repeal by the Congress or the President, respectively.

SUITS OF CHEROKEE INDIANS—FRANK J. BOUDINOT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3117) authorizing and directing the Court of Claims, in the event of judgment or judgments in favor of the Cherokee Indians, or any of them, in suits by them against the United States under the acts of March 19, 1924, and April 25, 1932, to include in its decrees allowances to Frank J. Boudinot, not exceeding 5 percent of such recoveries, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "any", to insert "suit or", and on page 2, line 2, before "Stat. L.", to strike out "3" and insert "43", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in compliance with request of the Cherokee Indians upon final determination by the Court of Claims of any suit or suits against the United States by the said Indians, sometimes known as the "Cherokee Nation", or by any class, classes, or bands thereof, commenced and prosecuted under the authority of the acts of Congress approved March 19, 1924 (43 Stat.L. 27), and/or April 25, 1932 (47 Stat.L. 137), and in the event judgment or judgments shall be rendered in favor of said Indians, or any of them, the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to include in its decrees allowances to Frank J. Boudinot, a member of the Cherokee Tribe of Indians, who has for many years been active in pressing the claims of the Cherokees against the United States by their request and direction and at his own expense, or to his heirs, personal representatives, or assigns, a reasonable percentage, not to exceed 5 percent, of such recoveries: Provided, That such allowances to said Frank J. Boudinot shall be in addition to any and all fees and expenses authorized by said acts of Congress of March 19, 1924, and April 25, 1932; and this act shall not be construed to affect in any way the contracts with attorneys entered into thereunder.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs give an analysis of this measure?

Mr. FRAZIER. The chairman of the committee is not present; but this is the regular form of bill to allow the Indians to go into the Court of Claims. It is a jurisdictional bill. The committee considered it carefully, and I believe it should pass.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The report was unanimous?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I notice that there is a limitation as to the fees that may be paid.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; the usual limitation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1842) to amend sections 211, 245, and 312 of the Criminal Code, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, at the request of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is temporarily absent from the Chamber, I ask that the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over for the present.

The bill (H.R. 6013) to authorize the sale of land and houses at Anchorage, Alaska, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is no report on this bill appearing in the file which I have. I should like some information about the bill. It gives the Secretary of the Interior broad powers to dispose of the public lands. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H.R. 3843) to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, approved August 1, 1912" was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill follow the same course. There is no report on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SALE OF REAL ESTATE UNDER COURT ORDER

The bill (H.R. 1567) amending section 1 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat.L. 751) providing for the method of selling real estate under an order or decree of any United States court was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there ought to be an explanation of this bill, because it allows a chancery court to sell property at private sale. I am wondering what the purpose of the bill is.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, the purpose is to expedite matters in litigation.

Section 1 of the present law, which is proposed to be amended, is in the exact language of the bill down to the word "Provided", in line 1, page 2. The amendments come in the two provisos which are printed here.

It seemed to the committee that the rights of the parties were properly safeguarded.

The provisos are:

That the court may, upon petition therefor and a hearing thereon, after such notice to parties in interest as said court shall direct, if it find that the best interests of said estate will be conserved thereby, order and decree the sale of such real estate or interest in land at private sale: Provided further, That the court shall appoint three disinterested persons to appraise said property, and said sale shall not be confirmed for less than two thirds of the appraised value.

This bill was considered by the House committee and passed the House. Several letters with reference to the matter are included in the report, and if the Senator cares to have them read I shall be glad to do it; but, as I said in the beginning, after careful consideration we thought it very proper to have this measure passed, and that the rights and interests of all persons were carefully preserved.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the last clause—

Provided further, That the court shall appoint three disinterested persons to appraise said property, and said sale shall not be confirmed for less than two thirds of the appraised value—absolutely prohibits a sale of property if it does not bring two thirds of its value. I do not see how a law like that could be constitutional or why it should be passed. If a person holds a mortgage on real estate, and it is appraised, and when it is sold it does not bring two thirds of its appraised value, there is no sale at all; so unless the bidder can be forced to bid two thirds of the value of the property the mortgage holder has no remedy.

If that provision should be changed so that the owner or his assignee should be given 2 years, or any other reasonable period of time, in which to redeem the property if it brought less than two thirds of the appraised value, I should have no objection; but unless the bill can be amended to that effect I shall have to ask that it go over, because that is revolutionary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, we have the old system of chancery courts in Tennessee; and I am so imbued with the idea of their justice and equity that I am very loath to want to change the law about sales at all. As the Senator from Mississippi knows, I hate to object to anything in the world he proposes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have no personal interest in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator has not, I ask him to let it go over for the day, and let us consider it at another time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection from the Senators from Tennessee and Kentucky the bill will be passed over.

COLUMBUS DAY

The joint resolution (H.J.Res. 10) requesting the President to proclaim October 12 as Columbus Day for the observance of the anniversary of the discovery of America was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating October 12 of each year as Columbus Day and calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on said date and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies expressive of the public sentiment befitting the anniversary of the discovery of America.

T. PERRY HIGGINS

The bill (H.R. 518) for the relief of T. Perry Higgins was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of T. Perry Higgins for disability from arterial rheumatism alleged to have been contracted in the course of his employment as a civilian in the Army Transport Service of the United States during the World War, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the said T. Perry Higgins had made application for the benefits of the Act entitled "An Act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this Act.

GEORGE JEFFCOAT

The bill (H.R. 2026) for the relief of George Jeffcoat was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, the sum of $5,000 to George Jeffcoat, husband of Mary Alma Jeffcoat, on account of the death of the said Mary Alma Jeffcoat, who was killed by one S. S. Sligh, Jr. (a Federal officer, known as a Federal prohibition officer, in Government service, while on duty), on December 21, 1931, while driving an automobile on a public street in the town of New Brookland, Lexington County, S.C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

CAPT. J. O. FARIA

The bill (H.R. 2321) for the relief of Capt. J. O. Faria was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Department approve this bill? Was it submitted to the Department?

Mr. GIBSON. There is a report from the Interior Department which is adverse.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is adverse? Will the Senator explain why?

Mr. GIBSON. This is a bill in which I think the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is interested.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not familiar with the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over for the present.

G. ELIAS & BRO., INC.

The bill (H.R. 2561) for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSCAR F. LACKEY

The bill (H.R. 4779) for the relief of the estate of Oscar F. Lackey was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH T. CLOUD

The bill (H.R. 190) for the relief of Elizabeth T. Cloud was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over. There does not seem to be any report accompanying the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RUSSELL & TUCKER AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 2340) for the relief of Russell & Tucker and certain other citizens of the States of Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this is a bill to give the parties enumerated the right to enter suit in the United States Federal Court for the Northern District of Texas for damages due from the United States by reason of neglect on the part of officials and inspectors of the United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Animal Industry, in dipping tick-infested cattle in Texas and Oklahoma.

Mr. McKELLAR. It gives them the right to sue in the United States District Court?

Mr. CAPPER. In the Federal Court for the Northern District of Texas. A similar bill was previously passed by the Senate, and a similar bill some years ago went through both Houses.

Mr. McKELLAR. These people must have a real case, or they would not want to go into court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES E. ELLER

The bill (H.R. 3611) for the relief of Frances E. Eller, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTER BROS. & BIFFLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7279) for the relief of Porter Bros. & Biffle, and certain other citizens.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, what does this bill involve?

Mr. CAPPER. It is a bill similar to the one just passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. It simply allows the parties to go into court?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; it allows them to go into the Federal court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WALTER E. SWITZER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3463) for the relief of Walter E. Switzer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, what is the amount carried in the bill as reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised the amount is $2,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to its consideration. The original bill carried $10,000.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GALEN E. LICHTY

The bill (H.R. 4847) for the relief of Galen E. Lichty was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. EDWARD WESTWOOD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 4516) for the relief of B. Edward Westwood, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the words "Postmaster General" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the Comptroller General of the United States", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of B. Edward Westwood, postmaster at Youngstown, Ohio, in the sum of $891.17, such sum representing the deficit in the account of the said B. Edward Westwood, caused by burglary to the post office on December 25, 1931, and for which casualty the said B. Edward Westwood was in no way responsible.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

STANTON & JONES

The bill (S. 294) for the relief of Stanton & Jones was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we have no report on that bill in our files.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The number of the bill stated on the calendar is an error. That is the number of the bill in the last Congress. The proper number of the bill for this Congress is S. 294.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee raises the point that the report on the bill has not as yet become available. If that be true, I suggest that it go over.

Mr. CAPPER. I have a copy of the report here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is not convenient to consider the bill in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas subsequently said: Mr. President, my attention has been called by the Senator from Kansas to the fact that Senate bill 294 merely provides for referring a matter to the Court of Claims. If that be correct, I shall make no objection to its consideration.

Mr. CAPPER. That is correct.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 2, line 11, to strike out the word "petition" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "suit", and on line 12, to strike out the word "filed" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "brought", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whereas, due to conditions brought about by the late war with Germany, Stanton & Jones suffered losses in performing revetment work at Pellican Bend, Mo., under contract with the Engineers' Office, dated June 12, 1918; and whereas, because of equitable and moral considerations, it is the intention of Congress that the said Stanton & Jones shall be reimbursed for whatever losses and/or damages were suffered by them in performing the work in question begun during the period of the late war with Germany, the said claim is hereby referred to the Court of Claims of the United States to be adjudicated upon the basis of such losses and/or damages with instructions to determine from the evidence already submitted, and such additional evidence as either party may desire to submit, the amount of any such losses and/or damages, and the said court is hereby given jurisdiction and instructed to render judgment for the amount of such losses and/or damages as may be found to have been suffered by the said Stanton & Jones in the performance of the said work begun during the late war with Germany: Provided, That suit shall be brought in said court within 4 months from the date that this act becomes effective.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VICTORIA ARCONGE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2585) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to cancel patent in fee issued to Victoria Arconge, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not find a report on this bill in my file.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, this is simply a bill to authorize the Secretary to cancel a patent issued to this Indian woman. Patents in fee were issued to a great many Indians a few years ago, many of them over the protests of the Indians. The Department has now adopted the policy that under certain circumstances they can cancel the patents in fee and let the lands go back in trust, to be held by the Government in trust for the Indians, so that they will not have to pay taxes.

Mr. McKELLAR. This would be helpful to the Indian and not hurtful?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is for the benefit of the Indian, and the committee was very favorable to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The amendment was to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the patent in fee no. 527856 issued to Victoria Arconge under date of May 8, 1916, covering her allotment of land on the Yankton Sioux Reservation, S.Dak., described as follows: Lots 582, 583, 586, and 587 of the Yankton Indian Reservation, S.Dak., containing 160 acres, and to issue to her a trust pate ntin lieu thereof covering the same land to be held in trust for her sole use and benefit or, in the case of her decease, for the sole use and benefit of her lawful heirs for the same period under the same conditions as other trust allotments are held on that reservation as extended by the last proclamation of the President relating to the said reservation and with the right of the President in his discretion to extend the trust period: Provided, That any valid encumbrances now resting against any of said land shall not in any manner be affected by the provisions of this act, but any of such land so encumbered, if still owned by the allottee, shall, when such encumbrances have been removed, become subject to the provisions of this act as fully and to the same extent as if such land were now unencumbered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LAND AND HOUSES AT ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, while I was absent from the Chamber, orders of business 869 and 870, being, respectively, House bill 6013 and House bill 3843, dealing with Alaska, were temporarily passed over. Both these bills have passed the House of Representatives and have the approval of the various departments having jurisdiction over the subject matter. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the bills may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the first bill referred to by the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6013) to authorize the sale of land and houses at Anchorage, Alaska.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPLICATION OF MINING LAWS TO ALASKA

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the second bill referred to by the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 3843) to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, approved August 1, 1912."

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. J. O. FARIA

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to order of business 875, being House bill 2321, and to consider the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 2321) for the relief of Capt. J. O. Faria.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator from Vermont explain the bill?

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the bill proposes to authorize the United States Compensation Commission to consider and determine the claim of Captain Faria, who was injured while employed by the United States Shipping Board. He failed to file his application within a year, and this bill would merely give him the right to have his case heard by the United States Compensation Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOARDERS OF SILVER (S.DOC. NO. 173, PT. 3)

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in connection with the statement I made at the beginning of this morning's session with respect to the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury addressed to the Secretary of the Senate under date of April 25, 1934, relating to alleged hoarders of silver, it is noted that the Secretary states he has supplied all the information in his possession, and that he is transmitting certain incomplete data to the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate. I am informed that the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, who is present, has a letter in relation to the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arkansas that there is on the desk a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury giving further information in regard to the matter to which the Senator adverts. Would he be willing to have the letter read at this time?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let the letter be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 211, a list of names of holders of "spot" silver and silver futures. The letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 26, 1934.

Col. EDWIN A. HALSEY,
Secretary United States Senate.

MY DEAR COLONEL HALSEY: I have hitherto transmitted to you a list of indicated holders of "spot" silver and silver futures as of January 31, 1934, as to which holders information appeared to be complete.

In the course of inquiry the names of certain other persons and firms appeared as owners of "spot" silver and silver futures as of Janury 31, 1934, but in these cases the information is not complete. Further investigation would be required to conclude the inquiry in many of these cases. In view of the fact that considerable difficulty has been experienced in getting the necessary information in a number of cases, the Treasury Department does not have the facilities to carry the matter further. In response to your request made over the telephone this morning, I am sending to you this list.

There is not included in the attached list any reference to holders of less than 50,000 ounces of "spot" silver or of less than two futures contracts. Because such small holders were very numerous, no systematic attempt was made to obtain complete information with reference to them.

Sincerely yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter, with the accompanying paper, will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I was not present this morning when this subject was brought up. In fact, the letter to me as Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency was only received this morning, and it explains that the reports made by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate comply with the resolution of the Senate insofar as the Secretary can go. He mentions that there are some matters to be looked into, and that perhaps he has not the authority to do it, but he has sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency a report as to these items which he thinks might be further investigated. That matter is now pending before the committee. I think it is going to be laid before the committee tomorrow morning. Under the resolution already adopted, I believe the committee has authority and power to make this investigation. Whether or not the committee will undertake to do it I do not know, but I presume very likely they will; and if we need further authority, we will come to the Senate and ask for it.

I now send to the desk and ask to have read the letter sent to me which I received this morning. The letter explains the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Chairman
Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I have hitherto transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate a list of the indicated holders of "spot" silver and silver futures as of January 31, 1934, as to which holders information appeared to be complete.

In the course of the inquiry the names of certain other persons and firms appeared as owners of "spot" silver and silver futures as of January 31, 1934, but in these cases the information is not complete. Further investigation would be required to conclude the inquiry in many of these cases. In view of the fact that considerable difficulty has been experienced in getting the necessary information in a number of cases, the Treasury Department does not have the facilities to carry the matter further. Accordingly, I am sending to you this list for such further attention as you may deem warranted.

There is not included in the attached list any reference to holders of less than 50,000 ounces of "spot" silver or of less than two futures contracts. Because such small holders were very numerous, no systematic attempt was made to obtain complete information with reference to them.

If further information in this matter should come to me, I shall turn it over to your committee.

Very truly yours,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I merely wish to add that it seems to have been made clear in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of the Senate of the 26th instant, and in the letter to the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency just read, that the Secretary of the Treasury has supplied all the information he has, and that he has complied with the Senate resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator's statement is correct.

THE AIR MAIL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

Mr. BLACK obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TYDINGS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Cutting	King	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	La Follette	Russell
Bachman	Dieterich	Logan	Schall
Bankhead	Dill	Lonergan	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, yesterday when I suspended my remarks, I was discussing certain parts of the evidence that had been introduced before the special Senate committee with reference to the purpose and object of the conference that was held in Washington adjacent to the offices of Postmaster General Brown by certain air-mail operators. I have presented certain portions of the evidence given by Mr. Brittin of the Northwest Airways, Mr. Sheaffer of the Transcontinental and Western, and Mr. Hanshue of the Western Air Express and the Transcontinental and Western. I shall now read a brief extract from the evidence given by Mr. Hanshue, from page 2978 of the record, with reference to the same subject. It will be understood that Mr. Hanshue is an officer of one of the companies, and this evidence was given by him under oath before the committee. Naturally I am not attempting to quote all the evidence by all the witnesses. In some cases there are conflicts between evidence given by the same witness, but on page 2978 Mr. Hanshue was asked with reference to this meeting—

The CHAIRMAN. Was that not with a view to determining who should continue to occupy or should occupy? Was not that the object of it?

Mr. HANSHUE. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the whole subject, was it not? Was it not, Mr. Hanshue?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes; I think it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Those were the controversies, and that was what was left up to be decided, was it not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

Up to this time I have presented to the Senate some of the statements of Mr. Brown with reference to the object and purpose of the meeting, a statement by an officer of the Northwest Airways, a man who was an officer at the time he represented that company in this conference, the evidence of Mr. Sheaffer, and now I present the evidence of Mr. Hinshaw.

I wish to show to the Senate what was stated by the representative of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware. Mr. Hinshaw was a representative of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware at the conference held by the Postmaster General. At the time Mr. Hinshaw testified before the special committee he was no longer with the Aviation Corporation, but was a representative of the United Airways. Mr. Hinshaw, however, had taken a very active part both in connection with the passage of the McNary-Watres Act and in connection with the revision of the air-mail map when the favored operators decided upon who should have the particular routes. Mr. Hinshaw had every reason to have power and influence, for he had been the assistant to Mr. James W. Good in the campaign for Mr. Hoover, and he had been a very active participant in the campaign, both before the convention and after the convention. He was here as the paid representative of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware, and the evidence shows that he took one of the most prominent parts of any who participated in all these gatherings. Remembering that I have stated that the evidence shows that the purpose and object of this meeting was to decide how the air-mail routes should be distributed among the favored members, I now call attention to the statement of Mr. Hinshaw, under oath before the committee, which is found on pages 1579 and 1580.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you take part in the conference that divided up the air map?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Whom were you representing at that time?

Mr. HINSHAW. American Airways, which is a subsidiary of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware.

[Vol. 4, pp. 1584 and 1585]

Mr. HINSHAW. Along in the summer of 1930, a notice went out that there would be a revamping of the air-mail map, and there were some 30 or 40 different groups of people who came into Washington.

Senator MCCARRAN. Who sent out the notice?

Mr. HINSHAW. The Post Office Department.

Senator MCCARRAN. Was it in writing?

Mr. HINSHAW. The operators were notified that they were to come to Washington on air-mail business.

Senator MCCARRAN. How were they notified?

Mr. HINSHAW. By letters, as I remember; and this meeting took place in Washington. Mr. Brown addressed the meeting initially, and he told us that he wanted three competitive transcontinental routes; that he wanted these people that were operating in the territories—that he would try to work it out for them either by extension, and if he could not do that, he would have to put up the two transcontinental routes for advertisements, if he were unable to do it by extension. He stated that those people in this meeting should get together and try to work out to see who would be the operating company to operate these transcontinental routes. He further stated that any companies that had been operating, that had a pioneer interest in a line, in other words, had been running it for a year or 2 years——

The CHAIRMAN. Like Ball?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; these were non-air-mail carriers—that the companies should buy them, that he wanted those people taken care of.

Continuing the quotation from Mr. Hinshaw's testimony:

American Airways was interested in the Southern Transcontinental because they had 4 air-mail contracts going out of Dallas, 1 to Brownsville, 1 to Houston, and Houston over to New Orleans, and New Orleans to Atlanta. Naturally, the Southern Transcontinental interested them. On that Southern Transcontinental route were three air lines that were passenger air lines, not mail carriers. One was the Delta Air Mail Service, which flew from Atlanta to Dallas; the other was the Standard Air Lines, which flew from Los Angeles to El Paso; and the third was the Halliburton Air Lines—the safe way—which came down as far as Mineral Wells and Big Springs from Wichita Falls down to the Southwest through Tulsa. American Airways proceeded to try to deal with those people.

Remember, this was before the competitive bids were called for.

The CHAIRMAN. To buy them out?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes, sir; and they did buy them out, and we were given to understand that there would not be, until the situation was cleaned up and these people taken care of—that there would not be any advertisements for these two transcontinental routes. That is correct, what you said, sir.

In other words, here were some routes which were to be opened up supposedly to competitive bidding or to be opened up in some other way. The representative of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware was at the meetings and testified that it was necessary for them to "clean up that section", or, as he said, to buy them out, which was done. What could have been the purpose of buying out these prospective competitive bidders in that section? There could be only one purpose. He said they did buy them out, and they did it, as I shall show later by the sworn testimony of the president of the Aviation Corporation, not because they wanted the lines, but because it was in the program that they should be bought out.

Let us see what the president of the Aviation Corporation testified under oath about that. This is the man who was president of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware at the time the meetings were held and at the time the Aviation Corporation of Delaware was compelled to purchase these companies in order to "clean up the territory". At page 1651 of the record of the hearings Mr. Coburn, the president of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware, said under oath:

Yes, sir; my firm was engaged by the Aviation Corporation of Delaware to assume the management of that corporation and its subsidiaries, and I was selected president on the 17th of April 1930, and I continued in that engagement until the 17th of March 1932, when we retired from the management of the company.

On page 1654 occurred the following:

The CHAIRMAN. Did not Mr. Brown say that he expected those granted any contracts or extensions in this matter to go as he said in reference to what lines they tried to get.

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; and we all agreed voluntarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he not say that?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

On page 1655:

Mr. COBURN. He said that he hoped that he would be able to put into effect an airway map which he exhibited to us, showing the mail routes then in operation and the mail routes that he wished to establish, including two independent competitively owned transcontinentals. In doing that, he wanted to recognize the pioneering work that had been done by mail operators and by passenger operators both.

The CHAIRMAN. He was going to recognize pioneers on all lines?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; which interested me, because our company owned some lines flying passengers only and losing a lot of money. He stated that he wanted to work it out so that on any route there would be just one operator flying both mail and passengers, day and night; he thought that that was the most economical way for the Government to do it; that he wanted to assure us that we would not get any earnings from our mail subsidies from which we could pay dividends; that we would have to look for our profits to our passenger and express business, and he wanted us to get together and carve up the map.

Note those words, "He wanted us to get together and carve up the map."

For each operator to work out the place on the map where he belonged; that the mail operator in any territory or on any route get together with any one or more passenger operators in such territory or route and work out a combination so that everybody that had made any investment in the pioneering have such opportunities as the future might show of realizing on it, and to do that there would have to be a lot of trading done.

Here is the Postmaster General at a conference which has been pictured as being held by one who had "great vision." He had the operators there. The president of the Aviation Corporation of Delaware swears that they were told to "carve up the map" and that "there would have to be a lot of trading done."

Continuing Mr. Coburn's evidence:

"Now", he said, "I will leave you, and you just go ahead and work it out", and that was when he left us and that is when we picked out Mr. MacCracken to serve as chairman. We discussed it at some length, and a working committee was set up. I remember I put Mr. Hinshaw on to represent our company because he lives here in Washington.

We all agreed, for instance, that Northwestern should have the extension up to Winnipeg.

I digress to remark that shortly after this meeting was held Postmaster General Brown wrote a letter to the Comptroller General asking him for authority to grant an extension to the Northwest Airways up to Winnipeg. The Comptroller General held that it could not be done, but it was in line with the agreement of the operators.

Continuing Mr. Coburn said:

There was no question about that. As to the rest of us, we could not agree, whereupon we all agreed to turn the matter in to the Postmaster General and we would abide by his decision—whatever was fair—and our company was then in the position of living up to that agreement and cooperating with the Postmaster General in the rearrangement of the map, and that is how the thing came up, because he proceeded then to say, "We are going to establish these two transcontinentals, and until those are established we are not going to exchange any certificates for contracts nor am I going to make any extensions or any modifications in the method of paying for the mail."

Remember, a great many of these companies had certificates and the statement has been made that they were not illegal, that they were simply granted to extend old contracts. Certainly they were, but the Postmaster General held over their heads the sword of Damocles and told them, "Until you agree among yourselves as to who shall have the lines there will be no certificates issued and there will be no readjustment of your mail pay." A man of vision, creating a great air-mail system for the country, holding over the heads of the operators the threat, "You must agree or I shall not renew your certificates."

I call attention to the fact that every air-mail contract that was canceled on the ground of fraud, every certificate that was canceled, every extension that was canceled, was a contract made or a certificate granted or an extension granted after this was done, and in line and in accordance with the purposes and objects of that meeting. Not a single certificate, not a single extension, not a single contract was granted to one that did not agree to the statement the Postmaster General made, "I will not grant you any extension, I will not readjust your pay, until you agree among yourselves", as Mr. Coburn swore, "how the map will be carved up."

Whose map was that? Did it belong to the Aviation Corporation, of Delaware, to the United Aircraft Co., to the Northwest Airways, to the North American or General Motors, or did it belong to the people? Did it belong to Postmaster General Brown, who delegated to these operators the right to divide up the territory and say who should get the contracts at exorbitant rates? If it did, then truly he was a man of vision. We will find later that this vision was not broad enough in its scope, as the results show, to embrace to any appreciable extent any except the four companies I have mentioned.

In volume 4, pages 1658 and 1659 occurred the following:

Mr. COBURN. Anybody who had submitted sealed bids always has a nervous few minutes.

That was because I asked if he had any fear that anybody was going to bid against him. I suggested to him that he might think that even among air-mail operators they would abide by a gentleman's agreement, and he said:

Mr. COBURN. Anybody who had submitted sealed bids always has a nervous few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Even where the qualifications have been arranged in advance to limit it to comparatively few—1, 2, or 3 big companies?

Mr. COBURN. The chairman seems to think I should not have been in the least disturbed.

The CHAIRMAN. I was wondering why you were. If you were disturbed it had to be because you were fearful that the Aviation Corporation or the North American or the American Airways—which one were you connected with? I get these companies all mixed up.

Mr. COBURN. American Airways.

The CHAIRMAN. All you could fear was that you were in danger from the other two I have mentioned. Was there anybody that could qualify?

Mr. COBURN. I did not anticipate any danger from them.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not anticipate any trouble from them?

Mr. COBURN. No, sir; but I did not know what might turn up.

As a matter of fact, at the very time those bids were called for, the president of the Western Air Express, who testified he had signed an agreement to which I shall later advert, had in his pocket authority from his company to bid on two of those lines.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not know but what someone might bid and they might knock out the night flying by law?

Mr. COBURN. I did not know about that. From my point of view the question of strength and ability to do the task loomed up rather big, but really at this time, Mr. Chairman, I cannot analyze my feelings and the cause for them except I was this way [indicating].

The CHAIRMAN. In spite of all the precautions that had been taken?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In spite of all the qualifications which had been added?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; I was as nervous as a witch.

The CHAIRMAN. You were still nervous and fearful that something might happen?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You surely did not fear any of the companies that had been in there would go back on their agreement?

Mr. COBURN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew they had agreed not to bid?

Mr. COBURN. There was no formal agreement, but there was a general understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, it was not signed on the dotted line, but you knew, as far as these three big companies were concerned, there was an understanding that there would be no bidding on the line informally allotted to their brother lines?

Mr. COBURN. I did not fear any of those companies that I had dealings with would come in and bid.

The CHAIRMAN. You did not fear them?

Mr. COBURN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Mr. COBURN. I understood they were not going to bid, and I had a great deal of confidence in that.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the express understanding, that they would not bid?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; but I did not know but that someone else would pop up.

The CHAIRMAN. You thought some interloper would come in?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; quite right.

Senators have read much in the papers to the effect that there has not been any proof about what happened from those who were there. This gentleman was there. He was the president of the Aviation Corporation. He declared under oath that those present agreed not to bid, and he had no fear that they would, and they proceeded to carve up the map. Yet there are some who seem to think the moral conception of the people of the United States has sunk to such a low and degraded level that when people make an agreement contrary to law and contrary to morals and contrary to ethics to defraud the United States Government by preventing competitive bidding, they can gloss it over and say any criticism of it is a persecution.

I call attention to the fact that this testimony of Mr. Coburn was given before noon. After noon Mr. Daniel M. Sheaffer, of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Transcontinental, asked to take the stand again; and he took the stand, and wanted it expressly understood that he did not agree not to bid. I have already read what he had testified and what he reported to his committee. Then I asked him if he had been discussing the matter with anybody during the noon recess, and he said yes, with his attorney. I asked him if he knew that the law provided that if the parties made a combination not to bid it would disqualify them, and he said yes, he was familiar with that. Then, after that happened, Mr. Coburn again took the stand and concluded that perhaps he had better clear up the matter; and I desire to show how he cleared up what Mr. Sheaffer had said.

COBURN SAYS FORCED TO AGREE

On page 1674, Mr. Coburn said:

Mr. COBURN. Over 75; not over 100.

The CHAIRMAN. Between 75 and 100 pounds—all right. Now, Mr Coburn, do you deny now that it was generally understood in this meeting among every one of the people there that they were to decide in that meeting which air line would be operated by which company and that contracts were to be made on that basis? Do you deny that?

Mr. COBURN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not deny that?

Mr. COBURN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the truth, is it not?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, if it is the truth that it was generally understood in that meeting that an agreement was to be reached between those present and the Postmaster General that certain routes between certain points should be allotted to certain companies, do you still say that under the law there was left the freedom of right to bid upon any other line except the one which was to be allotted to the various companies?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

Remember, this is after Mr. Sheaffer had testified.

The CHAIRMAN. You say now that, in spite of the understanding that there was to be an agreement made for an allotment of lines, that that left one free to act contrary to the understanding?

Mr. COBURN. No, sir. We were to agree, but we did not agree, and we told the Postmaster General that we could not agree, and therefore we left it to him to divide them up.

The CHAIRMAN. Left it to him to divide them up?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; now, you agreed to abide by what he said, didn't you?

Mr. COBURN. I did; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And so did the others, didn't they?

Mr. COBURN. I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. But it was generally understood in there, wasn't it, when you did not finally agree upon dividing up the country, that the Postmaster General should divide it up as he saw fit?

Mr. COBURN. We left it to him—I did.

The CHAIRMAN. And that each one was to accept his decision?

Mr. COBURN. I did.

Here is what I asked Mr. Coburn; and listen to his reply:

The CHAIRMAN. Would you have considered it ethically right, according to the code of any standard of business that you have ever known, to make an agreement that you would abide by that action and then bid contrary to that agreement?

Mr. COBURN. I would not.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not?

Mr. COBURN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And, in fact, nobody did, did they?

Mr. COBURN. No; I think that is right.

I have read the statements of the two representatives of the Aviation Corporation of America with reference to that meeting. I cannot believe there is any man anywhere who will deny that if those statements are true, those contracts are illegal and fraudulent. Has the time come when men can stand up and defend, in the highest lawmaking body of this Nation, an agreement made by people in a Government building whereby they stand up and say, "We will agree with each other on a division that will prevent competitive bidding", and then try to sell the country on the idea that that position is decent or honorable? If it is, the system of ethics and morals of the United States Government and its people has certainly sadly departed from the old-fashioned ideas of honesty and justice which prevailed in its early days. The Supreme Court of the United States denies it. The courts of every State in the Union deny it. The right-thinking mind of every honest individual in the Nation denies it. There is an old commandment upon which the sound fundamental morals of this people are based, that "Thou shalt not steal." I have no sympathy and no respect for the ideas of a man who is willing to try to send another man to jail for stealing $25 or $100 and at the same time is willing to gloss over or protect or defend those who, in high places, rob the taxpayers of the Nation of millions and millions of dollars.

What difference is there between the man who breaks open a store and takes $25 worth of goods and the man who, by chicanery and trickery, deprives the Government of the United States of the right to get its services at the lowest price by agreements with other men to prevent honest, open, and fair competitive bidding? There may be a distinction. There is some distinction in my mind, and it is this:

I do not consider that any man is right who designates as "Public Enemy No. 1", whoever that man may be, the individual criminal who goes out and risks his life. I would rather class as "Public Enemy No. 1" the man who sits in high places, either in the seats of the Government or the councils of the great financial and industrial leaders of the Nation, and who is willing to deprive the people of the United States of millions of dollars as he conceals himself behind the forms and shadows of legal protection.

Now, let us go a little further. So far I have quoted exclusively from the beneficiaries of the very contracts that were canceled. I now read a statement made by Mr. Thomas H. McKee, who was not one of the beneficiaries. It was made under oath before the committee. Mr. McKee was the representative of the Wedell-Williams Co. He made a full and complete report in writing of that meeting. He reported it in writing to no less a person than Commander Jahncke. I will read just a little of what he said and place the rest of it in the RECORD (pp. 1445–1446):

I do not believe I was able to see Mr. Glover after that, and I made several attempts, through Mr. Macpherson, to talk to Mr. Brown, but he was always too busy to be seen, and, in the meantime, I did a little scouting around Washington, and found out, to my surprise, that there were a number of air-mail contractors here attending a very mysterious meeting in the Post Office Department.

I may state that Commander Jahncke was the Assistant Secretary of the Navy at the time the letter to which I have referred was written.

I learned finally, through the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Aeronautics, to the effect this meeting was in progress and was being held in Mr. Brown's anteroom. So I went to Mr. Macpherson and made every possible effort to find out what it was all about and receive an invitation through regular channels to participate in the meeting.

I was very much surprised to find that Maspherson knew very little about what was going on, although the meetings were being held only a few feet from his office, and finally I used a little rather unusual method, and finally finding out I was not wanted in the meeting, I crashed the gate one fine morning and went in anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you get in?

Mr. MCKEE. I phoned Mr. Macpherson from the Mayflower Hotel and told him I was an important official of one of the air-mail contractors.

The CHAIRMAN. Whom did you tell him you were?

Mr. MCKEE. I did not tell him any name.

The CHAIRMAN. What company did you mention?

Mr. McKEE. I left that to his imagination. He said the meeting was to be held in the anteroom of the Postmaster General at 10 o'clock.

I shall ask to have quotations I have from the evidence placed in the RECORD. Mr. McKee finally got in, but he found there was no place for him in this gathering. He was not a representative of an aviation corporation; he was not a representative of any of these companies which got their lines and were absorbed. So he was authorized to get out. They asked him where he operated, and he told them. The chairman of the meeting, Mr. MacCracken, told him, according to Mr. McKEE (p. 1447):

We have been authorized to draw up this new air-mail picture for the country. I am going to bear in mind what you have outlined, and I am going to talk to the Postmaster General sometime this morning and discuss the matter fully with him, and if I find that he wants us to go further into your petition for mail in this connection, I will let you know and I will invite you to come before our group here and give you an opportunity to be heard.

The long and short of that is that they were not in the picture, although I shall later read from a letter from Mr. Glover in which he calls attention to the fact that the Aviation Corporation did not take care of Wedell-Williams, and they were threatening to bring suit about it. He wanted to know why they did not take care of Wedell-Williams.

I now ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter of Mr. McKee to Commander Jahncke dated June 17, 1930, found on pages 1452, 1453, and 1454 of the record, volume 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONERGAN in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

1426 TWENTY-FIRST STREET, NW.,
Washington, D.C., June 17, 1930.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Knowing of your interest in civil and commercial aviation and the air transport activities of Mr. Harry P. Williams and associates of the Wedell-Williams Air Service, Inc., of New Orleans, I am submitting for your information some rather interesting disclosures that have been brought to light recently respecting the attitude of Post Office Department officials in charge of air mail toward passenger air transport operators who are potential air-mail contractors.

I came to Washington some 3 weeks ago as the personal representative of Mr. Williams and the Wedell-Williams Air Service Co. My mission was primarily to lay before the Post Office Department two petitions: (1) That our passenger route from New Orleans to Fort Worth, via Shreveport and Dallas, be designated an air-mail route; and (2) that the Wedell-Williams Co. be permitted to bid upon an air-mail contract over that route. Prior to leaving New Orleans on this mission, I was instructed to do everything within reason and honor to make a legitimate effort to obtain such a designation and such a contract. This I have attempted to do, without success.

I am attaching hereto a copy of a letter sent to me by the Post Office Department under date of June 5, which purports to explain the reasons for the Department's refusal to honor our petitions and grant our requests. This letter, signed by Supt. E. B. Wadsworth of the Air Mail Division, speaks for itself. From the train schedules he refers to you will see that the best train service between New Orleans and Fort Worth is about 16 hours. Wedell-Williams Air Service makes the trip in slightly more than 4 hours.

Shortly after my arrival in Washington I began to hear rumors of certain conferences of air transport operators who were said to be meeting in executive session in the ante-room of the Postmaster General. It was indicated these conferences were secret and that only those who had connections could gain admission to the deliberations.

I inquired of Mr. Macpherson, secretary to the Pstmaster General, as to who was attending the conference, and whether they were invited by the Department, or simply met there of their own volition. I also stated my desire to attend the conferences. Mr. Macpherson was more cordial—a pleasant chap—but was rather vague. He did not apparently know who invited the operators. He did know several of the men attending the conference, whose names he gave me. But inasmuch as I lacked the proper connections I was not invited to the hearings.

Determined to find out something of these hearings, I went uninvited to the room in which they were held and found probably 15 gentlemen present. Mr. William P. MacCracken and Col. Paul Henderson were present, and the former gentleman talked to me briefly. I outlined the nature of my case in behalf of Wedell-Williams. He made a notation of our present route on one of his maps and, after telling me frankly that this conference had been called by the invitation of the Postmaster General, made the following statement to me. Said he, "I will be glad to take up with the Postmaster General the matter of Wedell-Williams and your route from New Orleans to Fort Worth, and if he (the Postmaster General) wants us (the conference) to go into your case, we shall be glad to do so. In such an event you will be called and given an opportunity to present your case." I thanked Mr. MacCracken and departed. Later, the same day, I talked with MacCracken again, and he advised me that he had talked with Postmaster General Brown, who had expressed the wish that the group, apparently under the leadership of Mr. MacCracken, should not consider our case at the present time, as it had so many other complex questions to deal with.

In fine, Mr. Secretary, here was a hand-picked, select group of fallible and interested air transport operators, formally and officially invited to meet in Washington under the auspices of the Post Office Department, and apparently authorized by their official host to straighten out the national air-mail situation.

During the course of their deliberations, which covered the best part of 3 weeks or more, these gentlemen, executives of leading air transport organizations in this country, secretly formulated recommendations, plans, and perhaps policies, for submission to the Postmaster General which very probably will affect, frequently adversely, the many small operators all over the country. And during these meetings the small passenger transport operators, many of whom are well qualified and interested as potential air-mail contractors, were as voiceless as the tomb. This is hardly a democratic state of affairs, and the whole procedure would seem to violate the American philosophy of giving parties of interest a fair hearing before an impartial official or tribunal.

A day or two prior to the time the petitions of Wedell-Williams Air Service, Inc., were acted upon by the Post Office Department, I had a telephone conversation with Mr. E. B. Wadsworth of that Department. On that occasion I raised the question as to why Wedell-Williams had not been invited to this conference, inasmuch as we hoped to bid on future air-mail contracts to be let in our territory and, furthermore, in view of the fact we are an operator of record in the Commerce and Post Office Departments. Mr. Wadsworth, in responding to my inquiry, frankly told me some astounding things. Among these the following are the most shocking:

(a) That the small transport operators had been ignored by the Department insofar as this secret conference was concerned.

(b) That this had been done because most of such operators are somewhat removed from Washington, and were probably not very much interested in what the conference proposed to do.

(c) That the small operators were probably operating over short routes, and were therefore engaged in an uneconomical proposition and probably unable to maintain representation in Washington.

(d) That had all operators been invited, their presence would have resulted in such a mass of conflicting opinions, demands, recommendations, and ideas that the purpose of the conference would have been defeated.

(e) That it had been the experience of the Department that an air transport organization operating over a route less than 700 miles long could not hope to make money, and that such organizations should not expect to receive recognition by the Post Office Department in the form of a subsidy or an air-mail contract.

The above is the candid statement of an important official of the Post Office Department. You will notice that his trend of thought is reflected in the attached copy of his letter to me, on June 5, in which he expresses the views of the Department whereby it refuses to grant the petitions of Wedell-Williams Air Service. Since we are operating over a route only 470 miles long, I take it we cannot hope to have our petitions endorsed by the Department.

The position of Superintendent Wadsworth is completely out of harmony with the will of the present Congress as reflected in the Watres Air Mail Law, which recognizes specifically any and all organizations which have operated for 6 months on a daily schedule over a course 250 miles long. Further, his position conflicts with the admitted intention of the Congress to assist all air transport operators—both great, near-great, and small—at a time when many aviation executives admitted their industry was about to collapse, by granting such operators an air-mail contract. Further, his position negatives the business man's understanding of the Presidential policy to stimulate trade and commerce and accelerate business in general.

In view of the attitude of the Post Office Department, as reflected in the enclosed letter from Mr. Wadsworth (June 5) and further in view of the verbal testimony made by that gentleman to me as hereinbefore set forth, it would seem that the future of Wedell-Williams Air Service, Inc., and other small operators like it, rests in the hands of William P. MacCracken, Esq., Col. Paul Henderson, and their associates representing the great aviation interests of this country. This is indeed a sorry and unfortunate spectacle.

By the admission of Mr. MacCracken, the Post Office Department has placed in the hands of this conference group practically the authority to control the future destiny of every small air transport operator in America. It is idle to say that these gentlemen will not abuse their authority, or that the Department will not heed their recommendations and demands. If it was not expected that they would abuse or exceed it, why should it have been given to them in the first instance?

The Wedell-Williams Air Service is very much disturbed over the present situation. It is engaged in rendering an air passenger transport service which links up four of the great cities of the Southwest and covers a route which is not now served by air-mail planes. The only air mail out of New Orleans for Dallas and Fort Worth departs at 11:30 in the morning. It must go west to Houston, Tex., and north to Fort Worth and Dallas, arriving there after 7 in the evening. On the return trip there is no air mail service worthy of the name, as mail must be placed on a train at Houston and sent via rail into New Orleans. Such is the present air-mail picture in this locality.

I have been advised confidentially that there is likely to be a congressional investigation into this situation. I hope that it may be had. In the meantime I am submitting this statement to you in good faith, because I know how keenly you are interested in the commercial, industrial, and financial upbuilding of New Orleans and its vast trade territory and of its important relation to north and northeast Texas.

It would give us much pleasure to believe that the Post Office Department had considered our petitions on their merits. But in view of recent events and disclosures as outlined herein, we are bound to come to another conclusion.

I have the honor to submit this statement to you in behalf of the Wedell-William Air Service, Inc., of New Orleans, La.

With great respect, believe me,

Very sincerely yours,

THOMAS HUDSON MCKEE,
Washington Representative.

HON. ERNEST LEE JAHNCKE,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy,
Navy Department, Washington, D.C.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I will read one or two statements from this letter that was sent to Mr. Jahncke, written June 17, 1930:

In fine, Mr. Secretary, here was a hand-picked, select group of fallible and interested air-transport operators, formally and officially invited to meet in Washington under the auspices of the Post Office Department, and apparently authorized by their official host to straighten out the national air-mail situation.

During the course of their deliberations, which covered the best part of 3 weeks or more, these gentlemen, executives of leading air transport organizations in this country, secretly formulated recommendations, plans, and perhaps policies, for submission to the Postmaster General which very probably will affect, frequently adversely, the many small operators all over the country. And during these meetings, the small passenger transport operators, many of whom are well qualified and interested as potential air-mail contractors, were as voiceless as the tomb.

I call attention to the fact that at that time Weddell-Williams were operating a pioneer line, and had been operating it for the necessary length of time to qualify them for a contract under the new law.

PAUL HENDERSON, VICE PRESIDENT OF UNITED, TESTIFIES

Now let us read from the vice president of the United Aircraft. I have already read from the statements of the officers of two of the large companies. I shall now read a statement made by the vice president of the United, found on page 1457 of the record, remembering that the issue here was whether or not they met for the purpose of dividing up the air-mail map, and thereby agreed to something which would prevent competitive bidding.

The CHAIRMAN. This is Col. Paul Henderson?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you connected with any of the airline companies now?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir; I am vice president of the United Airlines.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you hold any other position with them?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am vice president of the United Aircraft Transport.

Pages 3003–3004:

I find practically every one of them made the statement that they would prefer the plan suggested rather than competitive bidding. Were the operators themselves the first ones that mentioned competitive bidding, or did the Postmaster General outline a plan with reference to avoiding competitive bidding?

Colonel HENDERSON. The plan which he outlined would have avoided competitive bidding.

The CHAIRMAN. And you understood that from what he said?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes. I could not fail to understand it.

Page 3005:

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to refresh your recollection as to the statement made by the Postmaster General, by a memorandum prepared and, I believe, submitted to the Post Office Department.

I then asked him to look at the memorandum. He read the memorandum. I asked him if he prepared that memorandum. He said:

Parts of it; yes, sir.

Page 3006:

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you whether or not the statements made here—

This was reading from the memorandum.

He further invited them to try to agree among themselves on which of the operators should operate those new lines which he wished to create.

Colonel Henderson questioned the propriety of this meeting while it was in progress. That will be found on page 3004. I shall ask to have the answers on pages 3004, 3005, and 3007 inserted in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you understand and did you discuss with anyone in there at that time, or within the next hour or two, whether you considered it to be legal and right?

Colonel HENDERSON. I did; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). To agree on a division of those routes by the extension method or any other method?

Colonel HENDERSON. I did; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. With whom did you discuss it?

Colonel HENDERSON. With the chairman of the meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was that?

Colonel HENDERSON. Mr. MacCracken.

The CHAIRMAN. What was that discussion?

Colonel HENDERSON. Shortly after MacCracken was elected chairman I moved over into a chair adjoining his at the table where he was sitting and said, "Bill, I wish that you would adjourn this meeting immediately." He asked me why, and I told him I thought it was a great mistake to go on with it further until we had some more definite information about the legality of the plan that we were supposed to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. What did he say?

Colonel HENDERSON. He said that I was crazier than hell, and that he would not adjourn the meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell him why you thought it ought to be adjourned?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What reason did you give to him for wanting to adjourn the meeting? What criticism, if any, did you make of the plan?

Colonel HENDERSON. I told him that I did not believe the bill contemplated any such action as that which had been suggested, and I thought that we ought to all inform ourselves about it before we moved forward on anything.

* * * * * * *

Colonel HENDERSON. Mr. Chester W. Cuthell.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Cuthell?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was that discussion?

Colonel HENDERSON. I called Mr. Cuthell into the corridor and told him that I believed this meeting was an improper one and we should adjourn it at least until we learned something more about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell him why you thought it was improper?

Colonel HENDERSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. What did he say about it?

Colonel HENDERSON. He said: "I quite agree with you; if we were holding this meeting across the street in the Raleigh Hotel, it would be an improper meeting; but, because we are holding it at the invitation of a member of the Cabinet and in the office of the Post Office Department, it is perfectly all right."

The CHAIRMAN. Did you discuss anything with any of them that day in connection with the illegality of the purposes of the meeting as you understood it?

Colonel HENDERSON. I did not consider that the meeting was illegal. I thought it was improper.

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to refresh your recollection as to the statement made by the Postmaster General, by a memorandum prepared and, I believe, submitted to the Post Office Department—I am not sure; submitted to some one, I think by you—and I will ask you to look at page 16. I am not sure just when that was made [handing memorandum to witness]. Do you remember when that memorandum was made?

Colonel HENDERSON. I don't know what it is until I look at it. It is dated March 15, 1933.

The CHAIRMAN. If you will look at those two paragraphs or any others you desire to, then I wish to ask you a question about it.

(Witness examines memorandum.)

The CHAIRMAN. May I have that now? Did you read that part?

Colonel HENDERSON. I read this page; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you prepare this?

Colonel HENDERSON. Parts of it; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you whether or not the statement made here—"He further invited them to try to agree among themselves on which of the operators should operate those new lines which he wished to create"—I will ask you if that statement is correct?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You were referring to the Postmaster General when you said that, "He further invited them to try to agree among themselves on which of the operators should operate those new lines which he wished to create?

Colonel HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that in this meeting of May 19?

Colonel HENDERSON. That was the purpose for which he asked us to organize ourselves when he left the room.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the purpose he told you to organize for was to agree among yourselves on which of the operators should operate the new lines which he wished to create?

Colonel HENDERSON. That is right; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any other discussions with the operators that day that you recall?

Colonel HENDERSON. Only with my own associates.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was that?

Colonel HENDERSON. Mr. Johnson.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Phil Johnson?

Colonel HENDERSON. Mr. Phil Johnson, who was then president of the Boeing Air Transport, and Mr. Wheat, who was then an official of the United Aircraft & Transport.

The CHAIRMAN. What was that discussion?

Colonel HENDERSON. Well, after the meeting adjourned we three and perhaps others of our associates went to the hotel and talked the whole matter over.

* * * * * * *

Colonel HENDERSON. None. We spent the evening together, and sometime after dinner, at my suggestion, we went over and called on a personal friend of mine, who is a lawyer—none of us are lawyers.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was that, Colonel Henderson?

Colonel HENDERSON. Judge John Edwards, who was then Assistant Secretary of the Interior, with whom I had a personal acquaintance for several years.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the object of discussing that with him?

Colonel HENDERSON. Well, I have a high regard for his ability as a lawyer, and we were looking for a little advice.

The CHAIRMAN. As to what?

Colonel HENDERSON. As to the propriety of this plan, as to what we should do.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the propriety or legality?

Colonel HENDERSON. Either.

The CHAIRMAN. What advice did he give you about the plan?

Colonel HENDERSON. If we asked him for any particular advice other than his opinion as to whether it was a workable plan, I cannot say. He was very definite in saying that he did not believe it was a workable plan and that, of course, nothing could or would or should come from it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he discuss the legality of it in any way with you?

Colonel HENDERSON. No. I think most of our discussion was an attempt to interpret the word "extension", and I remember that he said in his opinion there was a great deal of difference between the word "extension" and the word "elongation"; that he would think that "extension" might be thought of in the terms of the tail of a dog, but it certainly would not be longer than the dog; but that he could see that if the word had been "elongation" that it might be extension to any length compared to the thing that it was an extension to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I will refer to what was said there. Mr. Henderson, deciding that this meeting was wrong, stating in the beginning that he first thought it was a joke. He could not believe, he said, that anybody would try seriously to divide up the air-mail map in any such way. He has testified under oath, this vice president of the United Air Lines, by whose testimony the company is bound, according to the decision of the United States Supreme Court.

He got up and said, "Bill, I wish you would adjourn this meeting immediately"—

Speaking to Mr. MacCracken. Mr. MacCracken asked him why. Mr. Henderson said:

I told him I thought it was a great mistake to go on with it further until they had some definite information about the legality of the plan we were supposed to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. What did Mr. MacCracken say?

Colonel HENDERSON. He said that I was crazier than hell, and that he would not adjourn the meeting.

In other words, the chairman of the meeting, at the time the paid representative of more than one of the operators who later benefited by the contracts, declined to adjourn the meeting, even though its propriety was questioned by the vice president of the United Air Lines. Not content with that, Mr. Henderson took it up with the attorney for the Transcontinental & Western, or the T.A.T., and Mr. Cuthell took the position that that meeting was legal if held in the Post Office Department but that it would not be legal if held anywhere else.

Then, still not satisfied, Mr. Henderson, with the president of the United Aircraft himself, and another of his representatives, took it up with a lawyer that night in order to ascertain just how far they could go, questioning it at the very time that the meeting occurred.

Does that sound as if there has been no evidence, that there has been no proof, of the collusive and fraudulent purposes for which these people met down there in the Post Office Department to divide up the property of the United States as though it belonged to them and not to the people?

It may be that the time has come in this country when such activities simply prove that a man has great vision, but in the olden days it would not have been referred to as great vision. People would have referred to one of the commandments written of old.

Let us see what the attorney for the Transcontinental & Western, who was present in this meeting, said was the object and purpose of the meeting 2 days after the meeting of May 19. There was no reason in the world why the attorney for the T.A.T. should have written a letter to the president, or one of the chief men in the company, Mr. C. M. Keys, on May 21, 1930, and have told him anything but the truth. No one can imagine that there could have been the slightest excuse for Mr. Chester W. Cuthell to have written to Mr. C. M. Keys 2 days after this meeting was held and given him a false report of the objects and purposes of the meeting, remembering that we have been hearing that it was not to avoid competitive bidding, that there has been no evidence that such a purpose was intended, that it is wrong to theorize and jump to conclusions.

Let us see what the attorney for the company which got a contract, at a cost which, if it had gone 10 years, would have meant a cost to the Government of $16,000,000 over the next low bid, said was the object and purpose of that meeting.

I have already read the first seven paragraphs of this letter. I shall now proceed with the remainder:

At Monday's meeting—

May 19—

everybody was present—

This is the meeting which had been called at the instance of Mr. Cuthell and Mr. Daniel M. Sheaffer—

At Monday's meeting everybody was present. I never saw a Cabinet officer take such a courageous stand. He told the full meeting that he would like to avoid competitive bidding, but that that could only be done if all of the elements in the business agreed on some equitable distribution of routes, services, and compensations.

In other words, 2 days after the meeting the gentleman who suggested the meeting wrote to an officer of his company and told him that the Postmaster General said he wanted to avoid competitive bidding, but that the only way in which it could be done was for the operators to get together and agree on an "equitable distribution of routes, services, and compensation."

Whose compensation was that? Whose money was it that the Postmaster General was so flippantly saying to these gentlemen must be divided up and alloted among themselves? Eventually, it came from the hard-earned nickels and dimes and dollars of the men who contribute to create the wealth of this Nation. It did not come from these operators. It did not come in large part, unfortunately, from the gentlemen who drew $435,000 bonuses and salaries in 1 year. It came from the people who work and who toil. The Postmaster General told them, according to his statement, that they must agree upon an equitable distribution not only of routes but of services and compensation. A man with vision.

Let us see what else he said:

He suggested the appointment of a committee to prepare a new map and a new grouping of routes. Paul immediately countered with a suggestion that there be two committees—

That is in line with the report made by Mr. Wadsworth as to what happened. Continuing—one representing those that already had mail contracts that would be extended, and the other representing companies with no mail contracts. Brown immediately answered that there was no assurance whatever that the old air-mail routes would be extended, and that such extensions—depended entirely on the result of the committee's work and his approval thereof.

Note—

What did Cuthell say he said?

Nothing will be done until the agreement is reached. You—United Aircraft—you are here. I have it in my power to grant or withhold the certificate from you. Unless you agree with the others, nothing will be done in the way of a certificate until we have worked out this plan.

Reading further:

Bill MacCracken was present, representing Western Air and Pittsburgh Aviation Industries. We had Sheaffer and Maddux, representing T.A.T.; Doe, representing Eastern Air Transport; and Frank Russell, representing Curtiss-Wright Flying Service. Furlow was there also.

In other words, they had quite a representation.

The Postmaster General left the meeting, taking Glover and Wadsworth with him. I immediately nominated MacCracken to be chairman and obtained the support of everyone present, although I knew that Paul expected to have that position.

Each group thereupon named its representative. Paul was named by United; Hanshue, Thompson, Doe, Russell, and Sheaffer were the others. We withheld Maddux for the subsequent negotiations and because of his old troubles with Hanshue. Mayo attempted to limit the discussion of the committee by having it declare a policy that no new routes would be suggested which might increase the total amount to be expended beyond the appropriations. There is no such limitation in the law now, except in respect to contracts let after July 1, 1931. He also sought and obtained a statement from the Postmaster General that pioneer companies would only be those that had operated for over 6 months over 250-mile routes. That would exclude the Flying Service.

I have therefore urged upon Frank the necessity of persuading the Postmaster General that the Flying Service should be considered a pioneer, because it owns more planes, flies more miles, and many more passengers than any of the other contractors; that it has invested its own money without any contract or support from the Government; that it has provided airports, schools, and services which are just as important to the development of aviation, and which are proving just as unprofitable as the operation of passenger craft. It will be a very simple matter to prove that on a competitive bid—

Note this:

It will be a very simple matter to prove that on a competitive bid the Flying Service, because of its wider scope of operations over which its overhead can be distributed, can underbid a contractor carrying mail alone.

The whole plan of having the business divide up the Government's money—

Says the company's lawyer—without competitive bidding will surely fail unless not only the Flying Service but perhaps other operators are taken into consideration.

The Postmaster General stated plainly that he would not welcome bidding—

Note this: It is said there is no evidence. Listen to the attorney, 2 days after the meeting—

The Postmaster General stated plainly that he would not welcome bidding by one company for lines in another one's territory.

Whom is this gentleman appearing for? For the Transcontinental & Western, the company that has been sending out propaganda for the last month, a great mass of it, in individual lots. It is the company of which Mr. Rickenbacker is an officer, the company of which Mr. Scheaffer and others are officers. What does this attorney say?—

The Postmaster General stated plainly that he would not welcome bidding by one company for lines in another one's territory, but stated that he would have to have such a competition unless an equitable arrangement could be made all around.

What does that mean? Let that be glossed over. Send out the word to the American people that somebody wants to try an issue before them on whether they believe in public honesty and public decency, or whether they believe that partisan spirit and special privilege should continue to override the honesty and decency that heretofore has existed in this Nation.

Continuing—

Obviously we cannot, in justice to the Flying Service, give up this possible source of revenue merely to accommodate lines which probably will not use our equipment.

Note that, "probably will not use our equipment."

It is equally obvious that there is a possibility here for an all-around trade.

The bill which is pending contains a provision divorcing the operating companies from the manufacturing interests. I invite those who are interested in knowing the extent to which the combination of companies has gone, to look at the chart which is on the wall, which will show a part of the combinations. It would be impossible to show all of them without covering the entire wall; but this chart shows a part of the interlocking directorates and stock ownership of these companies.

Notice what this attorney said, that these people probably would not use their equipment, and that it gives a chance for a good "all-around trade."

We have not yet been able to close the arrangements with Western Air. My guess is that Talbott is waiting to see what extensions Western Air could get before concluding the trade.

Listen to this. The Senate will remember that I read yesterday the beginning of the letter saying that certain representatives had already come to Washington about this extension to the Western Air.

By our aggressive moves last week—

Says Mr. Cuthell—

we have definitely blocked such a possibility and Hanshue understands what we have done. * * *

Doe will take a very firm position that Eastern Air is entitled on its performance to a most favorable consideration to an extension to Dallas—

But he did not get it—which is along the lines of the route that the Postmaster General really wants established. In connection with this route, we have had several discussions with Coburn, the new president of the Aviation Corporation. I believe that Coburn, being a realist, is going to recommend that Aviation Corporation curtail its activities very sharply. He does not wish to join up in the Pennsylvania arrangement by which we hope to bring T.A.T. into New York in cooperation with the Pittsburgh group, Ball and Eastern Air Transport. * * *

I shall not read all the letter, but I desire to read now from a paragraph which shows what was done in the way of advertising:

He intends, therefore—

Says Mr. Cuthell—

to avoid the 40-cents-a-mile provision—

And that is what was done—

and get everyone flying both passengers and mail and receiving something like N.A.T.'s 80 cents day and 95 cents night flying rate. Assuming, therefore, that we cannot make a Western Air or Pittsburgh Aviation deal, I am confident that T.A.T. is going to get a mail contract, but I am certain that we will get a contract if we can make that combination.

I am certain that we can get a contract if we can make that combination.

Continuing:

I am fairly certain that Eastern Air will be granted an extension contract so as to enlarge its scope of operations to a point where it can afford to put in a considerable number of new planes.

The next step will be a report by the subcommittee to the full committee next Monday in Washington. It will be a miracle if this is a unanimous report, but by that time I hope to have more definite understandings with Western Air and the Pennsylvania group. I am very sure—that the P.M.G. will go the full limit to avoid competitive bidding, but the dangers to his own situation of overstepping his authority are obvious. Unless everyone is taken care of there may be an attack on the whole program in the courts, and unless the routes and the moneys are so clearly equitably distributed Congress simply will decline to appropriate more moneys at the next session or, indeed, may amend the bill so as to change his provisions radically.

Says Mr. Cuthell—

But Mr. Cuthell said the third time:

I am very sure the P.M.G. will go the full limit to avoid competitive bidding.

And he did. I read the last paragraph:

Maddux is handling himself well, and Dan—

That is Sheaffer—and Cheever—

That is Cowden—

are working very earnestly. Lindbergh has helped some, but the others in the group did not contribute very much except occasional attendance at meetings.

I have just read from a photostatic copy of a letter written by the attorney for the Transcontinental and Western, reporting what transpired at that meeting, 2 days after it occurred. In the face of that statement made by the attorney for the company, backing up the previous statements I have read from Coburn, from Hanshue, from Brittin, and from Sheaffer, is there any one who can deny that the object and purpose of that meeting was to do exactly what it did—to divide up the air-mail map, and to award the contracts to those who were specially selected, and not to those who earned them by competitive bidding?

Mr. President, having read from the evidence what took place there, I will call attention to the fact that, on page 2449 of the record, Mr. Brown specifically denies that this meeting continued or that any of its purposes continued after June 2, 1930. He also made the following statement in answer to a question I asked:

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is a fair statement, is it not, Mr. Brown, to say that the chief discussion among the operators under this meeting hinged around a plan to act under the Watres bill in awarding contracts by extensions or subletting or otherwise?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct; in line with the letter of the Watres bill.

The CHAIRMAN. And in such a way that there would be no competitive bidding?

Mr. BROWN. That is all they wanted to do—all of them.

Remember that on June 2, according to the evidence Mr. Brown gave before the committee, the whole transaction was closed. Now, let me show how far he departed from the facts. Mr. MacCracken made a report of this meeting, which was written on June 4. We only have a copy of that report, the original could not be found. Mr. MacCracken also wrote a letter to the Postmaster General on that date. We could not find the original letter; Mr. Brown did not turn it over to us; neither was it returned in the correspondence that he brought back after evidence as to the destruction by fire; but a copy taken from the files of Mr. MacCracken makes this statement, on June 4:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 4, 1930.

Hon. WALTER F. BROWN,
Postmaster General.

MY DEAR MR. POSTMASTER GENERAL: The committee has instructed me to advise you that the representatives of all of the parties involved in the controversies desire to submit these controversies to you as arbiter and agree to be bound by your decision.

Faithfully yours,

———— ————.

On the same day there was submitted a report with an agreement, according to the statement, on 7 of the routes but a controversy as to the 5 remaining. The operators agreed as to 7 of the routes and made that recommendation to the Postmaster General. At the end of their statement they said:

The operators interested in the routes under controversy have all agreed to submit the issues to the Postmaster General, in the hope that a satisfactory solution may be reached. They request that an opportunity be afforded them to present their claims for consideration on the respective routes, in such manner and at such time as may be designated by the Postmaster General.

I shall ask here to have inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks a copy of the report made by Mr. MacCracken, together with the names of the representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 4, 1930.

Hon. WALTER F. BROWN,
Postmaster General of the United States,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. POSTMASTER GENERAL: Pursuant to your invitation, representatives of the air-transport operators met on Monday, May 19, to formulate recommendations for the extension of the Air Mail Service, with a view to the participation in this service of air transport operators now engaged exclusively in passenger and express service.

This committee has held numerous sessions during the time which has intervened since the first meeting, and a list of those in attendance at one or more of these sessions is hereto attached.

The committee also submits with this report a map indicating its recommendations, as well as the problems which remain unsolved.

The committee has made a study of 12 routes, and has agreed upon recommendations as to 7 of these; while as to the remaining 5 there are still some matters in controversy.

RECOMMENDATIONS

No. 3. Omaha to St. Paul and Winnipeg: Northwest Airways (now flying entire route).

No. 4. Albany to Boston: Aviation Corporation.

No. 7. Denver to Kansas City: United States Air Lines (now flying route).

No. 8. Pueblo to Fort Worth and Dallas: Western Air Express (now flying route).

No. 9. Pueblo to El Paso: Western Air Express (now flying route).

No. 11. Great Falls to Lethbridge: National Parks Airways (only party in interest).

No. 12. Seattle to Vancouver: United, first schedule; Varney Air Lines, second schedule.

ROUTES WHICH ARE STILL THE SUBJECT OF NEGOTIATION

No. 5. Pittsburgh to Washington and Norfolk: Final terms not yet arranged.

No. 1. Los Angeles, San Diego, El Paso, Dallas to Atlanta.

No. 6. Dallas to Louisville: Atlanta to Dallas, Eastern Air Transport and Delta Air Service; Louisville to Dallas, Aviation Corporation and Curtiss Flying Service; Los Angeles, San Diego, El Paso to Dallas, Western Air Express and Aviation Corporation.

No. 2. Los Angeles, Albuquerque, Kansas City, St. Louis, Columbus, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and New York.

No. 10. Amarillo, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, and St. Louis (Tulsa cut-off): Kansas City to New York, Transcontinental Air Transport and Pittsburgh Aviation Industries; Los Angeles to Kansas City, Amarillo, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, to St. Louis, Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transport; Amarillo, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, and St. Louis cut-off, Western Air Express, Southwest Air Fast Express, Transcontinental Air Transport.

Because of the line of N.A.T. (United) south of Kansas City seemed to stand in the way of a proper solution of several of our problems, United has suggested that it abandon its line south of Kansas City and take over some other line of equal value; such line to be one that might be properly operated in connection with United's other lines. This would permit the clearing of the mid-transcontinental of its N.A.T. contract between Wichita and Kansas City, and would open the N.A.T. line south of Kansas City and Wichita for proper disposition in harmony with the Postmaster General's ideas. The suggestion has been made that Southwest Air Fast Express might operate the service on C.A.M. 3 south of Wichita and south of Kansas City.

The operators interested in the routes under controversy have all agreed to submit the issues to the Postmaster General, in the hope that a satisfactory solution may be reached. They request that an opportunity be afforded them to present their claims for consideration on the respective routes, in such manner and at such time as may be designated by the Postmaster General.

Respectfully submitted.

————— ————, Chairman.

United: Messrs. Henderson, Johnson, Wheat, Ireland, and Murray.
Transcontinental Air Transport: Messrs. Sheaffer, Cuthell, Maddux, and Furlow.
Western Air Express: Messrs. Hanshue and Woolley.
Northwest Airways: Messrs. Brittin and Smith.
National Parks Airways: Mr. Frank.
Varney Air Lines: Mr. Mueller.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, it will be noted that certain recommendations were made and certain claimants were named in this report. There appears on page 4613 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 15, 1934, a detailed report from the Post Office Department showing that the recommendations were carried out in practically every instance and the reasons for the departure in the several instances where they were not carried out as shown by the evidence. Not only did they meet, not only did they agree as to the seven routes, but they threshed out the others, and in some of the instances after the date when Postmaster General

Brown had sworn before the committee that the matter was closed Postmaster General Brown himself was acting as the arbitrator, a kind arbitrator, deciding the amount of money that should be paid by one company to another in order that they might agree and get a route without any competition between them.

Now, let us see about that. Remembering that Postmaster General Brown says nothing else was done after June 4, I call attention again to the memorandum of D. M. Sheaffer dated June 9, 1930. I read the last paragraph. This was 5 days after the time Mr. Brown says that he had stopped. I quote from Mr. Sheaffer's memorandum made to his committee:

Last Thursday the operators made their report to the Postmaster General and asked that he review the unsettled matters with the operators involved to the end that a satisfactory arrangement may be obtained, and it was decided to abide by the decision of the Postmaster General with regard to the assignment of the routes in controversy.

What did that mean? It meant that he was to assign them and they were to agree to it. That would not have been necessary if there was going to be real, honest, genuine competitive bidding. He had to make no agreement with them as to whom they should be assigned. He knew that, and every other sane and intelligent man knows that when a report like that is made, it means that the Postmaster General was to decide these controversies where they did not agree, and to award the contract to the company he saw fit after they had arbitrated it and had been heard.

Remember also that according to a memorandum which I have previously put in, on July 15, 1930, more than a month after the date when Mr. Brown said the matter was closed, Sheaffer was reporting to his directors that, under the direction of Brown, they were arranging a consolidation with the Western Air Express and the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries, and that if this were done, the Postmaster General could and would award them the contract. Mr. Coburn, who had been the president of the Aviation Corporation, on page 1674, swore that the matters in dispute were left for the decision of the Postmaster General.

About that time, July 9, here is another evidence as to whether or not Mr. Brown was active and whether he had told them to wait. Halliburton had been insisting that he was going to bid if they did not give him a contract. Not only had he done it then, but the evidence in the record shows that the statement is that he was blocking the Watres bill in the House until he could get an agreement that he would get a contract. After the Watres bill was passed, he continued, as they say, to claim everything. Now let me read the telegram of Halliburton to MacCracken, found in Mr. MacCracken's files, dated July 9, 1930, pages 2449 and 2450 of the record. Here is the telegram:

When I and the other operators agreed that the Postmaster General should arbitrate controversy regarding air-mail routes, we believed that he would act under whatever authority the Watres bill gave him without unwarranted delay. If the Watres bill does not give him the authority, then he should act under whatever authority he had prior to the enactment of the Watres bill. Unless he takes immediate action under the Watres bill and grants to the air passenger lines air-mail contracts in accordance with the provisions thereof, then I shall be compelled to withdraw my consent to the Postmaster General to arbitrate the air-mail routes and demand not only the privilege of bidding on any additional route, but shall take the necessary legal action to require the canceling of any extension or route certificate that has been granted under the Watres bill. As chairman of the committee representing the operators, you will please advise me collect what action I can expect the Postmaster General to take.

(Signed) ERLE P. HALLIBURTON.

That is July 9. See what Mr. MacCracken replied:

MR. ERLE P. HALLIBURTON,
Berkeley Square, Los Angeles, Calif.:
Postmaster General is working on settlements of air-mail controversies.

More than a month after the date when Postmaster General Brown says it was all over. I read further:

States he is making progress but has not yet reached solution. Watres bill in effect repealed prior legislation, and he cannot act under that any more than he could under Watres bill that did not pass. Under circumstances believe it advisable you exercise patience in this situation.

Remember that while the Watres bill was up Larry King was here representing Halliburton. Ted Clarke wired Halliburton, according to page 1515, as follows:

Cannot say how much. Therefore time to bargain is before vote. Erle can phone me 7, your time.

At that time the Watres bill was pending. King says that a man had told the House committee:

This bill will never pass unless Halliburton gets a good contract; he has powerful backing both in the Senate and in the House, and if he chooses he can give us a great deal of trouble.

I read this to show how it led up to paying him $1,400,000 for his property to get him out of the picture.

Halliburton was represented in the May conference by Larry King and Ted Clark—Ted Clark, by the way, had previously been the private secretary to President Coolidge and former secretary to the late Senator Lodge.

Halliburton was also represented by Mr. W. B. Mayo. Mr. Mayo and Secretary Hurley both, according to the evidence of Mr. King found in the record, volume 4, page 1520, took up the Halliburton matter with President Hoover.

On June 30, 1930, Halliburton sent the following telegram to D. M. Sheaffer:

I do not consider that I have anything to gain by waiting until Congress adjourns. The Post Office Department should have acted on this matter more than a year ago, and if I could have secured the cooperation of those parties who now want me to cooperate, this matter could have long since been adjusted. Will be possible for me to leave here tomorrow afternoon for Washington, and unless I have definite assurance that there is to be an immediate adjustment I shall demand the right to bid on all extensions and new routes and am in better position to do this than anyone else in the business.

He was stating the truth. He was in a position to bid. He had the planes. He had been engaged in the service.

On August 4, 1930, a telegram came to Halliburton from W. G. Skelly, national Republican committeeman from Oklahoma, reading as follows:

After thorough analysis of the air-mail situation I am firmly convinced that it would be for best interests of you and your associates in Safeway to work out consolidation with T.A.T.

Remember, Halliburton had been insisting that he would not do it. August 4, 1930, Halliburton wired Skelly:

I do not intend to merge with or become connected with or associated with T.A.T., who prostituted names of Lindbergh and Earhart to general public and then asked the taxpayers to pay for such prostitution. If you care to sell your stock to T.A.T., I have no objection.

ERLE P. HALLIBURTON.

On August 5, 1930, Halliburton wired Skelly as follows:

Did not intend sarcasm by my wire. P.M.G. will not permit any of the operators to merge with Safeway. Northwest Air Lines and others have been warned if they interfere with plans of P.M.G. they will get no extensions of route certificates.

Remember, the Postmaster General had stated that no route certificates would be granted until an agreement was reached.

In volume 4 of the hearings, at page 1494, Mr. Halliburton tells why he merged. I read from the evidence:

The CHAIRMAN. Were you demanding the right to bid?
Mr. HALLIBURTON. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. And was that right ever accorded?
Mr. HALLIBURTON. Well, I was advised, after considering the legality of the advertisements and everything, that to bid could only delay the thing and would most likely not secure a contract, and therefore was forced into a merger with the Aviation Corporation.

That does not sound like he merged because he wanted to do so.

At page 1491 of the hearings occurred the following:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you not go to see Mr. Brown himself about that very subject, and did you not go to see Mr. Glover, and did not Mr. Glover tell you finally, "I will ruin you if it is the last act of my life; you have tried to buck this thing all the way through, and you are not going to do it"?
Mr. HALLIBURTON. You know, I had so many conferences with Mr. Glover, several with Mr. Brown, in which at no time could we agree. I wouldn't know just when that statement was made, but I know that it was made.

The picture is there. The evidence has already been placed in the record that Mr. Glover had better watch his step because he was favoring the N.A.T. too much. Paul Henderson was the representative of that company and the representative of T.A.T., and here is Halliburton, who had been insisting on the right to bid in order that he might assert this right, and who is told by Mr. Glover:

I will ruin you if it is the last act of my life; you have tried to buck this thing all the way through, and you are not going to do it.

Does that sound like a voluntary merger on the part of Mr. Halliburton?

Let us see what else he said:

The CHAIRMAN. Did or did not Mr. Glover make that statement to you at any time?

Mr. HALLIBURTON. Yes; he made that statement to me.

The CHAIRMAN. What reason did they give to you for insisting you sell out to the American Airways?

Mr. HALLIBURTON. They did not give me any reason. They alleged I was offering to carry the mail too cheap, using that as an excuse. Outside of that reason I don't know of any particular reason.

The CHAIRMAN. You were financially able to back up any mail aviation company you desired to operate, were you not?

Mr. HALLIBURTON. I would say that I was; yes; because I never have attempted anything that I first did not have finances to carry through.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have an income at that time from your general business that would justify you in operating an aviation company even at a loss if you desired to do so?

Mr. HALLIBURTON. My income at that time was about three or four thousand dollars a day.

Here was a man able to bid and offering to bid. He was told that he would be despoiled if he attempted to "buck" their plan, and the excuse of those guardians of the public money, those "men of vision", was that he was offering to let the Government pay him too little money for his services to the Government. "Men of vision"! Let that be explained in the propaganda that is daily going out.

Mr. Halliburton found out where he was after the bids were advertised. A very interesting letter appears from Mr. Halliburton at page 1499 of the record of the hearings, addressed to Hon. Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War, and dated August 5, 1930, 3 days after the bids were called for. This is a very careful analysis of those bids. It points out their illegalities. It points out the same illegalities that the attorney for the Transcontinental and Western pointed out in his letter. Mr. Halliburton calls the attention of Mr. Hurley to the fact that if they are not careful about this matter it is going to be a blot on the administration. He called attention in his closing paragraph in these words:

If these contracts are awarded, as above outlined, I am quite certain it cannot help but result in an investigation of the Post Office Department, and due to the connection of Herbert Hoover, Jr., with the Western Air Express and the part which they will play in connection with the operation, I am sure it will result in serious criticism of Mr. Hoover himself, and for that reason, as well as personal reasons, I am passing this information on to you for whatever purpose you may care to use it.

Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the entire letter of Mr. Halliburton to Secretary of War Hurley, to which I have just referred.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 5, 1930.

Hon. PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Secretary of War, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I regret that I must burden you further with matters concerning a Department with which you have no connection, but since I feel that I can depend upon you and you have signified that you were willing to help me in any matters which I might have here in Washington I am availing myself of this opportunity.

As you perhaps know, the Post Office Department has issued advertisements calling for bids on two transcontinental air-mail routes; one route extending from New York to Los Angeles, via St. Louis, Amarillo, Tex., and such other stops as may be designated, and the second route from Atlanta, Ga., via Fort Worth, Dallas, and El Paso, Tex., to Los Angeles, and such other points as the Postmaster General may designate.

It seems to me that in several particulars each of these advertisements violates the basic principle and spirit of the new air mail law, and clearly will have the effect of stifling all competition in connection with the extension of the Air Mail Service.

Certain provisions have been inserted in these advertisements which entirely eliminate all the air passenger lines and make only present air-mail contractors eligible as bidders over these routes, notwithstanding the fact that certain air passenger lines have been operating over these routes for over a year and have spent thousands of dollars in developing a passenger business.

Section 4 of the act approved April 29, 1930, clearly contemplated two separate procedures in awarding of contracts for the transportation of mail by air, the first procedure requiring open bidding as to routes carrying more than 225 pounds of mail per trip and the second being limited to routes carrying less than that poundage per trip. As to the second class of routes, requirement of the law is that the contract shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder who has been operating on a fixed daily schedule for not less than 6 months over a distance of not less than 250 miles. There is no such requirement as to the first class of routes.

The Post Office Department in its present advertisements has combined both provisions into a single bid, thus bringing into operation the provision that no one shall bid who has not been operating on a fixed daily schedule for more than 6 months and stretching this requirement to 6 months night flying, which eliminates all of the passenger lines which Congress intended should be benefited from this new piece of legislation.

Further, there is a provision in these advertisements permitting joint bids by two companies and providing that "the experience of either company or both will be acceptable insofar as the requirements of the advertisements are concerned." In other words, under the provision of the advertisements it will be possible for a company to obtain a contract which has been operating for less than 6 months, although the law specifically requires for the less than 225-pound routes that they must have been operating for more than 6 months. Here again this appears to be, on its face, a very clear violation of the law. Another and still more serious provision of both of these advertisements is the one to the effect that "in order for a bidder to qualify he shall submit evidence indicating he has had at least 6 months' active experience in operating aircraft on regular night schedules over a route 250 miles or more in length." This, of course, automatically eliminates practically every operator outside of those who are already air-mail contractors and actually eliminates the very class of operators which, it was generally expected, the new air mail law was aimed to help, namely, the companies which have been engaged in passenger carrying, and is contrary to the testimony of Postmaster General Brown before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; for, of course, Mr. Brown knew that none of the passenger carriers have been flying at night.

As I see it, the effect of these advertisements is to automatically eliminate the Southwest Air Fast Express and such other lines as have been established with a view to developing the passenger business.

The Postmaster General attaches to the advertisement, and makes it a part thereof, a formula which he calls "variable", which under certain conditions are additions to be paid for night flying, etc. Under this formula for paying contractors it is possible for the contractor to receive $1.61 per mile, while under the law the maximum is $1.25 per mile, which, to me, is clearly a violation of the act of Congress.

Certain small air-mail contractors, of which there are three, have been instructed that if they combine with the Southwest Air Fast Express, Inc., or any other air passenger line for the purpose of bidding on these two routes, that the Post Office Department will not issue to them a route certificate when their contracts expire and that they will be granted no extensions under the Watres bill until after the contracts have been awarded on these two routes. It is generally known in the industry that the Post Office Department intends that Western Air Express and Transcontinental Air Transport are to organize an operating company for the transportation of mail over the central route from New York via St. Louis to Los Angeles and that a subsidiary company of the Aviation Corporation is to be awarded a contract over the southern route from Atlanta, Ga., via Fort Worth, Dallas, and Los Angeles.

Why the Transcontinental Air Transport, which prostituted the names of Lindbergh and Earhart to the general public and then expected the taxpayers to pay for this prostitution, should be favored by the Postmaster General is beyond my understanding of all that is just.

If these contracts are awarded, as above outlined, I am quite certain it cannot help but result in an investigation of the Post Office Department, and due to the connection of Herbert Hoover, Jr., with the Western Air Express and the part which they will play in connection with the operation, I am sure it will result in serious criticism of Mr. Hoover himself, and for that reason, as well as personal reasons, I am passing this information on to you for whatever purpose you may care to use it.

With kindest personal regards,

Respectfully,

ERLE P. HALLIBURTON.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Halliburton called attention to the fact that they had added night flying to the provision, and that they had combined a 40-cent rate with a $1.25 rate contrary to law. I also have a letter from the attorney of the Transcontinental & Western, passed to his own officers, stating that it was his judgment they could not combine the $1.25 bid with the 40-cent bid because it was contrary to law and would deprive some of bidding who otherwise could enter the picture. In other words, under the law as it is written they could have called for bids for $1.25 on these lines from any company with or without 6 months' experience, but the 6 months' experience clause was applied to those who bid on the 40-cent basis. When the advertisements were issued, the bids were lumped together, so it added an additional restrictive clause, and it was this to which Mr. Halliburton called attention and to which the attorney for the Transcontinental & Western referred and stated that it might force the Comptroller General to reduce their bid to 40 cents per airplane-mile. Not only that, but they added a night flying provision which the Comptroller General held was illegal.

Let us see what Mr. Halliburton did after they threatened to ruin him. Let us see what he did after he pointed out to Mr. Hurley the matters to which I referred, and let us find out how much better Mr. Halliburton was treated with the representation he had than the other operators who were forced out of the picture.

The reason is not far to seek. Senators will recall the names I have stated as those representing Mr. Halliburton, and interceding in his behalf. He had friends at court. He had his letter in the hands of the Secretary of War. He had as his representative a man who had served as the secretary to Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge and as the secretary to President Coolidge. He had representing him Mr. W. B. Mayo, who is known to have had somewhat of a prominent place at that time. He had others whose names I have mentioned; and threats were being made to blot him out from the picture. He protested to the last minute.

What did he do?

On August 23, 1930—note the date, August 23, 1930—for the first time, Halliburton gave his option to the American Airways on the Safeways operation for $1,400,000. Note the price. Halliburton testified under oath that he believed the assets of the company were worth at that time from seven hundred to eight hundred thousand dollars; but the company which bought it did not think that. They had the property appraised by their own appraisers and fixed the value at $569,000, and they paid Halliburton $1,400,000 2 days before the bids were opened. In order, however, to appraise this property at $569,000 the company appraised the hangar at $205,000, which is shown on page 2966 of the record, although Halliburton testified under oath as to its value, saying, "We paid something over $100,000, about $150,000, for the hangar."

This property bought by the American Airways was actually sold to the Western Air Express for $284,000. If that was the actual value of the property, the overpayment to Halliburton to remove him from the picture was $1,116,000. Who will pay that? The company that pays it is the one that got the contract; and that company that year, in 1930, made enough to pay it off. My recollection is that the Western Air Express that year—I shall have the figures presently—made over a million dollars.

What happened then?

The American Airways made a contract with Halliburton for the purchase. Let us see how that happened.

The American Airways was the Aviation Corporation of Delaware. It was the company to which had been allotted the southern transcontinental route through Dallas. The Western Air Express and the T.A.T. were the two companies that had been allotted the middle transcontinental route. The American Airways permitted Halliburton to put in a bid on a part of the southern transcontinental route with one of their companies; but before they let him put in this bid they had him sign on the dotted line that if he got the contract it would be turned over to the American Airways if they wanted it, and, of course, they wanted it. He and the other company got the contract, and it immediately went to the Aviation Corporation of Delaware.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Were the circumstances which the Senator has just described in any degree different from those which existed in the case of the air-mail contract for the route from Cheyenne to Pueblo which was canceled by Postmaster General New?

Mr. BLACK. Not a particle, except that this was probably worse. Postmaster General New did the very thing which the critics of this cancelation would herald as "un-American" when he canceled a contract like that.

These parties made the agreement, and I read from a part of that agreement. I will not read it all, but I will read one paragraph:

> Whereas Safeways is anxious to bid upon one of the said transcontinental mail routes—
>
> And it was—
> and to qualify itself as a bidder, therefor;
> Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises—

And so forth, and so forth.

In other words, Safeways had wanted to bid. Halliburton had been insisting that he should bid before the bill was passed. He demanded a promise from Glover, and, according to his representative, he got it. According to the statement of his representative, sworn to in the evidence, Halliburton had an agreement before the bill was ever passed, that he would be given a chance to bid, and the other operators bought him off. He stated time and time again that he was not only ready but anxious and willing to bid. He declared under oath; he placed it in his telegram; he put it in his letters; and the excuse given to him for not permitting him to do so was that he wanted to carry the mail too cheaply.

Think of that! An agent of the United States, a representative holding the high and exalted position of a Cabinet officer, telling a man who is seeking to do business with the Government, "I will not let you do business with the Government because you will not let me force the Government to pay you enough out of the hard-earned dollars and dimes of the American taxpayer.

A man of vision! Let that issue be taken to the country. If there is a "brain trust" to be formed by any party, I am sure that if its name is proper, that "brain trust" will never permit that issue to be put into the faces of the American people. Rest assured that the American people are honest. They do not believe in fraud, and they will not tolerate it, even to support the failing fortunes of a discredited party.

Now let us see why the American Airways bought out these people. I am not going to stop at that. I am going to refer to the sworn evidence of why they did it. There is no reason not to have the sworn evidence. It is in the record. I read from the evidence of Mr. Coburn, who was president of the Aviation Corporation when they bought out Mr. Halliburton. What did he say at page 1692?

> The CHAIRMAN. You were buying it because you had been told to; you were not buying it because of what they had done for the air?
> Mr. COBURN. That is true, but I wanted to find out whether they had done a good job.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. The impelling motive for buying it was because you were told to by the Postmaster General.
>
> Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; and I had to come back to the executive committee and tell them this was the situation.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. You did not impress your executive committee with the idea of what it was worth; you impressed them with the fact that the Postmaster General had told you to buy?
>
> Mr. COBURN. The Postmaster General is always very careful to say, "I am not trying to tell you, Mr. Coburn, what to do with the assets of your company."
>
> The CHAIRMAN. He always told you, didn't he, he wanted you to take care of somebody?
>
> Mr. COBURN. I understood perfectly that it was necessary preliminary that Mr. Halliburton should be traded into a position that should be satisfactory to him.

Why, of course, no company with an officer with a thimbleful of brains would have bought out a company and paid $1,400,000 for it and then sold its assets for $269,000, unless they had to.

Let us see the next one. Let us see what Mr. Hinshaw declared under oath about the Halliburton purchase at page 1585. He was also the representative of the Aviation Corporation:

American Airways proceeded to try to deal with those people.

The CHAIRMAN. To buy them out?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes, sir; and they did buy them out, and we were given to understand that there would not be, until the situation was cleaned up, and these people taken care of—that there would not be any advertisements for these two transcontinental routes. That is correct, what you said, sir.

There is the picture. They had already sworn that no certificate would be issued until they took care of these people. I have read that into the RECORD. Now here come the president of the company and the assistant to the president with their sworn statement that they bought out this company, not because they wanted it but because they had to remove it from the picture.

Why did they have to remove it from the picture? There was only one reason. Halliburton threatened to bid. He wanted to carry the mail too cheaply. It was a terrible crime of which Halliburton was guilty—so terrible that he was told by Mr. Glover that if he did not stop trying to buck them, he—Glover—would destroy him.

I desire to state here and now that there is no reason for anybody to get up on this floor, now or hereafter, and say that Mr. Glover had not been given a chance to testify. He was given the chance to testify, and it was stated in an open meeting of the committee when he was in the room that if he desired to testify the way was open to him.

Now, let us see what else happened in that trade. That was not all of it. It was necessary to get somebody else out, to work it all together. Here were two routes. The contract of August 23, 1930, provided that the Western Air Express agreed to buy 20,000 shares of its own stock from the American Airways for $1,115,000, or $55.77 per share. The last sale of that stock before August 23, 1930, had been at $34.50 per share; and the Western Air Express agreed in that contract to buy this stock at $55 per share.

Why did they do that? In a memorandum which was restored to the committee after it had been removed from Mr. MacCracken's files, and which is in this record, or in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mr. Hanshue explained why they did it. It was because they were forced to do it. He explains it in the memorandum.

In other words, the company bought 20,000 shares of its own stock for $1,115,000, being $425,000 more than the 20,000 shares would have brought at the price realized at the last sale of that stock. This contract also agreed to let the Postmaster General arbitrate the value of the Los Angeles property of the Western Air Express between the amounts of $300,000 and $500,000; and the Postmaster General did arbitrate it, and raised it from $300,000 to $406,000. That was long after the Postmaster General had sworn that it was all over so far as he was concerned.

Mr. President, that was not the only company they needed to get out. There was another, a little company down there, which did not have as much political influence as this one. It did not have these gentlemen representing it, but it was a pioneer company, and it was threatening to bid. It wanted a contract. I refer to the Delta Air Service. It was in the way. It was about to block the award of these contracts to the lines which the Postmaster General had selected, to wit, the Aviation Corporation of Delaware for the southern lines, and the Transcontinental & Western for the middle lines.

The Delta Air Service was a claimant to this line, according to the MacCracken report. Let us see what happened to them. Let us see whether they sold out because they wanted to sell. This is what their man, Mr. Woolman, said (p. 1605):

The CHAIRMAN. Did Mr. Grosvenor tell you anything about what Postmaster General Brown had told him?

Mr. WOOLMAN. I do not recall that he did, except that we were to get together.

The CHAIRMAN. You were to get together?

Mr. WOOLMAN. On a satisfactory basis to American Airways, ourselves, and the Post Office Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Brown had told you that, had he not?

Mr. WOOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. When Mr. Brown told you you would have to get together, what did he say as to what way you would have to get together?

Mr. WOOLMAN. I do not think that he stated exactly how we would have to get together at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he say to get together on carrying the mail, or that you would have to sell out and they would have to buy you, or what?

Mr. WOOLMAN. I think he left that open, naturally, but it was understood, in discussing the matter with him later, that we would probably—we told him it seemed we would have to sell out to him and we were not entirely satisfied with the figure, and he assured us American Airways would do the right thing; he was sure.

The CHAIRMAN. That was Postmaster General Brown?

Mr. WOOLMAN. Yes, sir.

What business was it of the Postmaster General to be telling a pioneer operator, who had been operating a line, the first line that was ever operated on the way he flew, to sell out to the American Airways? Who can defend any such conduct without a blush coming on his face? What business was it of the Postmaster General?

Let us see what Mr. Hinshaw said they told him to do about that company, remembering it was threatenig to bid. Pages 1586 and 1587:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you not keep Mr. Woolman informed as to Mr. Brown's attitude?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; because we had some difficulty in arriving at a price with Mr. Woolman for his service.

The CHAIRMAN. Why was it necessary for Mr. Brown to be consulted about that?

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Brown laid down the premise that we had to buy them out, and I rather suspect, when they found they had to be bought out, they put up their price.

Who was it who said that? It was the paid representative of the American Airways in the transaction who stated that under oath.

Now I read what Mr. Coburn said, as appears on page 1683:

The CHAIRMAN. Who told you to buy them out?

Mr. COBURN. Oh, the Postmaster General had put us through that territory and it was up to us to make a satisfactory arrangement with them.

Why was that? Let us see what happened to this company which did not have the political influence which Mr. Halliburton had behind him. Remember, Mr. Halliburton sold his property for $1,400,000, and the assets were later sold to the Western Air Express for $269,000. I read from page 1607:

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the question is, Did you want to continue to operate a line?

Mr. WOOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Or did you want to sell?

Mr. WOOLMAN. I preferred to operate.

The CHAIRMAN. You had been in that business how long?

Mr. WOOLMAN. In airplane operations since 1925.

The CHAIRMAN. And you sold because you had to, did you not, Mr. Woolman?

Mr. WOOLMAN. Well, it was that or else.

The CHAIRMAN. What percentage of what your company cost you did they finally pay you?

Mr. WOOLMAN. I think we received approximately 50 cents on the dollar for the money we had spent in our operations.

The CHAIRMAN. And that was in the development of that route?

Mr. WOOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Therefore, it will be seen that the Postmaster General was directing them how to act, whom to buy from, whom to remove from the picture.

WINNIPEG EXTENSION

Remember, the Winnipeg route had been assigned to the Northwest Airways by the agreement, and it was shortly after this that the Postmaster General sent to the Comptroller General a request for an opinion in order to know whether or not they could let that route by extension.

The MacCracken report, which it is said was abandoned, assigned that route to Northwest Airways, by agreement, and on July 9, 1930, the Postmaster General, carrying it out, wrote to the Comptroller General, saying:

The Northwest Airways, Inc., has indicated to the Department its desire to have its route extended under the provisions of this bill to Winnipeg and to Omaha, and the Department is desirous of so doing.

Of course it was desirous of so doing. Had they not agreed upon it? Was that not a part of the pie that was to be allotted to the Northwest Airways? Was not that a part of the spoils?

On July 24 the Comptroller General wrote a letter declining to hold that extension legal. I shall not go into the merits of that.

On August 2, 1930, there were advertisements for bids on the two transcontinental routes, on the ninth day after the Winnipeg decision, immediately after the Winnipeg decision. They had tried to see whether or not they could get that decision from the Comptroller General, trying to extend lines all across the country, by extension, under paragraph 6, and the Comptroller General would not let them do it.

What did they then do? Mr. Hinshaw said that when the Winnipeg decision came out, Postmaster General Brown almost had a stroke of apoplexy. Why? Because it was interrupting the plans. So, 9 days thereafter, they called for advertisements on the two routes as a formality.

Note this. Let us see who was controlling and putting those advertisements out. The Postmaster General was supposed to have the power, but on August 1 we find a telegram from Hinshaw, the representative of the Aviation Corporation, to Wadsworth, superintendent of mails, saying (p. 2340):

We are satisfied to have advertisements published tomorrow.

Why was it necessary for the Aviation Corporation to give its consent to have an advertisement published for the southern route?

On the next day, when the Aviation Corporation had consented, the advertisements went out, on August 2.

It will be remembered that Mr. Hinshaw has stated, as shown on pages 1591 and 1592, that there was an agreement about bidding, and it will also be recalled that Mr. Halliburton had pointed out that this advertisement called for restrictions which the law did not permit.

Not only that, but in a letter of November 17, 1930, by Mr. Cuthell, the attorney for the Transcontinental & Western, we find this statement about this particular advertisement, backing up exactly what Halliburton had stated:

It may be that the Comptroller intends to deal generally with their contracts—

Speaking of aviation—

as well as ours, in which event there would be some common ground for presentation of argument. On the other hand, it may very well be that the Comptroller will disapprove of this particular payment on a special ground that exists in the Aviation Corporation case which does not exist in ours.

You will recall that after the contract was awarded on the 40-cent basis—

This is not some outsider talking; this is the attorney for the Transcontinental & Western:

You will recall that after the contract was awarded on the 40-cent basis and before flying had actually commenced, and of course before the volume of mail increased over the 225 pounds per trip, there was an amended award by which the Government agreed to pay about 85 cents. I am at a loss to find any legal justification for the amended award.

My own feeling (which is not based on any intimation from official source) is that the Comptroller may sustain the Aviation Corporation's contract as well as our own as a valid 40-cent contract—

That man knew what the law was. He was their lawyer. As a matter of fact, it never should have been sustained for a penny over 40 cents, even if it could be sustained at all—but hold both illegal in respect of payments under the $1.25 provision, because there are no statutory qualification tests in respect of proposals under the $1.25 basis where there are a few in respect of the 40-cent basis. There is no doubt at all that several companies which would have been qualified under the $1.25 basis, such as Curtiss-Wright Flying Service, were prohibited from bidding because of the inclusion of the statutory tests under the 40-cent arrangement as well as by the night-flying regulation.

Conceived in fraud? Every imaginable restriction was imposed so that the attorney for one of the companies is compelled to write to one of his associates that the thing is illegal. Yet this is the attorney for the company which has been sending out this propaganda, the attorney for the company in which Mr. Rickenbacker is an officer.

Now we find that they wanted to impose some restrictions, so we find here a photostatic copy of the first suggestion as to putting in night flying.

Now, who would Senators suppose inserted this restrictive clause? Naturally, Senators might think it would be the Postmaster General. It might be thought, at least, it was one of his subordinates, but it was not. Here is the photostatic copy showing who it was. It was Mr. William P. MacCracken—not an officer of the United States, but a paid representative of the very companies who wanted to restrict other companies from bidding. If there is any question about it, here are the photostatic copies as proof. No one has denied them. The Comptroller General held it illegal. Everybody else who has known anything about it has known it to be illegal; but it stood there.

It was 2 days before the day these bids were finally opened that Halliburton, the Western Air Express, and the Aviation Corporation made their agreement. Therefore, Halliburton could not bid. Of course, when the Aviation Corporation and the Western Air Express agreed with each other, they did not bid against each other. They were adjusting the differences between them as to the property that would be bought.

At this time I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of McMullen against Hoffman, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth United States Reports, page 649, has expressly and unequivocally held that such a combination is a nefarious one. This combination, however, was not only approved by the companies but it was approved by the Post Office Department and by Postmaster General Brown, the man with the vision.

Now let us see what was stated about that bid by a man who knew about as much about what was going on as anybody in Washington. He had been an Assistant Postmaster General. He had been an active Republican for many years. He had been close to the powers that were in control. He was here reprcsenting aviation companies. He knew so much about this bid, and assisted the Transcontinental & Western to such an extent, that after they got their contract they wrote him a letter and thanked him for the services he had rendered to them for obtaining this contract. Here is the letter:

OCTOBER 9, 1930.

DEAR PAUL: Now, that the smoke has cleared away, and T.A.T. and Western Air Express have been awarded a contract and have set up a new operating company, I have a little breathing spell, and I wanted to drop you a note to express our appreciation of your great help in bringing about this conclusion wh.ch was so important to our welfare, as well as the welfare of the aviation industry.

I personally greatly value your assistance and cooperation, and at any time that I can be of assistance to you I hope you will not hesitate to call on me.

With kind regards, etc.

D. M. SHEAFFER.

Now let us see what this man Henderson, whom he thanks for his assistance, said about how that contract was awarded. In volume 7 of the record, pages 3095 and 3096, let me read what Mr. Henderson said about how this particular contract was awarded. I shall read what he said to his board in the report he wrote out, which he said he and the board worked over together, in which he referred to the Postmaster General and what occurred in May 1930:

He then invited all of the operators who were at that moment operating air-mail contracts, as well as those who were seeking Government help for passenger lines, to suggest to him changes in the air-mail map by the addition of two transcontinental lines and other lines not then in existence. He further invited them to try to agree among themselves on which of the operators should operate those new lines which he wished to create.

I continue reading further along in the report. He says:

Although these two biddings took the form of usual Government mail-contract biddings, they were in fact not competitive, since the Postmaster General had dealt with potential bidders to a point where all were eliminated except the successful bidder in each case.

Who said that? The vice president of the United Airways in a report made to his directors, which he said he and the board worked over together. That is how the so-called "competitive-bid" contract was awarded.

I have already called the Senate's attention to the memorandum of Mr. Sheaffer, in which he gave a full statement on this subject; and at this point in my remarks I ask to have printed in the RECORD his memorandum of July 15, 1930.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM COVERING IMPORTANT POINTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF A CONSOLIDATED OPERATION. T.A.T., INC., AND WESTERN AIR EXPRESS, INC., AS PRESENTED IN THE ATTACHED AGREEMENT CONTEMPLATING THE FORMATION OF AN OPERATING COMPANY

To the Executive Committee, T.A.T., Inc.:

Since the early days of organization, in 1928, T.A.T. has endeavored to effect corporate and operating relations with Western Air Express. This was recognized as important by the executives of both companies by reason of the competitive service operated between Los Angeles and San Francisco, and later between Los Angeles and Kansas City.

The airway mileage operated by T.A.T.-Maddox is 2,344 miles, while that of the Western Air Express in competition is 2,228 miles, which includes the service from Amarillo to Tulsa, so that the airway mileage operated is very close.

In the past the difficulties that the executives of T.A.T. encountered were largely due to the fact that Western Air Express enjoy a very profitable air-mail contract between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City, all of which prompted the desires on the part of the Western Air Express to maintain and retain their corporate position and individuality in the air transportation business.

Negotiations pointing to some form of consolidation have been working ever since. With the enactment of the Watres bill—legislation intended to assist passenger-carrying lines as well as to establish a more scientific basis of pay for the carriage of air mail—the present Postmaster General, the Honorable Walter F. Brown, called the operators together early this spring, asking that they endeavor to work out among themselves three transcontinental air lines, namely, the present northern route, a central route via St. Louis, and the southern route via Atlanta and Dallas; these three routes to be operated by independent companies, separately owned and managed, and competitive in service.

For the central transcontinental, New York to Los Angeles-San Francisco, via Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Tulsa, Kansas City-Amarillo, it was the desire of the Post Office Department that this be operated by one company, and as T.A.T. and the Western Air Express were the two important factors operating large mileage on this route it was the Postmaster General's suggestion that these two lines consolidate or in some manner work out an operating arrangement to that end. Other consolidations and rearrangements of air service became very much involved, to the end that the report of the operators to the Postmaster General left very much unsettled, but the operators agreed unanimously that the Postmaster General should act as umpire in settling and working out such rearrangements as might be necessary, to the end that three transcontinental lines would be established, and the operators agreed to abide by his decision.

In view of the fact that the operators were unable to decide among themselves to a full conclusion many of the major problems, the Postmaster General naturally has taken those problems up in their order of importance, the first being that of the central transcontinental.

Early in the year, recognizing the possibilities of economies that might be effected as a result of the consolidation with the Western Air Express, and also recognizing the fact that to secure a transcontinental mail contract it would require some form of consolidation, the executives of T.A.T. again approached the subject with the Western Air Express. These negotiations were carried on for several months, but the demands of the Western Air Express were too exacting, namely: Requesting an exchange of 5 for 1 and a very heavy participation in the outstanding options of T.A.T. This basis of exchange of stock was not felt to be justified, in view of the fact that the book value of the two companies was about 3 to 1 and the cash or quick assets were on about the same basis, as well as other potential factors taken into consideration. Finally these negotiations were terminated, as the Western Air stated they would not be willing to give up the identity of their corporation.

The Postmaster General having indicated that he could and would arrange so that an air-mail contract award would be properly made to the central transcontinental, providing the two companies organized for the operation of the service, T.A.T. got together with the Western Air Express on a plan to form an operating company, on the following basis, namely:

That our physical property on the line or route should be put into a new company at its depreciated value, and any difference in these property accounts should be made up by dollars, on the basis of both companies having a like interest in the new transcontinental company; that a third party, namely, the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, which organization had done a great deal of valuable work in developing a new airline across the State of Pennsylvania, should have an equitable interest.

These negotiations have been carried on in detail in conference with the Postmaster General, and the agreement submitted is the result.

The statement attached presents figures as they relate to the property accounts, etc., of the two companies, namely, T.A.T. and Western Air.

T.A.T. will retain in its accounts its entire miscellaneous organization and corporate expense, the land and property at Monterey, Dodge City, Las Vegas, and Gallup, the land and property at Clovis, N.Mex., less the removable property, and the hangar and passenger station at Waynoka. The property and cash account, after turning in certain property to the new operating company, will approximate $4,800,000. The depreciated value of the property turned in to the new company by T.A.T.-Maddux will be $2,400,000.

The depreciated value of the property of the Western Air Express will be $2,148,000. This is subject to some revision, as the sale value of the land of the Los Angeles Terminal at the time the Western Air Express, Inc., purchased the property is to be determined by the Post Office Department, and this land is to be included at that value. Such adjustments as may be made as a result will to that extent affect the asset value of T.A.T.-Maddux.

T.A.T. today is suffering substantial losses and has been experiencing these losses since it started operations, July 1929; the Western Air Express are also suffering heavy losses on their passenger-carrying lines, but these losses are being largely made up by their mail contract on the Salt Lake route. It is fundamentally important and necessary that T.A.T. secure a mail contract; it is of strategic importance that the transcontinental line be one company; it has been determined that the only satisfactory solution is the one proposed in the attached contract with the Western Air Express, Inc.; and if the mail contract is secured it will be the means of turning our red figures into black.

It is believed that the arrangement proposed, while it seems to exact heavy tolls and contributions on the part of T.A.T., is the best that can be worked out, and, in all, after considering the many potential factors, that it will result most favorably and advantageously to the corporate interests of the Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc.; and under such an operation the new company, operating between New York and San Francisco via the route of Pittsburgh, St. Louis, etc., bids fair to become the most important in volume of traffic and character of operation of any air line in the world.

The attached contract and agreement as between T.A.T. and the Western Air, together with the exhibits, all of which are in sufficient detail, and which have been approved and accepted by the Western Air Express, Inc., are presented for your consideration and action today, with a favorable recommendation.

Respectfully,

CHAIRMAN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

JULY 15, 1930.

Mr. BLACK. On page 1648, Mr. Sheaffer's memorandum said:

These negotiations have been carried on in detail in conference with the Postmaster General, and the agreement submitted is the result.

That is a month and a half after the time when the Postmaster General had testified under oath that this whole thing—the agreement between T.A.T. and Western Air—was called off. Now, let us see how much it was called off. I asked Mr. Sheaffer, on page 1572, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Western Air also wanted you to pay a great deal more for their property than it cost them?

Mr. SHEAFFER. They wanted us to take the property and pay more than a 50-percent basis—than a 47½-percent basis.

The CHAIRMAN. And you reported that fully to Mr. Brown, did you not?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And told him?

Mr. SHEAFFER. I told him——

The CHAIRMAN. And told him each movement you were making and how you were getting along and what it was hanging up on?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You wrote him about it, too, did you not?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Possibly I did.

The CHAIRMAN. You wrote him more than three or four letters?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How many did you write?

Mr. SHEAFFER. I could not tell. I have not the number in mind.

On page 1573, volume 7, is a memorandum for the Honorable Walter F. Brown in which a complaint is made that the Western Air Express wants to increase the value of its land and the T.A.T. does not want to pay it. Then I asked Mr. Sheaffer:

Did you go to see General Brown about the disagreement over the values?

Mr. SHEAFFER. We did.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you present the matter to him to determine what the property was worth?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he arbitrate it for you?

Mr. SHEAFFER. It was very difficult, Mr. Chairman, to get the appraised value of that land.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he arbitrate it for you?

Mr. SHEAFFER. Yes, sir. He set an appraised value of the land through the inspectors of the Post Office Department.

The Postmaster General had the inspectors of the Post Office Department going over the country appraising the value of property between two private companies in order that they might combine and deprive the Government of a competitive bid.

Mr. Hanshue said, on page 2902 and page 2903:

Mr. HANSHUE. We combined before it was advertised.

The CHAIRMAN. Before it was advertised?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And you combined conditionally on getting it, did you not? It was a conditional combination, was it not?

Mr. HANSHUE. No; I think the original agreement with T.A.T. was not conditional. I don't remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean that if you had not gotten that line that this corporation would have stayed organized and that you would have stayed merged with T.A.T.?

Mr. HANSHUE. No; I did not understand your other question—you mean conditionally on securing a mail contract?

The CHAIRMAN. Sure.

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. So that the combination was made conditionally on getting a mail contract, wasn't it?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

On page 2912 I asked Mr. Hanshue this question:

The CHAIRMAN. If anything had been said about—if you had thought it was competitive bidding, you would have gone on and taken your chance—

Listen to this:

on competitive bidding rather than to have combined with a company that you objected to combining with, would you not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You reached the conclusion, did you not, Mr. Hanshue, after a month or two there, and many discussions, that your only chance to get any kind of a contract over your lines was to combine with the T.A.T.?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that is the reason that you combined, and the only reason, is it not? You still objected to it when you did it, did you not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanshue wanted a mail contract. His only chance was to combine.

Senator McCARRAN then asked him, on page 2943:

Senator McCARRAN. So your entering into the agreement with T.A.T was by reason of the rather direct suggestion that you would have to do that, or you would not get a contract; isn't that true?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

Later on—and I quote from his testimony—he responded to questions asked by Senator McCARRAN, as follows:

Senator McCARRAN. Just one or two questions more—the reason you would have to stop operating was, of course, because you could not get a contract. That is true, isn't it?

Mr. HANSHUE. Well, because we could not afford to run the passenger line at a loss.

Senator McCARRAN. You had to have a contract in order to run the line?

Mr. HANSHUE. Had to have a mail contract.

In order to show that fraud and collusion usually run the same course, I wish to read a resolution adopted by the United States Senate in 1834 with reference to an exact combination such as this. The report is dated June 9, 1834, a hundred years ago.

Resolved, That it does appear that an agreement was entered into between two companies of mail contractors, the express object of which was to put down all opposition lines of coaches, and all competition in the transportation of passengers on their respective mail routes. That said agreement was drawn by an officer of the Department, and entered into at his pressing instance, and that it was sanctioned by the Postmaster General; and that such agreement, so sanctioned, is an interference with the honest pursuits of the free citizens of these United States; that it tends to establish an odious and oppressive monopoly, and is an unjust invasion of private rights.

Exactly the same thing. Here is Hanshue swearing that they made him combine; that the Postmaster General forced him to do so. The Senate of the United States, a hundred years ago, expressed its disapproval of such conduct, and I believe that the people of this country are still honest and still opposed to any such pernicious practices.

I call attention to the fact that on page 2946 of the record Mr. Hanshue gave evidence with reference to the agreement made between his company and T.A.T. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, as part of my remarks, certain marked paragraphs in volume 7, pages 2946 and 2947, with reference to this agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From vol. 7, pp. 2946 and 2947]

The CHAIRMAN. Stating that those two companies would bid on those two routes?

Mr. HANSHUE. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Western Air, that was making the bid jointly with Transcontinental, was the same company that you had authority to bid on either or both of those routes in full; that is right, isn't it?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. But you did agree here that the Transcontinental and Western Air jointly would bid, didn't you, on the middle route? That is correct, isn't it?

Mr. HANSHUE. Well, we stated that we were going to bid.

The CHAIRMAN. And this was an agreement, wasn't it—it starts off: "This agreement made and executed this 23d day of August 1930"—you agreed to the terms in his contract, didn't you?

Mr. HANSHUE. Sure.

The CHAIRMAN. And did you not also agree at the same time that a bid would be made on the southern route by the American Airways through its subsidiary—that is correct, isn't it?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes; it says so.

The CHAIRMAN. And didn't you go further and agree there that there were various adjustments that had to be made between the companies in order for those bids to regulate the affairs of the company after the contracts were awarded?

Mr. HANSHUE. Well, we agreed to buy certain equipment from them and to sell them certain equipment.

The CHAIRMAN. And both contracts were entirely contingent, at your suggestion, were they not, upon the Transcontinental obtaining the middle route and the other one obtaining the southern route?

Mr. HANSHUE. Certainly it was all contingent on that.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Hanshue had here a man named Woolley. Mr. Woolley was his representative; he was also a paid representative. He told all about how this happened. He told about Mr. Hanshue calling up over the long distance to his office in California at 3 o'clock in the morning in an effort to determine whether or not he should yield to the coercion by combining with T.A.T. That evidence is most interesting, and I ask at this point to insert in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the evidence of Mr. Woolley, which is found in volume 7, pages 2845 and 2846.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Vol. 7, pp. 2845 and 2846]

Mr. WOOLLEY. Mr. Hanshue had agreed to take certain assets and sell them certain assets on this other line, if it got the contract down there.

Through the information I had I realized how they had been brought to Mr. Hanshue or the other gentlemen concerned. And it constituted a very definite program to eliminate certain independent bidders from bidding on these contracts.

We argued that thing out in the Carlton Hotel until about 3 o'clock in the morning. Mr. MacCracken and Mr. Bishop were present. Mr. MacCracken repeated what other lawyers had told me about what was right and what could not be done, and had discussed it informally with some members, and if the administration wanted it done that way it would be all right, and all sorts of arguments, and I finally told Mr. Hanshue I thought he should fight. He said to fight Brown on this thing would take a million dollars. I said, "You better spend the million than to give them six and one-half million without a fight."

About 3 o'clock in the morning he seemed to be persuaded to my point of view. At that time he said he wanted to telephone the coast. I don't know whom he contacted. He went in the other room. I understand he called Mr. Chandler or Mr. Garland—couldn't get one of them, and got the other.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Mr. Chandler?

Mr. WOOLLEY. The owner of the Los Angeles Times, who was one of the principal supporters of Mr. Hoover in the campaign of 1928. Mr. Garland is the Olympic man, a very wealthy man, delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1928. They are both men of business standing and friends of Mr. Hoover. He called Mr. Talbott, who was on the board of directors.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Mr. Talbott?

Mr. WOOLLEY. Chairman of the board of Richfield Oil Co. He came back after he had been in there awhile and said one of these first two gentlemen he contacted told him not to do anything that would embarrass the President. Of course, these gentlemen came into Western Air Express purely as a matter of pride. They did not care anything about the investment—it was infinitesimal in their holdings—and with their relations with Mr. Hoover, we should do nothing to embarrass the administration, and Mr. Talbott told him I was young and excitable, and you would never get anywhere fighting, you better do what the Postmaster General wants you to do if you are going to get along. * * *

The demands Mr. Hanshue told me of were that he was to buy certain assets and to take off their hands certain Western Air stock that they held, and in turn he was to sell them Western Air's assets on the southern line; and as a further consideration there had existed some contract or other between Pittsburgh Aviation Industries and T.A.T. with regard to sharing of that transcontinental route, if T.A.T. got it. I think it was based on some mileage principle, and when we first heard of that I insisted, and Mr. Hanshue insisted that it should come out of T.A.T.'s share of these holdings, that it was a contract with T.A.T., and Hanshue told me he had been in with Mr. Sheaffer to see Mr. Brown and Mr. Brown insisted that Pittsburgh Aviation would take a smaller portion but that it must come out of the middle. I told him, "You are giving control of your company away"; he was supposed to have a managerial contract that gave Western Air Express the management of the combined line, T. & W. A., for a year, but giving voting control into the hands of these eastern people that had a preconcerted agreement before we ever went into the negotiations at all, and I didn't like it, and he didn't like it, but he seemed to think the Postmaster General would not give him anything if he did not take that.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to read just a little as to whom he called up. He said:

About 3 o'clock in the morning he seemed to be persuaded to my point of view. At that time he said he wanted to telephone the coast. I don't know who he contacted. He went in the other room. I understand he called Mr. Chandler or Mr. Garlland—couldn't get one of them, and got the other.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is Mr. Chandler?

My recollection is, I might state here, that one of the editorials that has been placed in the RECORD is from the Los Angeles Times.

Mr. WOOLLEY. The owner of the Los Angeles Times, who was one of the principal supporters of Mr. Hoover in the campaign of 1928.

Mr. Garlland is the Olympic man, a very wealthy man, a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1928. They are both men of business standing and friends of Mr. Hoover.

This evidence of Mr. Woolley shows that the combination that was made between these two companies was made over the vigorous protest of the Western Air Express, and the testimony of Mr. Hanshue which I have already read shows exactly the same thing.

Mr. Woolley also testified, on pages 2846 and 2847, with reference to the transaction, and I ask unanimous consent to insert that in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Vol. 7, pp. 2846 and 2847]

Mr. WOOLLEY. That was the thing that aroused my feeling of possibly this thing not being right. I went down to the Aviation Corporation about that time, and Mr. Coburn, president of the company, was standing at the door, and Mr. Hinshaw was at his desk inside the door. Mr. Coburn said, "I don't like to be a party to this sort of thing, but I guess we have to do it."

Sometime previous to that Mr. Hinshaw told me he had made a trip to Tulsa with a view to seeing if he could absorb Halliburton; and when he came back he said Halliburton wanted $1,700,000 and it was ridiculous.

At this time I learned that Mr. Coburn, through pressure from the Postmaster General, was to take Mr. Halliburton out for $1,400,000. I said, "That is a 'hell' of a lot for what he has got"; and Hinshaw said, "You are not getting out of it; you fellows have to pay your share." He meant, "You fellows have to buy those assets and take some stock off our hands."

That led me to believe some places, somewhere, this had been agreed to to put us on the spot and partition us and turn us over to these fellows, and not only give them our lines but pay them to take us over.

Mr. BLACK. In order that there may be no doubt about the fact that Mr. Hanshue did say he was forced to consolidate, I call attention to this part of his memorandum which was brought to the United States Senate under subpena to Mr. MacCracken after it had been removed from his files. Says Mr. Hanshue:

The deal for the Aero Corporation was barely completed when we were advised by the Postmaster General that we must sell the Standard Air Lines to Aviation Corporation and combine our Kansas City and San Francisco divisions with T.A.T. This did not set well with our directors, and they advised me to stand "pat" and insist on the Post Office Department giving us mail on our portions of the two transcontinentals. However, after several conferences with the Postmaster General I could see that this could not be done without a battle, which might upset temporarily the whole plan and work a hardship on everyone in the industry, so I consented to make an attempt to merge the properties of the T.A.T. and W.A.E. on the central transcontinental on a 50-50 basis.

He says further:

This feeling was not alleviated any when they were advised that we had to sell the Dallas route for $400,000 and take a $600,000 loss on it.

* * * * * * *

To sum up, the directors are not pleased with the deal given them by the Postmaster General, nor with the merger with T.A.T., whereby they lose their most valuable asset, the Alhambra Airport.

In other words, the Western Air Express was forced to combine with T.A.T. in order to get a contract.

Mr. President, it was about this time that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation horned in. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has already placed in the RECORD the letters and evidence showing their political activities. He has shown that in behalf of that company the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Andrew W. Mellon, reported that he had taken up with the Postmaster General in person at a Cabinet meeting, a contract which this company desired. Two of the Mellons were connected with this company. It was this company which the Postmaster General directed should become a part of this organization. That is made clear by the memorandum to which I refer on page 1648 of the record, if there is anybody who has any question about it, in which it is stated that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, which organization had done a valuable work in developing new air lines, should have an equitable interest. It never had developed any air line. The only air line it had was one to Harrisburg, where they were going so as to have political appropriations made by the Pennsylvania Legislature, and another one to Washington, where they were going to the Department and sitting in on conferences with air-mail operators, when they never had operated any scheduled line in all their history. This company, however, was forced into the picture and became a part of the company.

Right here let me make one suggestion. I heard read in this Chamber a report of the activities of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. It so happens that I have in the files of correspondence a letter revising the statement that was to be made by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries to show how small a part it had taken in political activities, and the report which I heard read was strikingly similar to that which would appear after the revision had been made.

Now let us see how they got in. They threatened to come down to Washington, and they called attention to those who were on their committee. Let us see who was on that committee which they threatened would come to Washington. From the record, volume 4, page 1569, I read this statement:

Other alternative is for committee—Humphrey, Mellon, and Monro, of our executive committee—to go with George to see Brown and present to him our claim to above 10-percent arrangement.

That is the way the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries got in. It was needed. Of course it claimed, as was shown by the Senator from Arkansas in his remarks, that it should have credit for the airports and the air developments that had been made by public money. This company took the position that it was just as much entitled to credit for money which had been spent by the State as though the company had expended it itself. It showed how active the company had been in securing the appropriation after one of the Messrs. Mellon had called up and made the engagement for them.

In order to show the influence of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries with Mr. Brown, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this point evidence from page 1659, volume 4. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the extracts from the evidence of Mr. Coburn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Vol. 4, p. 1659]

The CHAIRMAN. You knew about the Ball route being called off by the Postmaster General?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How was that done?

Mr. COBURN. Well, it was testified here yesterday as to the circumstances under which we started negotiations with Mr. Ball. I had forgotten those. But remember, having that option agreement with Mr. Ball, the matter rested until I was told by—it must have been by the Postmaster General—that the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation was going to work out a trade, if they could, with Mr. Ball, and it would please the Postmaster General if such trade could be worked out and in the event of such trade, would American Airways release Ball from his option agreement, and I said, certainly.

Subsequently, however, an arrangement was effected between Ball's company and P.A.I.C., and we were so advised, and we executed a release.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the Mellon Co. in Pittsburgh, by "P.A.I.C."?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the Postmaster General told you it would suit him very much if you would release the Ball Co. so they could make an arrangement with the Mellon Co.?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; and I made that move just like all other moves, in line with the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. And when he told you that, you said, "Fine"?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir; I had worked for Cabinet officers before, when I was in the Navy.

Mr. BLACK. I insert this evidence because Mr. Coburn was first told that he ought to buy out Ball, and later on the Postmaster General told him that Ball was a pioneer. Later on the Postmaster General told him that it had been decided that that company should be bought out by the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Avigation Co. bid lower than the Transcontinental & Western. The evidence shows, if they had secured the bid, that over a period of 10 years it would have saved the Government something like $16,000,000 on the schedules that were operating. The statement has been repeatedly made that they never did have any chance to operate a line. At this point I desire to insert in the RECORD the evidence of Mr. Taney, which is found on pages 1616 and 1617. Mr. Taney shows who was behind their company and that they had $1,000,000 available for use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Vol. 4, pp. 1616, 1617]

The CHAIRMAN. What arrangements had you made as to the amount of money that would be put up to begin the operation?

Mr. TANEY. The amount of money to be put up to begin operations was $1,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any assurance of more money, if needed?

Mr. TANEY. As much as we needed; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was behind that?

Mr. TANEY. Mr. Kaufman, Mr. Wick, from Youngstown; Mr. Wyck, and several other gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. And Mr. Sherman Adams?

Mr. TANEY. Yes, sir; Mr. Condon is more familiar with that than I am.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the gentlemen, Mr. Condon?

Mr. CONDON. Sherman Adams, of Boston; Mr. Paul Wyck, of Youngstown; and Mr. Oliver M. Kaufman. Most of the men represented groups who, in turn, had guaranteed money to be paid in if, as, and when we received the contract.

Mr. BLACK. I also ask to insert in the RECORD certain extracts from his evidence appearing on page 1619, volume 4, of the hearings.

There being no objection, the extracts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please read them into the record, so that they can be understood? First, what was your bid?

Mr. TANEY. Our bid was 64 percent of the allowable rate per mile.

The CHAIRMAN. What was their bid?

Mr. TANEY. 97½ percent.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, will you state what that was per-voyage cost to the Government? First, what was the distance?

Mr. TANEY. Two thousand nine hundred miles.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the voyage difference in those costs?

Mr. TANEY. Figuring on the 75-cent rate, with the variables, our cost to the Government per mile would have been 62 cents. The other bid of the Transcontinental Air Transport & Western Air Express, Inc., would have been $1.01. Over a period of 1 year the difference——

The CHAIRMAN. For how many voyages?

Mr. TANEY. One trip each way each day.

The CHAIRMAN. One trip each way each day?

Mr. TANEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that what they started out with?

Mr. TANEY. Yes, sir. The difference, or the savings, there per year to the Government would have been $235,215.

The CHAIRMAN. Over a period of 10 years it would have been a little over $8,000,000?

Mr. TANEY. Yes, sir; the contract was let on a 4-year basis with the proviso that if the service was satisfactory a certificate for the route would be issued. I do not know whether that has ever been done or not.

The CHAIRMAN. For what length of time?

Mr. TANEY. An indefinite length of time, as I understand it. That is as I understand it, and as in the bid.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe the law says 10 years from the time of the original contract. That would be a difference, on this one trip daily each way, of $3,000,000 in 10 years.

Mr. TANEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACK. After bids had been advertised for and had come in, let us see what happened. On August 26, 1 day after the bids were opened, Mr. W. Irving Glover sent a message back to Mr. Gove. Mr. Gove was his assistant and was the gentleman who had had his stock account taken care of by Mr. Paul Henderson, and who had given Mr. Henderson a note for $10,000, which note was later destroyed in a hotel here in Washington. Here is the message of Mr. Glover:

Cumberland last night. Wired you this morning. Am enclosing clipping from Pittsburgh paper. Looks as if they also wanted be a second-story man or men. Of course, I know you would not accept any strengthening documents to the bids but wanted to be sure. Have Earl go through the three bids and have their failings all lined up for the P.M.G. when he gets home. Be sure to save clipping and telegram.

Yours very truly,

W. IRVING GLOVER.

The very day after the bids had come in, Mr. Warren Irving Glover was sending word back, "Do not let there be any strengthening documents to Avigation Co. bid. Save them for the Pennsylvania Railroad Corporation and for the strong political group from the West coast." That is the substance of what he was saying.

A great deal has been said about Mr. Letson and his testimony before the Post Office Committee that he could not operate. Poor Mr. Letson never yet has learned how he got out of the picture. He does know that he got a contract. It so happens that someone was listening to his telephone conversations at a time when his bid was in, to find out exactly how strong he was. The company had bid and the Transcontinental & Western wanted to put him out of the picture.

On August 30, 1930, 7 days after the bids were opened, they were on Mr. Letson's trail. On that date a letter was written by a man named A. K. Owen, from the Hotel President, Kansas City, to Mr. J. R. Maddux, president of the T.A.T. and the Maddux Air Line. It started off by saying that—

The information contained in this letter came from sources which I consider very reliable, given to me in confidence with permission to advise you personally of the identity of the sources.

Then he proceeds to tell about the financial set-up of Letson. Mr. Skelly, Republican national committeeman of Oklahoma, was also interested in this company, and we are told how these gentlemen wired Mr. Letson not to bid, but the wire got through an hour too late. I read further:

In July with the capital of the company nearly exhausted, Mr. Letson managed to interest Bill Skelly and got him to put $30,000 into the line. This of course makes Skelly as large a stockholder as Letson.

The story of the bid! They reported the complete story of the bid made by Mr. Letson. There was a chance for a Denver-Kansas City mail contract. He got it. The Postmaster General gave it to him; and after it was given to him, Mr. Letson turned over the minutes to Mr. Brown and he lost interest in the Avigation Co. bid.

How did they get this information? Let us see, a large part of the information was obtained because of—the story Letson gave out over the telephone to a third party this morning, to which I listened in, as follows.

At that very time, within 7 days after the Avigation Co. had made a bid, which would have saved the Government $16,000,000, they had men listening to his private telephone conversations he was having with other people. It was very wise, of course, for him to "behave like a good soldier", because those who did not so behave did not get anything from the administration in charge then in the Post Office Department.

That is the way Mr. Letson was taken care of. On September 17, 1930, Mr. Glover wrote another letter, which I ask at this time to have inserted in the RECORD. It will be found in volume 6 of the hearings, at page 2714.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Dallas, Tex.

DEAR CHASE: Your telegrams to hand and your letter of 13th. Tell — the award has been made. Understand down here that Wedell-Williams plan to bring some kind of an action against the P.M.G. as Aviation Corporation did not carry out their bargain with them. How come?

Halliburton is going to make a statement saying P.M.G. is right in requiring what he did in the ads. Take it that the award was not made to Pan American South American route. Did not receive your letters until this morning, so could not wire you regarding telegrams. Believe we can work out of the Avigation bid.

Halliburton is going after Letson, and even Letson's stockholders do not approve this action. Don't know what you told the P.M.G., but there is no use recommending award be made to the high bidder and then getting cold feet, saying you and Earl agreed that we should fill out all the bids. We had better all stick together or we will all hang together. Believe we could make award to the W. Air and T.A.T. and make a statement along with it that no one would object to except the unsuccessful bidder.

Tomorrow I hop over to Houston and there for Thursday and Friday and then on to New Orleans, and reach Washington Monday.

Over 700 delegates to this convention, and believe me, it is an organization. Fight on between Luna for president and O'Rourke, of Brooklyn. May affect the organization. Spent half a day in Fort Worth on post-office site. Well, until later, I am,

Very truly yours,

W. IRVING GLOVER.

Mr. BLACK. In that letter Mr. Glover calls attention to the fact that the Aviation Corporation did not take care of Wedell-Williams and that they had not carried out their bargain. He said, "How come?" Then he said that they would "have to stick together or hang together." He said they must not retreat from the position they had taken in awarding the contract to the high bidder.

Why did he say that? It was because in the meantime a complaint had been made to the President of the United States and a request had been made of the Attorney General for an opinion, and Mr. O'Brian, the Assistant Attorney General, had rendered an opinion stating that the contract should not be awarded on this bid because it was contrary to the statute. At this point I ask that the opinion be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. It is in a letter dated September 3, from Mr. John Lord O'Brian to Hon. Arch Coleman, and is found on pages 2714 and 2715 of the record of the hearings.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 3, 1930.

Hon. ARCH COLEMAN,
First Assistant Postmaster General, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. COLEMAN: I have carefully considered the question whether the Postmaster General should award a contract for carrying air mail from New York, N.Y., to Los Angeles, Calif., and return, on the basis of the bids received in response to the Postmaster General's advertisement of August 2, 1930. In my opinion, section 4 of the Air Mail Act of February 2, 1925, as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 464), does not authorize the Postmaster General to limit bids to those who have had "at least 6 months' actual experience in operating aircraft on regular night schedules over a route 250 miles or more in length." Since this requirement of the advertisement of August 2, 1930, may have prevented the submission of bids by otherwise qualified bidders and may to that extent have defeated open competition in bidding, I think the Postmaster General should reject all the bids received and readvertise for bids for this route. (See 36 Op.A.G. 33; also 8 Comp. Gen. 252.)

I suggest that paragraph 7, section 1330, Postal Laws and Regulations, be rescinded or amended and that the fifth paragraph on page 3 of the advertisement of August 2, 1930, be omitted from future advertisements for bids for air-mail contracts. I think that in lieu of said fifth paragraph the Postmaster General before awarding any contract involving night flying may require any bidder on such mail contract to satisfy him by appropriate evidence of the bidder's qualifications satisfactory to operate aircraft on regular night schedules. I also suggest that in future advertisements for bids for air-mail contracts the seventh paragraph on page 3 of the advertisement of August 2, 1930, be amended to read substantially as follows:

"The attention of prospective bidders is particularly called to that provision of section 4 that where the air mail moving between the designated points does not exceed 25 cubic feet, or 225 pounds, per trip, the Postmaster General may award to the lowest responsible bidder of those who have owned and operated an air-transportation service on a fixed daily schedule over a distance of not less than 250 miles and for a period of not less than 6 months prior to the advertisement for bids."

Yours very truly,

JOHN LORD O'BRIAN,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

CONTRACT AWARDED TO HIGH BIDDER

Mr. BLACK. So we find that in the face of the low bid, in the face of everything else, they stood together as they suggested; the agreement they had made was carried out, and the Transcontinental & Western secured the contract. That company, of course, has filed no suit in court. It does not want to file a suit in court—that is, one that can be tried. They prefer to go around filing suits of a kind of which they know the court has no jurisdiction, because they know that the facts with reference to that contract cannot be exposed to the light and scrutiny of judicial decision without having it struck down as fraudulent.

There is another reason why it would be stricken down, among many others. Mr. Brown was a stockholder in the Pennsylvania Railroad and a stockholder in the Pennroad Corporation, one of its affiliates. It is attempted to claim that that makes no difference, because he owned such a small percentage of the stock. That is wholly immaterial. The criminal code, section 93, specifically provides that it is a criminal offense for any public official to award any contract to any firm or person who is indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits of the contracts of such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or firm. It makes it an offense punishable by a fine of $2,000 and imprisonment for not more than 2 years. Not only that, the courts have uniformly held that this is sufficient to strike down the contracts.

In the State of Pennsylvania, in the case of Melford Borough v. Melford Water Co. (124 Pa. State 623), a contract was made by the borough with the Melford Water Works, and it developed that officials of the Melford Water Works were on the board of officers; and the court said:

It is almost needless to say that a contract so prohibited by law is utterly void, and there is no power that can breathe life into such a dead thing.

In the State of New Jersey—and I call particular attention to this—in the case of State v. the City of Cape May (36 Atl. 1039) the city made an agreement with a power company to supply power. In developed later that one member of the board had up with himself, as collateral security, 1 share of stock in the power company with which the contract was made. Certainly that was not a very extensive holding. It was collateral security of 1 share of stock. Here is what the court said:

If the vote of an interested member of the common council be admitted, it must be received as absolute verity. No power exists in this or any other court to set on foot an inquiry to ascertain whether or to what extent his official conduct was influenced by his interest in the subject, in which he is supposed to act exclusively for the public benefit. * * * This resolution must be declared invalid.

So, Mr. President, insofar as the contract of Transcontinental & Western Air is concerned, it is void because of the collusive arrangements made in the Post Office Department.

It is void because of the stock owned by the Postmaster General in the Pennsylvania Railroad, which is associated as a part of the T.A.T.

It is void because the whole thing is a stench in the nostrils of decent and honest people, and no court will sustain it.

It is also void because, as stated by the Assistant Attorney General in the opinion which was rendered, the advertisement imposes restrictions that were not imposed by statute.

It is void for another reason. It is void by reason of the fact that the Transcontinental & Western employed Mr. Ernest W. Smoot for the purpose, as they stated, of attempting to "expedite" action on their contract. The courts have uniformly held that any such employment absolutely invalidates a contract. Did they do that? Yes; they did it. The sworn evidence shows that they did it.

I call attention to the fact that on page 2884 of the record, volume 7, there is a letter from Mr. James G. Woolley to Mr. Ernest W. Smoot calling the latter's attention to the friendly and personal relationship between Senator Smoot and the Comptroller General, and asking him to have Senator Smoot write a letter to the Comptroller General. In order that there may not be any dispute, I ask here to have that letter inserted in the RECORD, found on page 2884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

WESTERN AIR SERVICE,
October 24, 1930.

Mr. ERNEST R. SMOOT,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR ERNEST: Enclosed is a draft of approximately what we would like your father to say in a letter to Major General McCarl.

Not knowing how personal and friendly the relationship between the Senator and the Comptroller General may be, the form of address and the language used in this draft are formal. It may well be that you will prefer to redraft it on the basis of your closer knowledge of their relationship. In substance, what we would like is for your father to use his very potent influence with Mr. McCarl to persuade the latter that the award as made should stand as being in the best interest of the public.

Knowing that you will fulfill this one additional mission for us and counting upon the continued good will of yourself and your father as one of our major assets, I am,

Yours very truly,

JAMES G. WOOLLEY.

JGW:GM
Will appreciate immediate action—JIM.

Mr. BLACK. On December 9, 1930, we find Mr. Ernest W. Smoot wiring Mr. Woolley:

Have checked with MacCracken. Find that information came through Pennsylvania Railroad and was given to him as the worst that could happen to this contract.

I call attention to the fact that what he was referring to was that the rate might be reduced to 40 cents a mile.

Still have hopes General will approve your high bid. If he renders decision giving you contract under low bid accept first checks under protest and file claim for the difference. This seems like foolish procedure, but it is a precedent in the General's office and claims have always been paid. Feel nobody should bring pressure to bear on General this week. If nothing happens, first next week father and I will see McCarl again.

Regards,

ERNEST W. SMOOT.

I call attention to the fact that Mr. Ernest W. Smoot testified under oath that the statement that he and his father would "see McCarl again" was not correct, and he denied that he and his father had seen Mr. McCarl.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, what did he say about the letter?

Mr. BLACK. He said that he did not state the facts.

I call attention also to a letter in volume 7, page 2883, from Mr. Smoot to Mr. Woolley, in which he says:

DEAR JIM: So that you may keep posted, this is to advise you that I prepared a brief that father and I submitted to Mr. McCarl, asking him to expedite the consideration of your contract which is before him.

I wired you and phoned Doc as to the status of this last week. I have no doubt but what the whole matter will be cleared up for us by the middle of next week. Jim, this has been an awfully "tough" job.

I have not heard anything further from Frank, and I think it is about time that some definite arrangement be made. I air-mailed you today copies of the Senate appropriation hearings. No doubt this bill will be passed the first of next week. Will keep you posted as to progress. Let me know if Doc is coming East.

With kindest regards.

Yours sincerely,

ERNEST W. SMOOT.

That letter is dated December 12, 1930. On that date, appearing in the record at page 2885, is a letter from Senator Reed Smoot to Mr. J. R. McCarl, Comptroller General of the United States, which reads as follows:

REED SMOOT, UTAH, CHAIRMAN,
UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
December 12, 1930.

Hon. J. R. MCCARL,
Comptroller General of the United States,
General Accounting Office, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. MCCARL: Appreciating the fact that you have numerous things before you, as we all have these days, I hesitate to write you in this matter, but I have been asked by certain constituents of mine if it is not possible to expedite decision on the Transcontinental-Western Air case which is before you. If it is possible for you to do so, I shall greatly appreciate it.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

REED SMOOT.

Then we find on January 2, 1931, this telegram from Ernest W. Smoot:

Have assurance that the whole matter will be settled next week. Sorry it couldn't have been a New Year's present. Hope to see you in about 2 weeks.

On January 10 there is a telegram signed by Ernest Smoot, as follows:

Contract O.K. Glad to see you when you come east. Regards.

Mr. Smoot had predicted, a week before, that the contract would be approved by the Comptroller General's Office next week, and next week he wires that the contract is approved.

There will be found in volume 7, page 2871, a bill for services sent by Mr. Smoot to Mr. Hanshue. The bill is for $15,000, less an advance by James Woolley of $2,500, and he says:

DEAR MR. HANSHUE: I am enclosing my bill for the specific services you instructed me on November 13 to perform in Washington.

Both of these projects, the decision of the Comptroller General of the United States on the matter of domestic air-mail appropriations have now reached a successful conclusion. You will note in my bill that I have taken into consideration the $2,500 advance made by James Woolley on December 17, 1930.

With kind personal regards and best wishes, I am

Yours sincerely,

ERNEST W. SMOOT.

Mr. Woolley testified that Mr. Smoot was employed by the Transcontinental & Western Air Express; and it is also true that Mr. Smoot testified, on pages 2874 and 2875, that he obtained part of his information from Mr. Woodside, in the Comptroller's Office; and that Mr. Woodside at the time he [Smoot] testified was in the employment of the General Motors Corporation. If Senators will look at the chart which hangs on the wall, they will find that the General Motors Corporation is to a large extent the holding company of the companies that own the Transcontinental & Western Air, the company that got the contract, and it was awarded after this decision was written.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. As I remember, this company did not pay Smoot's bill for $15,000, but cut it down.

Mr. BLACK. They cut it down to $2,500. They declined to pay him any more than $2,500. He said that his lawyer—Mr. Donovan, as I recall—advised him not to sue, which was good advice.

Mr. NORRIS. That inquiry is preparatory to the real question I desire to ask the Senator. When Mr. Smoot was on the stand under oath, he admitted that one of these letters he had written to his client was not true; did he not?

Mr. BLACK. He did.

Mr. NORRIS. Was any explanation ever made as to why he told his client that falsehood in the letter, or was the committee able to draw any conclusion on the subject from any other evidence?

Mr. BLACK. I should say the impression he intended to leave was that he wanted to make his client think he was doing a lot of work.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the point I desired to bring out. If it is true that the letter was false, I do not see any other object in stating the falsehood in the letter than to increase his fee, and that was indicated in the bill for $15,000 which was settled for $2,500.

Mr. BLACK. The only inference I could draw, and it may not be correct, is that Mr. Smoot claimed he was doing a lot of work in order to impress his client.

Mr. NORRIS. Did he admit that on the stand?

Mr. BLACK. I cannot state at this time as to that. I have not that particular part of the evidence before me.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator knows that there are a great many lobbyists around Washington who do nothing in the line of their employment, but who make their clients believe that they control a whole lot of Senators and Representatives and other officials, and draw their money for it.

Mr. BLACK. I think that is generally the case. I think they all exaggerate what they do.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably Mr. Smoot was indulging in that kind of a pastime at the time he wrote this letter.

Mr. BLACK. I have no doubt that he was.

The point I am making is that when a man is so employed, and a company so employs him to "expedite action", it makes no difference whether he expedites action or not; under the decisions of the courts, that invalidates any contract which is obtained by such methods. It is according to well-recognized principles that that should be true.

Mr. Hanshue testified that his company's contract which was canceled was the very contract for whoch they employed Mr. Smoot to use influence to expedite, and he testified that they thought he could expedite it; that he "sold" himself to them. It is the very contract that Mr. Woolley was asking Mr. Smoot to use his father's influence to get, and the object was to expedite the decision.

I desire to read a decision in that connection in order that there may be no question about the law, to show that if there were nothing else in the world bearing on this matter except that one thing, the contract would have to fall.

I read from the case of John E. Gorman against the United States. This is found in Thirty-fourth Court of Claims Reports, which has been cited with approval many times by the Supreme Court of the United States, the last time, as I recall it, in the Fall case. I read from page 242:

> As regards the contractor Price, the court is of opinion that this act of his rendered the expedited service—
> Note "expedited service"—
> contra bonos mores and against public policy. Whether the money went further than the person who received it, whether it was divided with officials of the Post Office Department the court does not inquire. It is sufficient to know that the expedited service was not ordered in conformity with the petition of inhabitants along the post-office routes until the money was promised, and that it was ordered immediately after that arrangement had been made, and that the money was paid so soon as the expedition was secured.

This is not the first time I have brought out, since I have been talking, evidence of employment to expedite action when the money was conditioned upon the expeditious action. Reading further:

> This court has always regarded the Government as somewhat in the character of a ward, and its officers in the character of its guardians, and it has never given effect to a contract where it appeared that the contractor had directly or indirectly by direct bribes or corrupt influences, sought to impair the good faith of the guardian. The corrupt purchase of political or personal influence is more insidious, and in its results as bad as direct bribery. Whoever has dealings with a trustee, a guardian, an executor, or officers of the Government can sway them by no influence which will be prejudicial to the interests of the cestui que trust.

Under that decision, and in line with the accepted authorities in all of this Nation, no one can be surprised that this company has not dared to go into the open doors of the Court of Claims. Of course it will not. It may do so if it can be taunted into doing so, but it cannot do so with any hope of winning.

It has been held in all the cases that efforts to secure legislation or contracts by employment of people to use personal solicitation or political influence are contrary to public policy. I have already cited the case of Tool Co. v. Norris (2 Wall. 54).

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is reading a line of authorities which I am a little bit surprised to hear. Do those authorities go so far as to hold that, for instance, the employment of people to work on legislators is corrupt and against public policy?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but they draw a dividing line. They say that if the employment is for the purpose of drawing up a bill, actual legal service, or to present an argument before a committee, that is all right; but if those employed are employed to go around and buttonhole people, and have telegrams sent, and worry and annoy everybody to death with propaganda letters, and annoy them by meeting them and talking to them about legislation, when they are doing it not in any public interest but for a fee they are to get, that is contrary to public policy.

Mr. LONG. Then the bringing of people to a capital for the purpose of suppressing legislation, to work on them, even though it is done openly, would be just as corrupt under that holding.

Suppose we had a bill before us like the oil tariff bill, for instance. We would find representatives of both sides practically swarming over this Capitol.

Mr. BLACK. There is a difference between people who are genuinely and bona fide interested in the business and the others.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in brief, as I understand it, and have long thought the law to be, any contract of employment by which the employed agrees to exert his influence to cause or to prevent legislation is void as against public policy.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is nothing immoral in the presentation of facts or law——

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; I understand that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. To committees of any legislative body, because presumably, at least, that is helpful to the committees.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But the employment of any person to influence legislation, to exercise personal influence, to persuade, to intimidate, or to induce a member of a legislative body to take a certain viewpoint respecting legislative measures, is against public policy, and such contract cannot be enforced in any court.

Mr. LONG. Would not the use of the mails along that line be using the mails to defraud?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I do not think that question would arise, unless the communication made misrepresentations.

Mr. LONG. I was unaware of these decisions, though perhaps I should have known of them. But hiring a man to go and buttonhole legislators is a corrupt act, as I understand.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I shall proceed with my remarks, but suppose I let the Senator from Louisiana have the two cases which go into that matter very fully. I have already cited the case of Tool Co. v. Norris (2 Wall. 54), and Trist v. Child (21 Wall. 450).

Mr. President, I desire to show out of their own mouths that the officers of these companies not only admitted, but boasted, that this particular contract about which I have been talking was obtained as the result, at least in part, of political influence. I do not make that statement without having it supported under oath by the president of the Western Air Express.

I shall read at this point from volume 7, page 2926, Mr. Hanshue's evidence. Bear in mind that I have already cited the cases—and if the cases had not been cited, common sense would tell us that it is true—holding that contracts secured by political influence, and by reason of any cause except the legitimate exercise of a governmental duty by an official, are void. I read:

> The CHAIRMAN. There is one question in this memorandum I want to ask you about before we proceed on anything else, that you gave to Mr. MacCracken and Mr. Frye—and you have stated that the statements in here are correct; that is true, is it not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And represented the views of the directors?

That is, the directors of his company.

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I find on page 3 of this statement——

Referring to the Western Air Express directors.

The CHAIRMAN. I find on page 3 of this statement referring to the W.A.E. directors:

"They also feel it was through the friends of the Western Air Express who are influential in politics that it was possible to secure the award of this contract and its approval by Government officials."

May I ask who are those friends that are influential in politics that they felt made it possible for you secure that contract?

Mr. HANSHUE. The newspapers——

The CHAIRMAN. What newspapers?

Mr. HANSHUE. The Los Angeles Times, the Los Angeles Examiner, the banks.

The CHAIRMAN. Who runs the Los Angeles Times?

Mr. HANSHUE. Mr. Chandler is the publisher.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Harry Chandler?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

That is the first one he admits was active in politics. There has been no newspaper in the entire United States, perhaps, that is, any individual newspaper, which has been so bitter in its antagonism to cleaning up this scandal as the Los Angeles Times, operated by Mr. Harry Chandler.

In July 1925 Mr. Chandler bought 50 shares of Western Air Express stock for $5,000.

In February 1929 he exchanged those 50 shares for 1,250 shares of the Western Air Express, Inc., at $10 par value.

In July 1929, he bought 63 shares at $45.20, making a total payment for the 1,313 shares of $7,847.50.

His profits from these 25 shares, which he kept, are $58,461.10.

Naturally that newspaper would be very bitter against an investigation which would take away from Mr. Harry Chandler the opportunity to continue any such pyramiding of stock values.

How did he come to make that money? According to the sworn testimony of Mr. Hanshue, he made it because Mr. Harry Chandler and others whom I shall name later were influential in politics, and were able to get their contracts.

Let Mr. Chandler publish that in his newspaper. Let him also publish in his newspaper the fact that Mr. Hanshue swore under oath that Mr. Chandler did not usually come to Washington and go to the Post Office Department, but used his regular Washington representative. I wonder if tomorrow Mr. Harry Chandler, who contributed $2,500 to the Republican National Campaign Committee on August 20, 1930, 3 days before these bids were opened, will put that in his newspaper when he states that the President of the United States and his administration have gone wrong in taking away from Mr. Chandler and other influential people the money which they had extracted from the taxpayers of the United States. Let him deny any of those facts. They are testified to under oath, except as to the campaign contribution.

Those are not all the contributions. Do not misunderstand me. Mr. Chandler had a much larger investment than that; but that happened to be the only campaign contribution 3 days before these bids were opened up—the bids of the company for which Mr. Hanshue says Mr. Harry Chandler exercised his political influence to get the contract.

Not only did Mr. Chandler say that; he also said his directors believed it when the statement was made. The statement was not made accidentally. It was made in a written memorandum, and that is one of the memoranda which were returned to the committee after Mr. Hanshue had had them extracted from the files of Mr. MacCracken.

Mr. Chandler was not the only one Hanshue said had political influence that helped him. There is another paper out there called the Los Angeles Examiner. As I understand, it is a part of the Hearst organization. Let us see who he says was the next one that I asked him to mention:

The CHAIRMAN. What was the other paper that you said was influential in politics?

Mr. HANSHUE. Los Angeles Examiner.

The CHAIRMAN. Who runs that?

Mr. HANSHUE. George Young.

Remember, here is the statement that he said was true.

They also felt it was through the friends of the Western Air Express, who are influential in politics, that it was possible to secure the award of the contract and its approval by the Government officials.

The CHAIRMAN. Who else was it that was influential in politics, friends of the Western Air Express, that made it possible to secure the award of the contracts?

Mr. HANSHUE. The banks.

The CHAIRMAN. What banks?

Mr. HANSHUE. The Security First National was one.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was it in that bank that was influential in politics that helped to secure the contract?

Mr. HANSHUE. Mr. Henry M. Robinson.

Mr. Robinson also had made $45,053.41 out of this subsidized company.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the vice president?

Mr. HANSHUE. William May Garland.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he the only vice president?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes; he was the only vice president.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his business?

Mr. HANSHUE. Real estate.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he one of the ones you referred to as being influential in politics?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes; I had forgotten about him.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Who were these friends that were influential in politics that you had in mind? Were there any others?

Mr. HANSHUE. No others.

The CHAIRMAN. How many of those gentlemen you have named came to Washington in reference to the contract?

Mr. HANSHUE. There was one other, Mr. Bonfils.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you spell that?

Mr. HANSHUE. B-o-n-f-i-l-s.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did he live?

Mr. HANSHUE. In Denver.

The CHAIRMAN. Denver, Colo.?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his business?

Mr. HANSHUE. He was owner and publisher of the Denver Post.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Mr. Chandler holding any political position at that time?

Mr. HANSHUE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Mr. Robinson?

Mr. HANSHUE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Had they?

Mr. HANSHUE. Never that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the particular political influence that you mentioned they had, the gentlemen you have named?

Mr. HANSHUE. They were acquainted with members of the administration.

The CHAIRMAN. What members of the administration?

Mr. HANSHUE. Brown and the President.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Will you look at that paragraph at the top of the page and read it, and see whether or not it was true, according to your idea and the idea of your directors, as you stated?

That is the same statement about the political influence.

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now read it into the record so we will be sure we know what it is that was the truth as you saw it and as your directors saw it.

Mr. HANSHUE (reading). "They also feel that it was through the friends of the W.A.E. who are influential in politics that it was possible to secure the award of this contract and its approval by Government officials."

The CHAIRMAN. What contracts were you referring to?

Mr. HANSHUE. T. & W.A. contract, Western Air, and T.A.T. rather.

Is there anyone who will have the effrontery to say that a contract obtained by a company whose officers admit under oath it was not obtained on account of merit but which the officers and directors felt they had gotten on the ground of political influence, should be sustained by a man with a decent mind and an honest heart? Perhaps so. If so, I repeat, America has steered far away from the old-fashioned principles of honesty and integrity upon which this country was founded.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to put a question to my colleague on the committee. Will there not be, and has there not always been, so far as the Senator's recollection and reading go, active use of political influence where a right or power is vested in a political agency?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. That is exactly the reason, as the Senator knows, why I desired to have the letting of these contracts placed in the hands of an independent commission, and why, so far as I am concerned, I personally prefer the Interstate Commerce Commission; but I have always thought, and I now think, that wherever it is possible to have a contract made by a commission sitting as nearly as possible as a judicial body, it is better to have it made there. I agree with the Senator thoroughly.

Mr. Hanshue testified that they had another man named Bishop doing political work in Washington. They had these strong and influential people doing work for them, and they also had Mr. Julius Kahn and Mr. Ernest W. Smoot. In a quotation from a letter written by Mr. Hanshue, which appears in the Record on page 2952, is the statement that they had employed Mr. Julius Kahn. The quotation is as follows:

> You will no doubt remember Wooley. Kahn was his assistant doing special work in the traffic department of Western Air Express, and also political work in Washington.

Not only that, but there will be found on page 2947 and page 2948 the statement under oath by Mr. Woolley, who I presume is reliable in his evidence. Whether he is reliable or not, he was the agent they had here, and he looked like an honest man. He was here as their representative, and it will be found that he said that Mr. Brown would not sign the contract until he had a statement from Senator Smoot and from Mr. Tilson that it would be all right, and he would not be attacked in Congress; and Mr. Woolley testified under oath that he went to both these gentlemen and had them communicate with Postmaster General Brown to tell him that it was O.K. after they had asked Mr. Woolley if it was all right with him. That will be found in the record on pages 2849 and 2848.

In order that it may be clear, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks that part of the evidence which I will furnish for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Mr. WOOLLEY. * * * So when we got through we went back to the Graybar Building, to the T. & W.A. office—Mr. Robbins, Mr. Cutheli, and Mr. Sheaffer were all there, and I think Mr. Keyes was there, and I asked Harris, "What was it you wanted me to do?" He said, "The Postmaster General says he won't award this contract until he has assurances he is not going to be attacked on the subject in the House or Senate."
>
> I said, "I thought he told you they were all right and legal." He said, "Well, he did, but he don't want a lot of argument afterward." I said, "Either he don't like the contracts or he is trying to mislead you." I said, "Let the other fellows get the assurances." He said, "They can't go to the people concerned." I said, "Who does he want them from?" He said, "From Smoot and from Tilson." Senator Smoot has been a friend of my family since boyhood, went to school with my mother and father, and Mr. Tilson had told me if ever I was in trouble to come to him.
> Smoot was one of the leaders in the Senate, and Tilson was the majority leader in the House. I said, "I will get them for you, if you have to have them, but you never can object to it after this." He said, "Maybe we can." I said, "You cannot if you once go to these people and ask them to stand back of you, you are through." We called Senator Smoot at Salt Lake City by long distance. He asked me if what we got was what we wanted. I said it was the best we could get, and said my principals were satisfied with it. He said he would advise the Postmaster General, as far as he was concerned, it was O.K.
> Hanshue and I went to the Roosevelt Building, where Mr. Tilson was conducting the Presidential campaign at that time, and we went in and asked him if the contract was satisfactory—he knew about this affair in 1929 when they were trying to bust us up—Mr. Hanshue said it was not as good as we hoped to get, but it was about all we could get out of the situation. He said, "Well, if you are satisfied with it, I will indicate my compliance to the Postmaster General"—and he started to dictate a letter, and we left.
> I never saw either Mr. Smoot's answer or Mr. Tilson's, but I understand they both went for it. The contract was awarded, I think, about 48 hours later.

Mr. BLACK. Such was the situation on the western side. Who was over on the eastern side working for this combination? Mr. W. W. Atterbury. Mr. Atterbury is no insignificant figure himself when it comes to politics. If the Senate will bear in mind that the evidence shows that the bankers of the Pennsylvania Railroad are Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and if the Senate will also bear in mind that, according to the evidence given before the Pecora committee under oath, the bankers who finance the transactions of that railroad insist on having policies submitted to them from time to time, and that it is also true, as correspondence shows, that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. were interested in determining the fate of various contracts, and were called upon for assistance, it can be seen that there was no mean political combination over on the eastern side.

Not only that; the directors of the T.A.T. were Col. Henry Breckinridge, Richard F. Hoyt, Paul Henderson, Earl Reynolds, W. B. Mayo, and William H. Vanderbilt.

Who else was there? The officers and directors of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation. Whom did that embrace? They boasted of their board, the names of the members of which I have read into the RECORD. They boasted of their influence in Washington, and they had a right to boast of it, because they had the powerful Mellon family on that board, as they also had directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad. There is the combination, the irresistible, unbreakable force, one which was too strong to be resisted by the small and insignificant group who had nothing but a desire to operate a line on a cheaper basis, with the backing of bankers who would supply them money, but who did not have the political influence. They were even abandoning their bid which they sent in. Their bid was brought down by Mr. Kauffman, as I believe the evidence shows, and Mr. Letson says that Mr. Fess declined to represent them after the bid had been brought down. Old man Letson out there, his telephone conversations being listened to, reports being made that, like a good soldier, he had played the game. The other two men were left out on an island to oppose the strongest political forces all the way from California to the East that have ever been faced in the history of this Republic by men who sought a contract.

What happened? Why, of course, the Senate knows what happened. The high bidder got it, and the taxpayer has been footing the bill. How did they get it? It is not for me to change the statement of their sworn officer. Mr. Atterbury came down to see about it. The evidence shows that Mr. Atterbury made one or more trips to Washington and came down once to talk with Mr. Brown alone. There is the story.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator ought to designate Mr. Atterbury by his official position. We know what it was, but the RECORD ought to show just who Mr. Atterbury was.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Atterbury was at that time the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., a director in various banks and other railroads, linking himself up with a small coterie of financiers in New York who direct the destinies, or who have directed the destinies, of the people of this Nation; and Mr. Atterbury also was either then or had been Republican national committeeman for the State of Pennsylvania.

Everywhere we go we find them springing up. Mr. President, do not let me be misunderstood. I have no more sympathy and no more respect for a Democratic national committeeman who would use his office for the purpose of trying to get special favors than I have for a Republican national committeeman doing such a thing. I am in favor of a bill with teeth in it, that will stop the pouring into Washington of lobbyists from every section of the country to attempt to obtain special favors, I do not care to what party they may belong or claim to belong.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. I wonder if the Senator, while he is on this subject, will discuss the propriety of the chairman of the Democratic national committee being the person who, under the pending bill, is the one who will let the air-mail contracts?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I shall be glad to accommodate the Senator by stating that the new air-mail contracts for which bids have been submitted, for the first time, in my judgment, since air-mail contracts have been let by competitive bidding, are being let honorably and justly. It is my belief that they have had an open, fair, square deal. I do not want to be led off into any such discussion; but there is quite a difference between a Senator or public officer serving as a committeeman in his party and a paid lobbyist serving as a committeeman. I have no criticism of any Senator or any public officer who wants to serve as a member of a party committee; I consider that to be his business; but I am opposed to having any member of the committee of any party trying to take advantage of his position in order to earn money, and reflecting upon the administration of which he claims to be a part, by leaving the impression that he can get special favors. I am not saying that with reference to any individual; nor do I say that because a man is a party committeeman that means that he cannot honestly represent a client; but I do say that with reference to the particular contracts which I imagine many would like to forget—such as the Transcontinental and Western Air—they are polluted from the beginning; they are filled with corruption so that they ought to be a stench in the nostrils of any honest-thinking citizen. Has the time come when the officers of a company can go on the stand and swear that they got their contracts by reason of political influence, and men will still defend it? Such a condition invalidates the transaction on its face in the mind of every man who believes in contracts being awarded not as political favors but in an honest spirit, according to American customs.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not interrupt the Senator now to make this contribution if I had not already interrupted him along the same line, but having done that, and having listened to the questions asked by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], I should like, if the Senator will permit me, to say that I have tried to follow the investigation made by the committee of which the Senator from Alabama is the chairman, and I should like, with his permission, to say now that, so far as I have been able to observe his work on that committee and the work which the committee have done, I think they have performed an admirable service and are entitled to the grateful appreciation of the American people.

I agree with what the Senator said just a few moments ago about political influence, and the way it was wielded to get contracts; but I want to go further. I believe that the methods used by these corporations to get contracts are indefensible; they are corrupt, and deserve the condemnation of all honest men; but to prevent such things from happening, as a preventive measure, and without doing any injustice to anybody, I do not believe that we ought to stop at that. I do not believe that a chairman of a national committee ought to hold a position in the Cabinet of the President of the United States, especially when he is going to be called upon to act upon contracts as important as these are.

I think that applies to Mr. Farley, and it is only right for me to say that, because I believe it is only carrying out the idea that I have, and which I think the Senator from Alabama has, that the real object, after all, is to purify public dealings and not have anyone be able from the record hereafter to point the finger of scorn at corruption which has, I think, been so ably exposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. I appreciate the Senator's remarks. I will state not because of the one who is Postmaster General but for the reason——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator let me interrupt him again?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say that nothing, so far as I know, has pointed to anything Postmaster General Farley has done that is in any way wrong, or technically illegal, but I should like to have the members of the President's Cabinet placed beyond the power of evil influences. It is not because this man or that man may be dishonest; I think it is because the position he holds enables a dishonest man to perform acts which will bring about the results the Senator has disclosed.

Mr. BLACK. I am personally very much gratified that the present Postmaster General saw fit to do that which any honest man ought to do. When he found there was fraud he took action which the honest people of this country, who know the facts, will approve. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. Just a moment. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that I would prefer not to have matters of this kind decided by any one man. I want a bill and I am joining in championing a bill which provides for turning the letting of such contracts over to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Air-mail contracts?

Mr. BLACK. All air-mail contracts, without subsidy. That is what I favor. That is what I want to have enacted into law.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator that these contracts might well be put in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as it is proposed to do in the bill now before us. But I want to say also in behalf of Mr. Farley that even if these contracts were dishonest and corrupt, as I believe them to be, it took a remarkable degree of courage to cancel them, and I believe the Senator from Alabama agrees with me.

Mr. BLACK. I think I may say that any man, wherever he comes from or to whatever party he belongs, who has the courage to arouse the antagonism of the National City Bank—and I shall later show these are the people—and to interfere with the closely related affairs of the Morgans and the Kuhn-Loebs in New York is a man of courage, and I take off my hat to him.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. As I look at it, it is no defense to say that Mr. Farley, for instance, is a man of great courage and great honesty. So far as I know, no one has charged anything else. He is a human being; and human nature is about the same whether we find it in the Democratic Party or the Republican Party. I do not believe the chairman of the Republican National Committee or the chairman of the Democratic National Committee ought to be a Member of the United States Senate. Such a man might retain his office as a United States Senator, and Mr. Farley might retain his office as Postmaster General—I would not have any objection to that—but he ought to resign as chairman of a great political party in either case.

Many Senators will remember that just a few years ago the chairman of the Republican National Committee was a member of this body. I would not say anything against him. I knew him. I thought a great deal of him. I thought he was a fine man. I am not criticizing him as a man at all. I know he possessed an influence here by virtue of his chairmanship of the Republican National Committee that no other Senator possessed. Although he had practically no other influence, there were a good many votes on vital questions here which he controlled absolutely without doing anything himself and without saying a word. When it was known where he stood and what he wanted, there were some votes that went his way. I, personally, know of some instances of that kind.

I do not want to be understood as criticizing him. I did not criticize him. I do not want to be understood as criticizing Postmaster General Farley or saying he has not done his duty, because I think he has. But we are establishing precedents and the fact that he is Postmaster General ought to disqualify him from being chairman of a great national political committee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I want to call attention now to one more contract made by the Western Air Express. On July 31, 1931, the company made a contract by which it agreed if it ever got to where it could operate its line more rapidly or could carry passengers more cheaply than the Aviation Corporation of Delaware, it would surrender its contract. That is a very unusual contract, but that is exactly the contract which was made. In other words, under this contract, if the Western Air reached a point where it could carry passengers more cheaply or more quickly than the Aviation Corporation, it must surrender its contract.

Why did it make that kind of a contract? Mr. Hanshue declared under oath it was because he had to make it in order to get it at all. The Postmaster General told him he had to get a contract sublet by the Aviation Corporation of America, otherwise he would lose the interest he had in the line. So he made an agreement in writing which is in the record. I will read just briefly to show there is no question about it:

Senator McCARRAN. Mr. Hanshue, I would like to have you explain as to what you understood—it is not clear to me—as to what was understood, and what is the significance of the language read by Senator BLACK a few minutes ago as to these two routes?

Mr. HANSHUE. You mean this last paragraph about rates and time, and so forth?

Senator McCARRAN. Yes. Tell us in your own way just what that meant as you understood it.

Mr. HANSHUE. It simply meant if we could carry passengers faster from El Paso by way of Albuquerque to Los Angeles, or for a cheaper rate, and did so, we would lose the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, could you speed it up so as to go faster than this Transcontinental Line to Los Angeles——

Mr. HANSHUE. Faster than the Southern.

The CHAIRMAN. Than the Southern Line?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And cheapened the rates so you could carry people cheaper than they, you would lose your contract?

Mr. HANSHUE. The mail contract.

He made that contract because it was necessary for him to do so, or he would get no contract at all. It is true he had been operating that line. That is one of the lines which he was complaining he had taken away from him.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I hope I will not disrupt the train of thought of my colleague on the committee, and I want him to understand my interruption is not intended to do anything except to develop a thought.

As I recall, the evidence before the committee shows that Hanshue and his associates had devoted a large part of their lives and their time and their money to the development of those western lines. It also discloses that the Postmaster General had it in his power, and had made known his power to Hanshue and his associates, to put them out of business and destroy everything they had put into their respective lines. I think the Senator will agree with me on that point.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. It was for that reason that they combined with T.A.T., and it was for that reason they lost their line in the South which they had begun to operate, as Mr. Hanshue stated, because the Postmaster General had indicated to them he would give them a mail contract.

Mr. McCARRAN. Just another interruption, if the Senator please. I know the Senator is tired, because he has now been on his feet several hours.

Mr. BLACK. I am almost through, but I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. I want to develop just this thought from the Senator. Wherever power is vested in a Federal agency or in one individual having Federal power behind him, and he threatens with destruction those who must come before him, they naturally will yield and bend to his will.

Mr. BLACK. That is usually true. That would not excuse them, however, if they did a wrong act. There is no difference between the Senator and me in respect to the idea he has in mind. I favor, as I have heretofore stated, turning these contracts over to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senator from Nevada favors a different commission. Insofar as our ideas of principle are concerned they are identical. We want to remove hereafter the making of these contracts from any agency, whether it is a good man or a bad man holding the office, and we want it placed in a commission which will pass upon the facts and deal justly with all concerned.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point, without reading, the evidence of Mr. Hanshue as to why he took this subcontract. It appears at page 2932 of the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the evidence referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. You stated in the contract between you and the Robertson Aircraft Corporation, the American Airways, Inc., on the 31st day of July 1931:

"Whereas the Western Co. has heretofore made claim to the said proposed air-mail contract between El Paso, Tex., and Albuquerque, N.Mex."

That is correct, is it not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not true that in that contract you were compelled against your will to agree that you would not ask for "an extension or extensions, either longutudinally or laterally, or in any other way on route no. 33, or any consolidation thereof or route certificate granted thereon."

Is that correct?

Mr. HANSHUE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So that on this contract made on the 31st day of July you did agree in writing over your signature, did you not——

Mr. HANSHUE (interposing). Sure.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). With these people that you would not ask for any extensions or consolidations or anything else that would affect this American Airways Line across the continent?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes, sir. That is the only way I could have the thing sublet to us.

The CHAIRMAN. The only way you could have what sublet to you?

Mr. HANSHUE. The extension from El Paso to Albuquerque.

The CHAIRMAN. Who attached that condition to the contract?

Mr. HANSHUE. American Airways.

The CHAIRMAN. The Postmaster General approved—this was turned over to him, was it not?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And he approved it, did he not?

Mr. HANSHUE. That is what I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. It was turned over before the extensions were granted, was it not?

Mr. HANSHUE. We had to——

The CHAIRMAN. You had to?

Mr. HANSHUE. We had to make the agreement first.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Why did you make such a contract as that, Mr. Hanshue?

Mr. HANSHUE. We had to do it to get the mail. They submitted a very much more stringent contract than that to begin with, but this is what it finally——

Senator McCARRAN. Who submitted it?

Mr. HANSHUE. The American Airways.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you been told you must agree with them before you would get any contract?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Who told you that?

Mr. HANSHUE. The Postmaster General.

The CHAIRMAN. Which Postmaster General?

Mr. HANSHUE. Postmaster General Brown.

Senator McCARRAN. Right there, Mr. Hanshue, I would like to have you explain as to what you understood—it is not clear to me—as to what was understood, and what is the significance of the language read by Senator BLACK a few minutes ago as to these two routes?

Mr. HANSHUE. You mean this last paragraph about rates and time, and so forth?

Senator McCARRAN. Yes. Tell us in your own way just what that meant as you understood it.

Mr. HANSHUE. It simply meant if we could carry passengers faster from El Paso by way of Albuquerque to Los Angeles, or for a cheaper rate, and did so, we would lose the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, could you speed it up so as to go faster than this Transcontinental Line to Los Angeles——

Mr. HANSHUE. Faster than the Southern.

The CHAIRMAN. Than the Southern Line?

Mr. HANSHUE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And cheapened the rates so you could carry people cheaper than they, you would lose your contract?

Mr. HANSHUE. The mail contract.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the strange part about this agreement is that it is not new, either. Let me read an exactly similar thing that happened in 1834, and what the Senate then thought about it:

Resolved, That it appears that an individual who made a contract for the transportation of the mail was required to give it up for no other reason than that it might be given to another desirous of having it; and that the act of the Department in requiring such surrender and effecting the transfer was illegal and unjust.

I also find that the Senate then resolved that the Department had a custom of varying from the advertisement; and I have already shown how they varied from the advertisement in this case. In fact, all the things which have recently occurred are just a repetition of the same old fraudulent practices which occurred heretofore.

I desire to call attention for just a few minutes, and then I shall conclude, to what has happened to the Government's money. I cannot go into all the figures, but I desire to call attention to what has happened to the Government's money. I made the statement a number of times that some bankers and some brokers have been getting it, and some individuals have been getting rich. Let me tell about a few of them. I might add that not so many are getting rich, because there are not so very many of them. The insiders are very few and very choice, but I will give the names of a few of them.

Let us find out what the bankers made out of some of these sales.

The North American, Inc., received for its stock $25,000,000 and paid to its bankers and brokers, for selling it, $4,864,726. Their brokers were the Bank of America and Keys.

The Aviation Corporation of Delaware received into its treasury from the sale of stock $35,000,000, and paid to its bankers and brokers for the sale of stock $5,000,000. They were W. A. Harriman & Co. and Lehman Bros.

The Transcontinental Air Transport received into its treasury $5,000,000, and the potential profit of the insiders, its bankers and brokers, on stock at the high price was $9,324,076; and the profits computed on the basis of actual sales by Blair & Co. were $1,141,280.

The stock sold by United Aircraft, for which money went into the treasury, amounted to $13,789,000. The National City Bank, through its associate, made $5,895,000; so that it got nearly $6,000,000, while the company got $13,000,000.

Now, let me go just a little further here.

The Western Air Express, routes 4 and 12, in 1930 made a net profit of $1,651,913.33. Its total investment at that time was $540,000. That represented a net profit during that year of 305 percent and a little more, which should have carried them, on an 8-percent basis, for 38 years.

The profits made by Western Air on their mail contracts from 1927 to 1933, inclusive, were more than $3,500,000. This is according to their Post Office Department reports.

Mr. Hanshue, the president of that company, bought 270 shares of that stock in 1925, 1926, and 1927. He paid $29,285 for it. He exchanged it for 6,750 shares of Western Air Express Corporation of Delaware in 1929. He sold 4,550 shares. He received, for the part that he sold, $225,362. He had left, however, 2,200 shares.

He paid, for 6,750 shares, $29,000, so that he actually realized as a profit $196,000, and he had 2,200 shares left. During that time—1925 to 1933—he drew salary and expenses of $305,265; and that is the company which made 305 percent in 1 year.

During that time Mr. Herbert Fleishacker came into the picture. Mr. Fleishacker is also a very generous contributor to the campaign fund out in California. Mr. Fleishacker bought 55 shares for $10,340 in 1927. He then sold them, and made a profit in 1929 and 1930 of $72,591. This was the company that was drawing its living from the Government.

I might mention there, incidentally, that this was a mere sideline to Mr. Fleishacker. He was also drawing some of the ocean-mail pay money. He made as profits and salaries out of that, in 6 years' time, $3,685,763.98, and he made $2,514,348 of that money without one nickel of investment. He did not invest a nickel, and made $2,514,348 on the subsidized shipping business, because he was one of the insiders. To make this total of $3,635,000 he had invested $185,000, but he had borrowed $50,000 of that back, and had received far more than that in salaries.

Now, let us take Pratt & Whitney. It started out with an investment of $1,000—5,000 shares at 20 cents a share. It exchanged those 5,000 shares, at 20 cents a share, for 868,000 shares of United Aircraft stock. That is the stock for which the public paid $97 a share when the insiders first turned it loose. So the owners of the Pratt & Whitney Co., which in 1927, according to the evidence, was an insolvent company—it owed more than it had—in 1929 got 868,000 shares of United Aircraft stock, or a total, at $97 a share, of $75,516,000, out of a $1,000 investment in a concern which 2 years before was worth nothing.

Who is going to pay for that? The taxpayer, of course, out of subsidies and contracts.

Mr. W. E. Boeing's orginal investment was $487,119. He ran it up to a value of $30,853,372 in stock of the United Aircraft which he received. He actually took profits of a little over $12,000,000, and had 36,000 shares left on hand. Bear in mind that that is the same company that sold their stock through the National City Bank. The only money they got in was the money that went through that institution; and they had to pay practically $6,000,000 to the bankers in order to get $13,000,000 into the treasury to take care of these gentlemen whose $1,000 investment grew to $75,000,000.

It might be interesting to know that the total investment of the Boeing Air Transport Co., according to the reports to the Post Office Department, was $750. That was the investment, $750. They issued some preferred stock, which was retired out of Post Office profits; but their common-stock investment, according to their reports to the Post Office Department, was $750. They bought that stock at 6 cents a share. This stock was then exchanged for United Aircraft stock. Now, note, the poor public had to buy it, and they paid $97 a share; but when the Boeing Air Transport stockholders exchanged their 6-cent shares, they received 106,433 shares of United Aircraft stock, which cost them a total of 47/100 of 1 cent per share—47/100 of 1 cent per share—and the market price of that stock in which $750 had been invested, at $97 per share, the day it opened up to the public, was $10,324,001.

Where did that come from? It came out of the United States Treasury, because that company with the $750 investment made a profit in 1928 of $891,629, or 118,884 percent on the investment.

In 1929 the company made a total profit of $1,657,897, or 221,053 percent on the investment.

In 1930 it made $1,141,700, a return of 152,227 percent on this $750 investment.

In 1931 it made $1,089,751, or 145,300 percent on the investment of $750.

In 1932 it made $731,410.62, or 97,521 percent on the $750 investment.

It seems to me that a company like that might be able to go along for a few months without having its hands dipped any deeper into the Public Treasury, unless the public just likes the pleasure of contributing to those who have, and taking money away from those who have not in order to give it to those who have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. All of which goes to show that these manipulators not only get the subsidies from the Government themselves, but they so use them as to get enormously larger sums from the public at large by the sale of stock.

Mr. BLACK. Why, certainly. The stockholders paid money for their stock. It did not all go into the Treasury. Only a small percentage of it went into the Treasury, because the very day the insiders turned it loose it sold for $97 a share; but do not ever think the insiders paid that.

They not only did not pay it, but they paid themselves $6,000,000 for the privilege of taking it at the low price, and then turned it loose on the public.

I am not sure that I placed in the RECORD the statement that Mr. F. B. Rentschler in July 1925 bought 1,375 shares of Pratt & Whitney aircraft stock at 20 cents a share, for $275, which grew like the prophet's gourd until in 1928 he had a stock dividend of 101,200 shares, and in 1928 he transferred that for 219,604 shares of the United Aircraft. That is the company which is a combination of the two.

The market price of the stock, on the day it was issued—this stock which cost him $275—was $21,301,588, and by the next year it had climbed up until the $275 had a potential value of $35,575,848.

During that time, from 1927 to 1933, the salary and bonus was $1,600,000, 1 year amounting to $430,000, and I have letters from people who work for Pratt & Whitney, whose names I cannot reveal because I would not want them to lose their jobs, whose wages during that very year were cut so low that some of them had to go out and ask for public charity from the Red Cross. In the face of that are we to be told that there is fairness or justice in a system which pours millions into the pockets of a few insiders and, at the same time, impoverishes and makes destitute the men who perform the work and do the labor without which the wheels could not revolve?

Mr. C. W. Deeds bought some stock for $40, and it grew and it grew until it was worth at its highest price $5,624,640, after it reached the United Air Transport Co.

I have stated for the RECORD the profits of the Western Air, according to their own reports, and because it has been stated on the floor that the T.A.T. and the Western Air have been losing a million dollars a year, I shall ask to have inserted in the RECORD a memorandum signed by Mr. Daniel M. Sheaffer on May 8, 1931, showing that the company was not losing money. It shows that it was in the black in 1931.

I have already shown the profits made by the Western Air Express. This memorandum is interesting also because it shows the bankers who actually pulled the strings which controlled each one of these different companies. Mr. Sheaffer did not intend this for the public. He intended it for the private eyes, evidently, of the Pennsylvania Railroad officials, and it actually tells who controls, and it does not say anything about the control of the little stockholders, about whom we have heard so much. It states the railroads and the companies which controlled.

I looked up today in a report a reference to one of these organizations which controls a large part of this stock—the Founders Corporation—and, as I recall it, it required five pages in the printed record to show the different stocks they owned—all the power companies and interlocking corporate affiliations of the large business enterprises of this Nation.

Senators should not permit themselves to be deceived. This is but a part of the same general fight which has to be made in this country if the plain, average, everyday American citizen is to have his rights preserved, to draw an honest wage. He cannot get it if it is taken away from him in excessive profits and high salaries and high bonuses. He will continue to be in the future, as he has been under this so-called "prosperity" of the past, actually the forgotten man as he walks up and asks for alms and for bread during the very years when some of the companies are making a thousand percent profit, and salaries and bonuses continue at the high rate, to be placed in the bulging pockets of those who already have more than they need.

What we have been fighting for has been to show to the country that this system of special privilege could not be permitted to continue if equity and justice and right are intended to prevail in the United States of America. It is with that idea that I have joined in the bill which has been offered. I believe fully and completely in the principle of placing this matter in the hands of some body which can act on it judicially, and grant rates according to what the companies ought to receive, according to the evidence.

I do not believe in granting any further subsidies to maintain companies which have already dropped their hands so deeply into the taxpayer's pockets that the taxpayer has been made to feel it.

I ask that this memorandum be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Pennsylvania Railroad has followed the development of commercial aviation since 1925, at which time the first private enterprise, namely, the National Air Transport, Inc., was organized for the carrying of United States mail between New York and Dallas via Chicago. In May 1928 Pennsylvania was instrumental in organizing the first transcontinental passenger service (in the form of rail-air), starting operation July 1929. It required over 1 year to construct the airway, airports, development of two-way radio and passenger-transport planes.

The company formed for the purpose—Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc.—issued 500,000 shares of stock, capital $5,000,000, of which $2,000,000 was set up as a corporate surplus for development and pioneering purposes, realizing that the first few years the operations would be carried on at a loss.

Pennsylvania's investment, 50,000 shares ($500,000), represented at that time a 10-percent interest, and from the beginning it has contributed substantially in the way of organization, operating help, advertising, and goodwill. The line is looked upon as a Pennsylvania enterprise, although our present interest equals but 6.7 percent.

During the past 5 years the development of commercial aviation in this country has consistently and rapidly progressed; for example:

(a) Air mail, 1926, 8,000 pounds; 1930, 8,000,000 pounds.
(b) Air passengers, 1926, 6,000; 1930, 400,000.
(c) Air express, 1926, 3,500 pounds; 1930, 718,000 pounds.
(d) Airports, present, 550 municipal and 564 commercial; total, 1,114.
(e) Airways, equipped for day flying, 30,000 miles; equipped for night flying, 16,000 miles.
(f) Scheduled daily flying, 75,857 miles.

The protecting franchises of air lines rests largely with the Federal Government through the mail contracts and the licensing of air lines by the Department of Commerce. Following shortly will come the certificates of public convenience by the States. Many States already have formed aeronautical commissions, and eventually such certificates will be granted the pioneering lines.

While airports and airways cannot at this time be preempted, being similar to the highways and waterways, they do afford certain potential franchises to the pioneering air lines through such ground facilities as are provided directly by the transportation companies, these being the emergency landing fields, radio communication, radio direction, airport contracts, and participation in or direct ownership of airports.

The manufacture of airplanes is experiencing some difficulty in that the potential supply is greater than the demand. This will always be more or less true, as it is with railroad equipment. Notwithstanding the design of air transport is improving, the efficiency is increasing, and the cruising speed advancing rather sharply in the larger planes. Metal transport planes will be available within the year cruising at 140 to 150 miles per hour. Of course, there is much to be looked for in the way of increasing the efficiency.

The cost of airplanes at the present time is greater than it will be at some time in the future, because there is no stabilization of design and planes go out more from obsolescence than they do from wear and tear, which naturally increases the depreciation rates and costs.

Considering the present competitive situation—air transport is related to rail transportation about 8 to 1 on cost of operation, while the ratio of speed approximates 3 to 1.

During the past 3 years the air lines have been solidifying their service by consolidation, and today four major operations exist: The Eastern Air Transport (North American Aviation, shown on map in green), the northern route (the United Aircraft & Transport Corporation, shown on map in yellow), the southern route (Aviation Corporation, shown on map in black), and the central route (Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., shown on the map in red).

The Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., is the operating company formed by Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., and the Western Air Express, Inc. The route is the one originally surveyed and laid out by T.A.T. and traverses the best airway in the country, and serves the most potential traffic territory.

From the point of view of the Pennsylvania, considering the large contribution which it has made in the pioneering effort, the situation that must now be met is the question of further participation in order to hold and protect its position and its relation to air transportation. To go forward means the control or a participation in control of T.A.T.; the latter at this time will require about $1,500,000, and looking to the future may require a much greater financial interest.

The Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., is now operating in black for the first time, and its successful operation—like rail transportation—depends on management and a diversified volume of traffic.

At the present time it is flying 9,000 miles a day, and without increasing the plant facility can readily fly 30,000 miles daily.

The operating company—

TRANSCONTINENTAL & WESTERN AIR, INC.

(Red line on map)

Started October 1, 1930, taking over the operating properties of Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., and Western Air Express, Inc., on their lines between Columbus and San Francisco, via Kansas City and Los Angeles. T.A.T. and W.A.E. inaugurated a competitive service July 1, 1929, carrying passengers only between these points, and both lines were losing considerable money.

Certain physical properties, together with cash, $682,500, have been turned in to the operating company, approximating $5,000,000. There will be 500,000 shares of stock issued, no par value, of which 47½ percent will be owned by each of the companies and 5 percent by Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation.

The operating company now performs a mail, passenger, and express service between New York and San Francisco, via Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Columbus, St. Louis, Tulsa, Kansas City, Albequerque, and Los Angeles, and Columbus to Chicago.

Estimated gross business per annum—

Mail	$3,500,000
Passenger	1,400,000
Express	100,000
Total	5,000,000
Estimated earnings over and above operating expenses and fixed charges	500,000

Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc.

Common stock (no par value):
746,893 shares, net worth	$5,905,847.47
Or per share approximately	8.00
Today's market price	7.25
Principal stockholders:	Shares	Percent
North American Aviation	103,400	13.9
Pennsylvania RR	50,000	6.7
Total	153,400	20.6

There are about 17,000 stockholders, of which 47 have holdings of 1,000 shares or more—a total of 290,232 shares, 38.86 percent.

Trancontinental Air Transport is now a holding company, its operations and line property having been turned over to Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., for a 47½-percent stock interest. Transcontinental Air Transport owns 10,000 shares of stock of Western Air, Inc.—a 4.8-percent interest.

WESTERN AIR EXPRESS, INC.

(Purple line on map)

Now operates between San Diego and Salt Lake City, carrying mail, passengers, and express, and owns 47½ percent stock interest in Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc.

Stock issued, 210,698 shares. Present market price, $15 per share.

Principal stockholders:	Shares	Percent
General Aviation (subsidiary of General Motors)	60,000	28.6
Aviation Corporation	26,000	12.4
National Aviation	16,000	7.6
T.A.T.	10,000	4.8
Control	112,000	53.4

This company, on its Salt Lake route, has been making money.

General Motors, through its subsidiary, General Aviation, owns working control of Western Air Express, Inc.

GENERAL AVIATION CORPORATION

A subsidiary of General Motors. Has approximately 1,000,000 shares of stock issued, no par value, representing $10,000,000 capital, of which General Motors owns 40 percent. Anthony Fokker owns and controls about 225,000 shares. These two holdings, approximately 625,000 shares, control. The company owns outright the Fokker Airplane Manufacturing Co. and 60,000 shares, or 28.6 percent, stock interest in Western Air Express. The business activity is manufacturing airplanes.

PITTSBURGH AVIATION INDUSTRIES CORPORATION

Shares issued (no par), 45,683, representing a capital of $1,146,575. There are 204 stockholders. Working control rests with about 10 stockholders. Has 5-percent interest in Transcontinental & Western Air; also operates passenger, mail, and express line Cleveland-Pittsburgh-Washington. Active leaders include Messrs. Humphrey, Hann, Hillman, R. K. Mellon, Monro, and Smith.

NORTH AMERICAN AVIATION

Stock issued, 2,100,000 shares (no par value), representing capital of $26,250,000. This stock is well distributed, there being 23,000 stockholders.

Working control appears to rest with Bancamerica interests, including Messrs. J. Cheever Cowdin and C. M. Keys.

This company owns 103,400 shares of T.A.T. stock—13.9 percent. In addition it has $15,000,000 invested in various aviation companies. It owns outright the Eastern Air Transport, operating a mail, passenger, and express service between New York, Atlanta, Jacksonville, and Miami. It also owns Sperry Corporation and Ford Instrument Co.

AVIATION CORPORATION

(Black line on map)

A $25,000,000 corporation. Working control rests with Lehman Bros. & Harriman. This company owns a number of air lines operating passenger, mail, and express service, including the southern transcontinental. It also owns 26,000 shares of Western Air Express—12.4 percent.

NATIONAL AVIATION

Investment trust; $3,250,000 capital. Working control rests with Grayson Murphy and American Founders.

This company owns 16,000 shares Western Air Express—7.6 percent. In addition it has a diversified holding of aviation stock, both manufacturing and transportation, but controls no particular company.

BENDIX AVIATION CORPORATION

General Motors has about $15,000,000 invested in this company. Its business is manufacturing instruments and parts, such as brakes, carburetors, etc.—about 75 percent automobile, 25 percent aviation.

UNITED AIRCRAFT & TRANSPORT CORPORATION

(Yellow line on map)

Preferred and common stock, $26,000,000; assets, $41,000,000. Working control rests with National City Bank group.

This company owns several air lines operating passenger, mail, and express service, which includes the northern transcontinental (Boeing Airplane & Transport Corporation and the National Air Transport) and a substantial interest in Pan American Airways, South America; also manufactures aircraft, engines, and propellers. Has no interest in competing air lines.

DANIEL M. SHEAFFER.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I shall now conclude my remarks simply by stating that I have presented here for the RECORD only a small part of the evidence. I have not attempted to present it all. To do so would require entirely too long a time.

I would not present it all for another reason. It is my judgment that this evidence should be presented, just as was the evidence in 1882, to a coordinate branch of the Government, if it desires it. If the criminal laws of our country have been violated, there should be trials and there should be punishment. There is no excuse and no reason why we should continue to talk about enforcing the law against the small law violator, and refrain from enforcing it against those who sit in the places of might and of power and of influence.

The time has come for a square deal to the people of this country with reference to their rights, and the only way it can be granted is to take away every special privilege that has been awarded to those who did not need it, and to let equal and exact justice reign in the United States of America.

Mr. President, I have submitted these facts simply as they came from the record. I could give more, but, in my judgment, these facts, if considered and understood, will convince the people of the United States, not because I have said them, but because they are the truth, that honesty and justice and fair dealing require that every one of these contracts should be canceled, and that the people of this Nation should have their mail carried upon an honest and solid foundation.

Mr. President, the chart I am inserting in the RECORD gives rather a complete picture of the aviation industry, dealing with the aviation dollar. It shows the percentage of the total amount paid each group of contractors for domestic air mail, foreign air mail, and for military airplane equipment that went to each group.

It is difficult to consider the air-mail aspects of aviation without also considering the military operations, because they are so closely identified and deal with our national defense, and the companies that have provided the air-mail service are also furnishing the military equipment. The interlocking of the directors and organizers of the companies forming the Aviation Trust would in case of an emergency place our national defense in the hands of a few masters of big business who have exploited air-mail and military contracts for their own selfish interests and have built up a monopoly within a monopoly, as shown by the chart.

This chart indicates our aviation industry is definitely headed for General Motors or E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. control. The chart indicates the process of gaining this control started during the World War in 1917, when the Aircraft Production Board was controlled by men closely identified with General Motors Corporation. These men are still directing our aviation policy.

This chart shows the trust is not satisfied with 93 percent of the money paid by the taxpayers of this country for domestic air-mail transportation, 98 percent of the amount paid for foreign air-mail transportation, and 87 percent of the money paid for military equipment, but they also control a large percentage of the airways lighting equipment, airplane accessory companies, investment trusts—dealing with aviation securities, airplane and liability insurance, dirigible operations, Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, and the National Aeronautic Association.

The record shows that the aviation monopoly, with its railroad and bank connections, has not been for a healthy growth of the industry. In 1929 there were 7,695 airplanes operating in this country and during that year they flew 104,336,560 miles and carried 2,995,530 passengers and there were 20,944 people employed in the transportation and flying operations. In 1932 the number of miles flown had been gradually reduced more than one half, the number of planes was only 1,979, and less than half the number of passengers were carried in all commercial services, and they were employing only one fifth the number of people.

The data upon which this chart is based is taken from information published in Poor's and Moody's reports, commencing with 1927, where some of the companies were first organized, up to and including the year 1933, from records of the Post Office Department, the Aviation Chamber of Commerce, the Department of Commerce, and from the military branches of the Government.

The complete control by a single financial group of the various elements available for national defense purposes, explosives, airplanes, and so forth, can readily be seen from a study of this chart.

The map on chart no. 1 is a consolidation of the maps published during each year from 1926 to 1933 inclusive, showing by various forms of hatching the growth of the service each year by awarded contracts and by extensions.

Table no. 1 is the annual growth of the Air Mail Service in graph form, showing the miles flown, pounds carried, and the number of cities served and the length of the route at the end of each year from 1926 to 1933, inclusive, and the amount of the extensions without bids shown in the hatched portion with total extensions and adjustments. This information was taken from the annual reports of the Postmaster General.

Table no. 2 shows the extensions made by Postmaster General Brown, without competitive bidding, each year from 1930 to 1933, inclusive.

The information on table no. 3 is taken from the annual reports of the Postmaster General and from chart no. 2 of the cost-ascertainment report of the Post Office Department for fiscal year 1932.

Table no. 4, showing the average haul of air mail, is taken from chart no. 3, cost-ascertainment report of Post Office Department, fiscal year 1932.

Table no. 5 is based on chart no. 3, cost-ascertainment report, Post Office Department, fiscal year 1932.

Table no. 6 is taken from table no. 2, cost-ascertainment report, Post Office Department, fiscal year 1932.

Table no. 7 is taken from chart no. 2, cost-ascertainment report, Post Office Department, fiscal year 1932.

Table no. 8 is a consolidation of table no. 1 of this chart and the addition of schedules taken from the schedules as in operation as of April 1, 1933.

Table no. 9 is a division of the total schedules among the five groups controlling the air-mail system, showing the amount of scheduled miles allotted each and the percentage of the total miles. Based on the authorized scheduled service when Mr. Brown retired as Postmaster General.

Table no. 10, showing the length of routes as of April 1, 1930, and the length of routes as of April 1, 1933, percentage of increase by the addition of miles and the percentage of increase by the addition of schedules. This information was taken from the Post Office Department Air Mail Service schedules of the two dates.

It will be noted from this chart that the number of cities served has not grown in proportion with either the miles of routes added to the Service or with the growth of the system by added schedules.

It will also be noted that notwithstanding the fact that the number of miles flown increased by one third from 1931 to 1932, the number of pounds of mail carried remained practically the same. The amount paid the contractors increased by $3,000,000, and the amount of cost other than that paid the contractors increased by over $3,000,000, and the revenue in 1931 was greater than in 1932.

It will also be noted that the schedules were greatly increased and that this could not have been justified because of a growth in the business, as it can readily be seen that the same number of pounds of mail carried in 1931 was carried in 1932 over a very much greater length of air-mail routes, showing a decrease in poundage when compared to the length of the routes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, since Monday last this body has had an opportunity of listening to honest men, honestly bent, with a knowledge of the facts gained by months of diligence and months of studiousness.

On Monday last the learned senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], in his vehement way, opened the subject.

Then followed that studious man who has been sitting with the special committee for months, the learned Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

I have tried for the past several months to sit between the learned Senator from Vermont, fortified by the learned Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and that everlasting student, that man who never knows what it is to quit, even when the night hours go into dawn, sitting on my right [Mr. BLACK]; and all day yesterday and today I have had the privilege of listening to him in one of the most finished arguments, in one of the most convincing speeches based upon records made under oath, to which it has ever been my privilege to listen.

On the one hand, there is a human conception of right as the Senators see it, based on a record as it was made. On the other hand, there is another angle of right, based on a record as the Senator saw it made. I hope and pray that in my humble way I may have been able to take from both these Senators something from which those who have lent their ears to this controversy may find a solution for it all.

I hold no brief for anyone connected with a fraud. For a solid week I listened to one of the most adroit men, the most careful, the best-memoried man that it has ever been my privilege to listen to under oath; and I have listened to a number under oath. He was careful—I would not use the word "cunning", because I do not think it should apply—but he had a memory that without notes and without preparation, so far as I know, placed him in a position where he could defend himself, and when called upon for a record he asked no one to furnish the record. He seemed to have it. Now and then it became my privilege to put in a question where I thought he might be weak. For a solid week I listened to the former Postmaster General of this country, and I am not going to hold a brief for him. Neither am I going to condemn any man in this body.

We were not appointed on that committee, which has now expended nearly $50,000, to convict any man; and I am not going to convict save and except as the evidence and the record may bring a conviction into the minds of the American people. I do not believe I was appointed on that committee to convict. I think I was appointed on that committee only to bring out a record, so that the Department of Justice and Federal agencies to whom trial might be accorded would take upon themselves the burden of conviction, or trial looking to conviction.

If Mr. Brown is guilty of a fraud, it is not for the Senate of the United States to render the verdict. I hope the Senate will never put itself in the position of being a trial jury, because if it does it will have lost the grandest thing that belongs to it, and that is the high and lofty position of an inquisitor looking to the development and promulgation and enactment of legislation that will overcome the frailties of mankind and will close the gaps, if gaps there be.

I hold no brief for the cancelation of the contracts unless those cancelations were warranted. As to whether or not they were warranted, some court having jurisdiction will determine, because those who hold contracts undoubtedly have ample means to go into a court of competent jurisdiction and have determined the question whether or not they were unlawfully deprived of the benefits of those contracts. But, Mr. President, the situation is that we are, and have been for months, working, investigating, trying to find the facts so that we might enact legislation, not that we might condemn. If condemnation there be, there are avenues and agencies for that purpose.

Now we are about to step out of one role into another.

The McNary-Watres Act came into effect, and under the McNary-Watres Act all these conditions arose. We now propose to enact new legislation that will take the place of at least part of the McNary-Watres Act; and we propose to do something more. Mr. President, we are only on the threshold of a science the limits of which only God Almighty can determine. The man who loses sight of our position today as a Nation, confronted with a developing science, loses sight of the biggest thing America ever knew.

Imagination belongs to youth. Imagination lingers and dwindles after the meridian of life. To youth belongs the development of this great science that must build us from a commercial standpoint and from a military standpoint as well.

I listened with interest to the learned Senator from Vermont, and I listened with rapt interest to the man by whose side I have worked for months, and with whose conclusions I have no argument, with many of whose conclusions I stand foursquare. But are we building, or are we merely tearing down? Was it the province of the special committee to tear down and leave the wrecks, or was it the province of the special committee to ascertain the facts and leave the conclusions for those agencies of government that had the right to execute, and then for us to build by legislation so that conditions which have developed may never again arise?

I want to pay a tribute now. Those conditions were developed by the zeal, by the midnight toil, by the everlasting toil and labor of the Senator from Alabama. There is no other member on the committee who deserves the credit he deserves. My opportunities did not give me the vantage ground. It was only a frail, meager support that I could give him as we went along. But until the Senate shall cease to exist, which I hope will never be, there will never come to it a man who will give so much of his energy, so much of his zeal, so much of his thought, or at least none will come who will give more of those qualities.

But, Mr. President, there must come something out of this that will be forgetful of the past and only used as a framework by which we will build the future. That legislation must come calmly, judiciously, and must be carefully prepared.

We are about to suspend for the day, I hope, and I want to say, as a closing thought which I may leave with this body tonight, that the future is before us with all the development it promises for the great science of aviation which is now in the making. Legislation should be enacted now. Have we the courage to do it now, or must we wait for some more investigation out of which there will come condemnations hand over hand? Have we not the courage now, delegated by the sovereign States, to say that we can legislate and use the past as the foundation on which to build for the future? The future must depend upon the legislation we shall enact, I hope at this session.

The future must depend upon the lines we shall write, I hope at this session, and not experimentally. We have now spent $50,000 experimenting. We have had a committee in session for months and months and months, and it is not now a question of experimenting. We have found where the law had its loopholes, and we have found where those who want to declare fraud and collusion might have opportunity to do so. Let us close them judiciously and carefully. Let us build something that will be worth while.

Mr. President, I listened to one ex-Postmaster General for a week and then I listened to the present Postmaster General. I shall not say a word save and except that I wished and I shall always wish that both those men might have been out of the dilemma and out of the conditions which were imposed upon them by a law enacted by the Congress. I think the present Postmaster General would use and has used the best judgment he could use with the advice he had. He said so under oath. "I relied upon the advice of counsel," he said repeatedly. Undoubtedly the other Postmaster General relied upon the advice of counsel. But why does the Postmaster General of the great Nation to which we belong, with all the political power conferred on him beforehand, have the power to throttle the commerce of America through the air?

By what right does the Postmaster General come into power and put his thumb on the throttle of the commerce of this country? The commerce of the country will go through the air in the years yet to come.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Nevada would like to suspend at this time?

Mr. McCARRAN. That would be agreeable to me.

THE PATH TO RECOVERY—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF STATE HULL

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on the 23d of April the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, a former member of this body, delivered an address which is both interesting and informative. I ask that the address may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PATH TO RECOVERY

ADDRESS OF THE HONORABLE CORDELL HULL, SECRETARY OF STATE, TO THE MEMBERS OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS, AT LUNCHEON, AT THE WALDORF-ASTORIA HOTEL, NEW YORK CITY, MONDAY, APRIL 23, 1934

Mr. President, gentlemen of the Associated Press, ladies and gentlemen, I know how seriously disappointed you are at the inability of the President of the United States to be present in person and greet you on this notable occasion. In conveying to you the President's sincere thanks for your cordial invitation and his keen regrets, I can assure you that his disappointment is at least equal to yours.

I naturally do not come here in any special substitute capacity for our honored President, and I shall, therefore, speak only my individual views. It gives me unusual pleasure to have this chance to pay the tribute of my admiration to an internationally known news-collecting agency. It has been my good fortune to know personally and well many of your members, and I am also happy to meet so many of the others present here. As an individual some of the time, and as an official most of the time, over a long period of years, I have had every opportunity to observe the operation and the activities of your organization, and frankly, in whatsoever part of the world I have come in contact with them, I have never hesitated to trust implicitly representatives of a well-established news agency. For collecting and disseminating accurate news, information of news value, and carefully selected news not calculated unnecessarily to create misunderstanding or discord between peoples or governments, your organization has built up a splendid reputation. All honor and all success to yours as to every other impartial news agency.

Freedom of the press is abridged almost universally today. In a number of important countries the press is controlled by the governments; in others by military or political censors; in still others by manufacturers of war materials, or by foreign subsidies. It is represented that the more serious threats against peace today are in those parts of the world where the press is controlled by government officials who have the power either to declare or to force war.

It is a matter of congratulation that this country has a free press. Its service to our people and our free institutions is of incalculable value. This very freedom of the press, however, imposes the duty and responsibility of avoiding or refraining from excesses, undue license, or abuses; for instance, the hasty transmission of unconfirmed news reports for publication and their verification later, often leads to unjust and disastrous results. Another instance of abuse is the publication of matter not in the interest of the general public but positively detrimental to it. It may be read not on account of any news value, but by reason of its sensational or scandalous or hurtful nature. This class of publicity always raises the difficult question of when is news not news.

The gathering and dissemination of news conducted on right lines is a powerful influence for international understanding, friendship, and peace.

Those associated with the press today have rarely had such an opportunity to develop an alert and informed public opinion, and never has there been a more crying need for this than today. Similarly they may be of inestimable service by aiding in disseminating such information as will enable the people in every country thoroughly to understand each other's viewpoints, conditions, aims, and aspirations. Because of the very important part the gentlemen of the press play in the conduct of our foreign relations, I am profoundly glad that they are as a class intelligent, thoughtful, hard working, and devoted to the best interests of the country as a whole.

Potent remedies have been applied to stay panic conditions, and the more acute ravages of the depression have thereby been checked. But although substantial improvement has definitely been noted, all nations are still passing through troublous times.

Some of our own citizens have become bewildered. "Where is the Government going?" they ask, and others more personal in their queries face their own future with grave forebodings and much uncertainty. The distressing and sobering effects of the depression have finally impelled some measure of stock taking. For until the present depression became serious in its destructive effects, people here and everywhere were on a joy ride. There was little thought during that period about such vital subjects as government, morals, and civilization. Standards of human conduct had reached the low ebb of modern civilization.

The trite saying that, after all, people get as good government as they are entitled to, is especially true where they have as direct a voice in governmental affairs as in the United States. I personally feel that most phases of human affairs have been on the decline. This deplorable trend challenges the attention of parents, churches, schools, newspapers, and governments. Our own country urgently needs a moral and spiritual awakening. I sometimes wonder whether the trumpet call of the ancient prophets will not be necessary to revive and restore moral and spiritual ideals. Any permanent governmental structure erected by a free people must rest upon solid moral and spiritual foundations. Sound liberal doctrines, humanitarianism, social justice, and social welfare can live and thrive only in a moral and spiritual atmosphere.

If the people of this country will indicate that these high ideals are their first objective, one could with all the more definiteness point to a sound economic philosophy and a wise political system which would constitute the most desirable agencies for the promotion of human rights and human welfare. The individual citizen, therefore, would logically inquire first where he himself is going. The second question of where the Government is going would then practically be answered in like terms and like spirit. No despotism, no autocracy, no arbitrary power of any kind can offer a substitute for sympathy, for distress, for the spirit of the good neighbor, and for the humanitarian desire to see that every individual has a full and fair opportunity in life. The latter feelings and convictions, too, can only find lodgment in the minds and hearts of those who are free.

Despite the unlimited number of those who profess to have an accurate comprehension of existing difficulties, we know that few really have a full grasp of them and that the ablest experts differ widely on many points. We, therefore, understand the necessity of proceeding with a mind open to all reasonable proposals, but with cautious concern in adopting them and studying their effects.

It was unavoidably necessary that our Government should formulate a program, not one, but really two programs, one set of measures designed to meet urgent crisis difficulties, the other generally helpful to the acute panic relief situation, but designed primarily to meet the ultimate objectives and the long-time economic requirements of the country. This latter program alone will assure a course of business recovery which will be full, stable, and durable.

The tendency of the average person is to confine his attention to the immediate policies and methods, to press for his idea of immediate relief without taking into due account the necessity of following broader lines permanently beneficial. Naturally, any portion of the temporary or emergency measures undertaken which is found to be good and wholesome, will be permanently retained, while other portions made necessary for the time being by acute depression conditions would naturally be modified or abandoned as the Nation emerges from these panic difficulties. Short-time and long-time programs in their operation involve no important conflict with each other. No one wishes a mere temporary or short-lived recovery by emergency methods; and no one wishes to pursue some distant ideal that would be inconsistent with the vital necessity of immediate recovery. The present administration has moved in as practical a manner as possible to correct chaotic conditions, calling for both emergency and permanent treatment.

We want business recovery, but we naturally want it based on sound policies and honest methods and practices. We would not gain permanently, for example, by restoring business to the level of 1926, if it should carry the seeds of its own destruction, such as the inevitable disaster of 1929. We should not forget the years of depression. We should remember them—and learn by them.

Would not the Government have been justly pilloried if it had not exposed and called for reforms of the outrageous financial manipulations of stock markets and security flotations, which stripped millions of individuals of their life savings and left a finance not worthy of public confidence? When aid for the unemployed, social justice, and social welfare constitute a first lien on our civilization, how could deliberate neglect to direct attention to these unequal and distressful conditions of those who toil, be justified? Was it not the plain duty of the Government forcibly to bring attention to these colossal abuses and unfortunate conditions, to suggest remedies, and to call upon those individuals and groups responsible to clean house?

Our social and political fabric might not be able to stand another such catastrophe within a few years. Unfortunately, many are clamoring for any brand of business recovery, regardless of whether it might be temporary or unsound or partial in its application. It behooves every citizen of business integrity, who has a respect for his government and a regard for the well-being of his fellow men, to lend all possible aid to a policy of business recovery as broad as the material, social, moral, and political welfare of humanity.

This sort of business and general economic recovery should, of course, contemplate the retention unimpaired and the possible extension of our structure of free government. There is no higher, finer objective than the "preservation and promotion of the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" to every individual.

The people cannot give consideration too careful and intelligent to existing problems. The world today is filled with careless utterances and muddled thinking. There is also to an astonishing extent a narrowness of vision and a lack of practical grasp on the part of the individual. It is imperative in time of grave crisis that heed should be given both to new methods of treatment required by new conditions and to the unassailable teachings of past experience.

Let us neither minimize nor magnify the extent and nature of the political and economic transition during the war period, and the amazingly difficult problems resulting. Many countries have proven incapable of meeting the challenge thus presented. It would be inconceivable for a great young country like ours to falter. It is marvelously equipped with ability, with resources, and with the highest civilization of all time to meet this challenge, and in meeting it to render humanity here and everywhere incomparable service.

Nations should not blink the ugly facts still facing them, despite the degree of recovery thus far experienced. The unemployed in the important countries exceed 25,000,000; international indebtedness amounts to $50,000,000,000 or more, of which a large part is in default. Disordered currencies competing in the movement toward depreciation; changing monetary standards; vast armament rivalries, necessitating huge expenditures with resulting abandonment of external debts, both public and private, are notorious world conditions. Abnormal shrinkage of production and trade, and of prices and values, both domestic and international, still handicaps desirable business recovery everywhere.

Vicious methods and practices, evils and abuses, wild extravagances, far-reaching scandals, crimes, and many other outrageous violations of all ethics and honesty have crept into the financial and economic affairs of the Nation. Both the purpose and the result have been to enable the authors to rob, plunder, and impoverish, not only the masses but each other as well. Humanitarian considerations and principles of equality and fair dealing have been flouted. The social and general economic distress which has followed cannot be exaggerated. In their suffering and despair peoples in some countries have rushed to the extreme of destroying liberal political institutions and have set up dictatorships and despotisms instead.

It is my unalterable opinion, I repeat, that in our own country we can and should effect economic and social rehabilitation to the extent dictated by policies of sound liberalism, and at the same time preserve all the fundamentals of popular government. This is the very essence of the new deal. It is true we are living in a new age with new conditions, calling for new remedial methods, especially when compared with the early period of our history. I am confidently assuming that while conditions and remedies are different, we still have the same kind of men as Jefferson and Madison and Jackson—men deeply imbued with the principles of free government, of honor, and of love for humanity—to make wise and careful application of all remedial policies and programs. I know the best traditions of this Republic will thus be preserved; that liberty, justice, equality, and the progressive well-being of the masses will be thoroughly safeguarded and fully promoted.

Our forefathers, guided by thousands of years of experience, were of the profound belief that continued human betterment largely depends upon the extension of free government, based on popular representation and constitutional safeguards. We of the present age are not unmindful of the fact that our democratic Republic, which extends popular government further than any other government in the past, is still on trial.

Our present efforts may yet prove to be the final test of that momentous question, whether or not man is capable of self-government. I have confidence that an aroused, intelligent, and patriotic people will measure up to this great task. Failure is unthinkable.

I am an optimist. I have faith in the wisdom, the vision, the patience, and the enterprise of the American people. I believe that this Nation of high civilization will, in the providence of God, advance to still greater heights, with a more permanent system of free government, and to a condition of more comfort, benefit, and security to the common man. In pursuing these objectives, the gains in democracy and liberalism secured at such an awful cost during recent centuries, need not and must not be jeopardized. My optimistic views that this can and will be done are greatly strengthened by the progress in the work of economic and business restoration as carried on in this country during the past 12 months.

I make this statement because of my profound conviction that the administration of President Roosevelt is conscientiously, ably, and patriotically grappling with the terrific problems of recovery.

and that its fairness and its friendly interest can be absolutely depended upon by industry, by agriculture, by mining, and by labor. This administration has to its credit a brilliant record of practical accomplishment in the face of difficulties and complications without a parallel in peace time. It is entitled to the confidence and cooperation of the country. The vast work of restoration will be long, tedious, and technical. It will tax the patience of the most patient person. It requires a degree of energy, ingenuity, and constructive capacity far beyond the demands of war time. The incalculable extent to which most phases of human affairs have been set back must be realized by the people.

Many of the chaotic conditions through which we have been passing are unprecedented in their nature and extent. The Federal administration, in my judgment, has pursued the wisest possible course in attempting their solution. The Government instead of proceeding rashly or hastily from one proposed remedy to another has on the contrary, carefully measured each step. It has felt its way with the utmost caution, in the light of experience either past or present.

While some countries elsewhere sought to deal with the existing crisis by indefinitely discarding individual freedom, we here have in no sense undertaken or planned to do so. Naturally, even more so than in war time, it was necessary to centralize power; but that power was asked as a free and revocable grant, from the representatives of a free people, exercising a free choice. It was necessary to bring unity of effort out of many conflicting interests. Unity was secured by common consent through constitutional means and under constitutional safeguards. It was necessary to employ new methods; but those methods were forged from the common desires of communities the continent over. We enthroned no dictators; we made no secret trades with private, self-interest groups; we merely drew together the different and scattered forces of democracy into a common effort, openly conceived, openly discussed, openly chosen.

The primary objective is recovery on a sound and permanent basis. We propose to care for the unemployed and the unfortunate; but we should find a system not merely of relief but under which relief shall be, insofar as humanly achievable, unnecessary. That system, the fundamentals of which I have already outlined, should comprise, in brief, every element and factor in a program calculated to work fairness, equity, and every reasonable benefit, comfort, and security to employees.

The purpose also is to eliminate and destroy the major evils, abuses, manipulations, and other unfair practices in finance and commerce and industry to the detriment of legitimate business, of labor, and of the general public. This objective contemplates reasonable hours, reasonable wages, and the maximum of employment for labor under the wholesome and favorable conditions to which the partnership of labor with capital fairly entitles it. It contemplates entirely reasonable profits to industry—not excessive, or sweated, or oppressive. People should not get rich by exploiting each other. The exploitation of one person by another spells economic and social disaster.

I cannot here discuss the functioning of each organization created for the purpose of developing fair and friendly relationship between employer and employee—industry and labor. The primary purpose of these new agencies is to develop mutually acceptable codes of fair dealing and of satisfactory conditions governing the relationship between different industries, units of the same industry, and labor.

We do not desire public regimentation; but we should not permit irresponsible regimentation by small private groups in their own selfish interests. Self-regulation should be the true policy. Its success, of course, would rest with those individuals, groups, and industries affected. Their responsibility would increase as the Nation emerges from the operation of those methods and agencies for panic recovery which are temporary. Most discerning persons will readily recognize, at least for the present, the necessity for more substantial governmental supervision here, restraint there, and control or other form of cooperation at some other point in the general industrial and economic situation than before the war. But in any event, over small business the sole objective should be complete freedom, subject only to essential limitations such as minimum wages and decent hours and conditions of work. The small business man, unlike the great corporation, is an individual; and his individuality is too great an asset to be endangered. In no circumstances should the Nation adopt either autocracy or autarchy as an ultimate or long-time objective. The evils of paternalism will not be permanently tolerated by a free and self-reliant people.

Another objective is the preservation of the national credit, the balancing of the Budget as early as practicable, provision for adequate credit, and the avoidance of schemes of uncontrolled or uncontrollable inflation. We should favor a policy that will result as early as may be practicable in permanent exchange stabilization and permanent monetary arrangements. But the topsy-turvy financial and commercial conditions everywhere compel the approach of the final stages of such problems carefully and gradually. A wide distribution of goods affords the most healthful and satisfactory prosperity to the masses. Undue or abnormal raising of prices conflicts with this objective. A moderate level of prices that is stable, and preferably fixed by fair competition, meets this condition. It is frequently alleged that certain clauses in the Security Act are too drastic. Whatever may be the truth of such statements, I do know that during the mushroom prosperity period leading up to the 1929 collapse, many billions of dollars of securities without one dollar of physical properties behind them were poured out upon the innocent and confiding public, which later has taken this huge loss. It is imperative, therefore, that necessary prohibitions be thrown around the business of the security distributor, and he should be the last to complain. If, upon fair and searching examination, some liberalization of one or more of the alleged drastic clauses in the Security Act seems advisable, in my view affirmative action should be taken without delay.

Still another objective is the restoration of normal commercial intercourse with our foreign neighbors, on terms of friendship, equality, and mutual profit. World standards of living are bound further to decline rather than rise, without the restoration and expansion of international trade. Industry and business throughout the world could scarcely be more hopelessly fettered. So many restrictions and impediments hinder production and distribution that many millions throughout the world are obliged to live upon charity or government relief.

The problems of international commerce are at the very core of this country's economic dilemma. The situations to be met in all fields of American life and the policies that will be required will depend vitally on whether our trade relationships with the rest of the world can be sustained and revived, or whether they will be left further to deteriorate. If American foreign commerce dies, if the trade of the world is left to other countries which are willing to recognize its importance, this country will have to grapple with the problem of surplus production of many of our main agricultural products. It will have to absorb the people engaged in producing and to take care of the communities dependent upon them. Obviously there is a vital connection between international commerce and our whole agricultural program. This connection equally applies to our surplus-producing industry.

No less vital is the connection between international commerce and our national finances. The state of our international trade will be an important factor in determining the ultimate value of our currency. The fate of our ports and of our merchant marine, the welfare of many of our railways and domestic lines of transportation, the employment of millions of people, will directly or indirectly depend inevitably upon our international commerce, upon the recovery of the trade of the world. This also will affect, in large measure, the amount of relief funds which our Government must provide and the undertaking of public works which the Government must finance. In short, if international trade is not restored, the domestic burdens of increased financial relief, increased unemployment, and increased restrictions on American agriculture and industry are inevitable.

The present movement in the direction of extreme economic nationalism is choking the trade of the world. If long continued it spells disaster. Many important countries cannot sustain themselves without the importation of vitally needed raw materials or foods or manufactured goods and the corresponding sale abroad of their manufactures or raw materials. The strangling of foreign trade means for them economic ruin. The financial and economic collapse of these nations in turn must react disastrously upon the home production and home prices and home markets of every other nation, including our own.

The approaching break-down is intensified and embittered by arbitrary and changing trade restrictions leading to further uncertainty, fear, and retaliation. Economic strife, because of the bitterness engendered, leads directly to competitive armaments, and once the race in armaments has begun the road lies open to bankruptcy and to war.

It becomes all important, as this Nation emerges from panic conditions, to combine with the permanent parts of the present domestic economic program a program of international economic cooperation, based on a more liberal commercial policy and steadily increasing mutually profitable trade with other nations. May I here remark that in July 1932 at the University of Virginia I undertook to interpret the economic provisions of the platform adopted at the time of President Roosevelt's nomination. After reciting the three methods proposed for attacking the problem of liberalizing trade obstructions and restoring international trade, I said: "That platform defines a program of policies as broad as our expanded domestic and international economic interests. It assumes that there is a practical middle course between extreme nationalism and extreme internationalism, and while disclaiming the latter, it challenges the former as practiced in this country since 1920."

It is gratifying to observe that this formula is being received more favorably from month to month. Human progress has been chiefly promoted by middle course policies and programs. It is never wise, especially in a time of crisis, to hearken too much to the extreme reactionary or the extreme radical, the extreme pessimist or the extreme optimist, the extreme deflationist or the extreme inflationist, the extreme pacifist or the extreme militarist.

I believe implicitly that the unquenchable spirit which inspired those who waged the 500-year contest for Anglo-Saxon liberty, still exists in the minds and hearts of our American people. I love to read the story of those irrepressible movements that brought on Magna Carta, habeas corpus, the petition of right, the settlement act, and the bill of rights in England, and our own Declaration of Independence and Constitution. I believe that the lessons of courage and patriotism, of love and loyalty to the principles of civil, religious, and political liberty, still animate and inspire my fellow citizens, and that their support can be counted on for any program of recovery, restoration, and rehabilitation which embraces the rights and the liberties of the individual and the progressive improvement of the social and material condition of the masses.

REGULATION OF FOOD AND DRUGS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. President, many communications have reached me during the past few weeks from interested constituents and business organizations protesting against the passage in its present form of Senate bill 2800, "A bill to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes", now on the Senate Calendar."

Practically all of my correspondents are entirely in accord with the intent and purpose of the bill so far as it seeks to protect public health and public interest, and provide proper control of the distribution of drug and food products, but they all insist that certain of its provisions are impractical and unenforceable unless amended. It is further insisted that if legislation of this character is to be enacted, it should be so drawn as to not only protect the public but also to do no injustice to legitimate business.

At the request of one of the leading business houses of Baltimore I am sending to the desk, and would ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, certain amendments to be proposed to the bill. They are 14 in number, suggested by the Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America, Inc., of 205 East Forty-second Street, New York City. This organization is a trade association of leading and representative manufacturers of food and other grocery products. The latter products include soap and other cleansers also subject to the provisions of Senate bill 2800, as well as cosmetics. The association approves a constructive revision of the Federal Food and Drugs Act, to strengthen its protection of the consuming public, and especially its extension to prohibit false advertising. It asks that these amendments be added to the bill and urges their acceptance.

My request to have them printed in the RECORD is for the purpose of bringing them to the attention of the Members of the Senate in printed form, with the hope that they will be found of sufficient merit to receive consideration when the proposed legislation is taken up for action.

To each amendment offered there is a supporting statement which I also desire to have printed in the RECORD, together with the names of the officers of the Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America, Inc., and a list of its membership in the various States, which will be found as an annex to the amendments I am submitting.

There being no objection, the proposed amendments were ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and, with the accompanying statements, to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1. OFFICIAL NAME OF ACT

Section 1, page 1, lines 3–4: revise this section to read (the amendment is italic)—

"That this act may be cited as the 'Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act'."

Supporting statement

1. Section 1 now reads—"That this act may be cited as the 'Federal Food and Drugs Act'."

2. This name is inaccurate and misleading. For the revised act has been extended also to include cosmetics. And its official name should indicate that fact.

AMENDMENT NO. 2. DEFINITION OF FOOD

Section 2 (a), page 2, lines 1–3: Revise this paragraph to read—

"The term 'food' includes (1) all articles used for food, drink, or condiment by man or animal; and (2) all articles used for confectionery and chewing gum by man; and (3) any substance or preparation intended for use as an ingredient in the composition of any such article."

Supporting statement

1. Section 2(a) now reads: "The term 'food' includes all substances and preparations used for, or entering into the composition of, food, drink, confectionery, or condiment for man or other animals."

2. This amendment is effective, first, to make the definition more accurate and exact. For example, confectionery is only used by man. It is effective, second, to exclude from this definition any substance or preparation used as an ingredient of food, if and to the extent it is sold for a nonfood use. Numerous substances and preparations in this category are used for both food and nonfood purposes. Clearly the act should not apply to such substances and preparations where they are intended—that is, sold—for a nonfood purpose exclusively. And as the definition now stands, the act does so. This "intended" limitation is sound and practically necessary in the circumstances and is parallel to the similar limitation in the definition of "drug" in section 2 (b).

3. As so amended the definition is comprehensive.

AMENDMENT NO. 3. DEFINITION OF ADVERTISING

Section 2 (j), page 3, lines 16–18: Revise this paragraph to read (the amendment is in italics)—

"The term 'advertisement' includes all advertisements and all representations of fact or opinion therein or commercially disseminated in any manner or by any means other than by the labeling."

Supporting statement

1. Section 2 (j) now reads—"The term 'advertisement' includes all representations of fact or opinion disseminated in any manner or by any means other than by the labeling."

2. This amendment is effective to make the definition more accurate and exact. As it now stands, the definition is so broadly and loosely drawn as to include, for example, the correspondence between a manufacturer and his director of research with respect of the experimental development of a new product.

3. As so amended the definition is comprehensive and parallel to that of "labeling." And it preserves the inclusion of all representations of fact or opinion, which the committee emphasizes (Com. Repts. 3 and 16.)

4. Because this act will serve as a model for similar State legislation accurate and exact definitions in it are highly important.

AMENDMENT NO. 4. DEFINITION OF FALSE ADVERTISING

Section 9 (a), pages 15–16: Add at the end, in line 2 of page 16, the following new sentences—

"No representation concerning any value or effect of a food or cosmetic shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if such representation is supported by substantial scientific opinion or by demonstrable scientific facts. This paragraph shall not be construed or applied to prohibit harmless trade puffing."

1. Section 9 (a) now reads: "An advertisement of a food, drug, or cosmetic shall be deemed to be false if it is false or misleading in any particular relevant to the purposes of this act regarding such food, drug, or cosmetic. Any representation concerning any effect of a drug shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if that representation is not supported by substantial medical opinion or by demonstrable scientific facts."

2. This amendment is effective, first, to add an interpretative statement as to food and cosmetics, which is essentially the same as that now in the section with respect of drugs. The latter statement is properly affirmative and the former statement is necessarily negative in character. Clearly, if the one statement is justified in this section, then the other is also. For there is no basic difference between them in principle and they are each and equally sound in public policy. This last because if a representation is supported, as provided in either case, it is not false in fact. And both interpretative statements have a real practical value. The value of clarifying the practical meaning and application of a broad law against false advertising, necessarily couched in general terms, a clarification which promotes due compliance with this law and its due administration and enforcement.

3. This amendment is effective, next, to add a further interpretative statement exempting harmless trade puffing. It is a harmless trade exaggeration, in the nature of a prideful or fanciful or figurative statement. While technically untrue, it deceives and harms no one. In illustration: "There is nothing any man or woman likes better than pancakes"; "as marvelously light and delicate as a cloud"; "clothes that are as fresh as a breeze"; "good as gold"; "like velvet"; "light as air"; "stands alone"; "makes housework a joy." This amendment is justified for four reasons. The first reason is that without it this law literally prohibits harmless trade puffing. The second reason is that this law is intended only to prevent harmful trade deceit. The third reason is that harmless trade puffing is permitted by common law and judicially sanctioned under the Federal Trade Commission Act, which prohibits every unfair method of competition and therefore that of false advertising (Ostermoore & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 16 Fed. (2d) 962). Hence the amendment simply validates under this new false advertising law what is now valid under the existing false advertising law. The fourth reason is that the amendment does not lessen the protection of the new law. For (a) this law remains prohibitory of all harmful trade puffing; (b) its administrator is left free to say what trade puffing is harmful; and (c) in a proceeding under it against trade puffing, the burden is upon him who made it to prove that it is harmless. Harmless trade puffing is a common and valuable advertising practice, as old and as wide as advertising itself. And to ban it is to needlessly place advertising under an undue restriction of it.

4. These interpretative statements are an important part of section 9 (a). Not only because of their own practical value, but also because this act will serve as a model for similar State legislation. And the enactment of 49 false advertising laws, subject to 49 independent administrative constructions, will present a difficult practical problem to the national or interstate advertiser. And the more exact such laws are the less will be their problem.

AMENDMENT NO. 5. DEFINITION OF MISBRANDING

Section 6 (a), page 7, lines 20–26: Add at the end, in line 26, the following new sentence:

"No representation concerning any value or effect of a food or cosmetic shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if such representation is supported by substantial scientific opinion or by demonstrable scientific facts."

Supporting statement

1. Section 6 (a) now reads: "A food, drug, or cosmetic shall be deemed to be misbranded, if its labeling is false or misleading in any particular. Any representation concerning any effect of a drug shall be deemed to be false under this paragraph if that representation is not supported by substantial medical opinion or by demonstrable scientific facts."

2. This amendment of the definition of misbranding is precisely the same as that suggested in amendment no. 4, as to the definition of false advertising. And the statement supporting that amendment likewise supports this amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 6. FILL OF CONTAINER

Section 7 (a), page 9, lines 3–6: Substitute a colon for the period in line 6 and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That under subdivision (1) of this paragraph reasonable variations shall be permitted, as to the fill of a container, by regulations prescribed by the Secretary."

Supporting statement

1. Section 7 (a) (1) defines a food as misbranded "if its container is so made, formed, or filled as to mislead the purchaser", etc. It is directed to prevent the deceptive slack filling of a container. This amendment is effective simply to provide for the allowance of reasonable variations in fill. It is necessary because variations in fill occur by reason of discrepancies in the filling process and as a result of the subsequent expansion or shrinkage of food, which variations are due to a mechanical or natural or other cause beyond reasonable control by the manufacturer using the best factory practice. In illustration: Because baking powder is subject to subsequent expansion caused by moisture absorption its container must be filled accordingly. Whereas corn flakes are subject to subsequent volume shrinkage caused by their shaking down in commercial transit and handling. The manufacturer cannot control either consequence. There is no slack filling in either case. And the net weight is correctly stated in each instance.

2. It is no answer to say: "This provision is not intended to authorize action against packages of food which are filled as full as practicable under good manufacturing practice" (Com. Rep. 9), for without this amendment there is no assurance of a reasonable variation allowance. Moreover, if such an allowance will be made, there can be no objection to a provision for it.

3. This is essentially the same situation as that presented by the requirement in section 6 (b) that packaged food be labeled to declare its net weight, measure, or numerical count. To this requirement is added the provision that reasonable variations shall be permitted by regulations prescribed by the Secretary. The reason for that provision is precisely the reason for this provision. And they are each and equally necessary.

AMENDMENT NO. 7. DECLARATION OF NET WEIGHT, ETC.

Section 6 (b), page 8, lines 1–8: Revise the proviso in lines 5–8 to read as follows (the amendment is italic):

"Provided, That under subdivision (2) of this paragraph, reasonable variations shall be permitted, and exemptions as to small packages, soap, and other cosmetics reasonably exempted, shall be established, by regulations prescribed by the Secretary."

Supporting statement

1. Section 6 (b) (2) requires every cosmetic in package form to be labeled with an accurate statement of its net weight, measure, or numerical count, subject to the aforesaid proviso without the additions in italics.

2. This amendment is effective, first, to exempt all soap from that requirement. For the reason that soap is subject to great variation in weight caused by the subsequent evaporation of its moisture content, which the manufacturer cannot control. Wherefore the requirement is impracticable with respect of it. Soap is customarily sold on a unit basis, i.e., by the bar, cake, piece, or package. And such sale is not deceptive.

3. This amendment is effective, second, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to exempt other cosmetics from that requirement where such exemption is reasonably justified in the circumstances. As manifestly it is justified in some circumstances.

AMENDMENT NO. 8. COMPULSORY LABEL DISCLOSURE OF INGREDIENTS OF FOOD

Section 7 (f), page 10, lines 9–21, strike out subdivision (2) requiring such disclosure. That is, strike out "(1)" in line 8, insert a period after "b" in line 9, and strike out the remainder of this paragraph.

Therefore also strike out the provisions in section 25, page 41, lines 15–21, relating to and dependent upon the aforesaid subdivision (2). That is, strike out "(1)" in line 12, insert a colon after "direct", in line 15, and strike out all after "direct", in line 15 down to "Provided further", in line 21.

Supporting statement

I

1. Section 11 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a definition and standard of identity for any food by regulation. Section 7 (f) applies to every food for which no definition and standard of identity have been so established or which does not purport to be or which is not represented as a food for which a definition and standard of identity have been so established. And subdivision (2) of section 7 (f) requires that each such food shall be labeled to disclose all its ingredients, described by their common or usual names, and stated in the order of their preponderance by weight, subject to the exceptions later noted. The amendment is to strike out this requirement entirely.

2. The exceptions to this requirement are four in number. The first exception is that in so declaring the ingredients, spices, flavors, and colorings, other than those sold as such, may be designated as spices, flavors, and colorings without naming each. The second exception is that to the extent compliance with this requirement is impracticable because of normal variations in ingredients or their quantities, usual in good manufacturing or packing practice, reasonable variations from the stated order (but not list) of such ingredients shall be permited by regulation. The third exception is that exemptions as to packages of assorted food shall be established by regulation. All the aforegoing exceptions are contained in subdivision (2) of section 7 (f). Their practical application is clear and the supporting reasons are stated in the committee report (p. 12). These exceptions need no comment. For however valuable they are, per se, they leave this requirement essentially unimpaired from the standpoint of its fundamental objections.

3. The fourth exception is contained in section 25, page 41, lines 15 to 21. It is that upon the approval of this revised act the Secretary is authorized to designate food having common or usual names and to exempt such food from this requirement for a reasonable time to permit the formulation, promulgation, and effective application of definitions and standards of identity therefor as provided by the act. This exception must be read in the light of these facts: (a) The revised act is effective 12 months after the date of its approval; and (b) this 12 months' period is undoubtedly an insufficient time within which to establish definitions and standards of identity for all food having a common or usual name. Therefore it is effective to authorize the Secretary to exempt such food from this requirement during the period intervening between the effective date of the act and the effective date of definitions and standards of identity for such food.

4. This exception invites comment directly pertinent to the amendment requested. The first comment is that it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to completely exempt from this requirement all food sold under a common or usual name. That name is not defined. But it plainly means any and every name under which a food is commonly or usually sold. For example, bread, butter, crackers, flour, soup, etc., or any class thereof, such as graham bread, renovated butter, whole-wheat crackers, gluten flour, pea soup, etc. It plainly does not mean an exclusive proprietary name. Consequently a food sold under such a name and not sold under a common or usual name is outside this exception and remains subject to this requirement. The second comment is ancillary to the first. It is that therefore the Secretary is authorized to exempt nearly all food from this requirement. For food is sold under a common or usual name, as a rule; and its sale under a proprietary name exclusively is an incidental exception to the general rule. The third comment is that this authority to exempt is, however, discretionary and not mandatory in character. Therefore there is no statutory assurance that it will be exercised or to what extent. The implication is that it will be exercised to an extent now unknown. The fourth comment is that in any event this requirement is undoubtedly temporary in duration with respect of food sold under a common or usual name. It is clear upon the face of section 11 that it will be ultimately used to establish definitions and standards of identity for all such food, because that is its manifest purpose. The exception in section 25 evidences this fact. And Mr. Campbell confirms it. For in his testimony before the reference committee he said (p. 571): "Now in the ordinary course of the work of the Department undoubtedly there will be standards for different types of foods now known commonly under a certain name", etc.

5. Consequently the food-manufacturing industry is confronted with the following situation: This requirement applies to all food sold under a common or usual name, for which no definitions and standards of identity have been established under section 11, and it may be temporarily enforced against such food to an extent now unknown; this requirement applies to all food sold under an exclusive proprietary name and not under a common or usual name and it will be enforced against such food, unless and until the latter is subject to a definition and standard of identity established under section 11. Therefore Congress and the industry must deal with the requirement accordingly. Wherefore the following argument against it.

II

1. This requirement is not necessary to effectuate the fundamental purposes of the revised act, with respect of food. They are: To safeguard the public health, by prohibiting product adulteration comprehensively defined; and to protect the purchasing public from injurious trade deceit, by prohibiting product misbranding and misadvertising comprehensively defined. This is patently and demonstrably so. For by its injunctions against adulteration the act outlaws every food which is dangerous or injurious to health. And by its injunctions against misbranding and misadvertising the act outlaws every food label or advertisement which is false or misleading in any particular. Therefore the circle of the public protection of the act, in its fundamental conception, is complete without this requirement. And any argument to the contrary is clearly fallacious.

2. This requirement is injurious and grossly unfair to the manufacturer of superior food made under a private formula. (As used herein, the term "private formula" also means a secret process.) For it is practically effective to deprive him of the trade value of that formula, to which he fairly has a proprietary right in the circumstances. For it is also practically effective to permit, create, and support unfair competition against him. Competition unfair because it involves the deceptive simulation of his product and the successful palming off of competing products as identical to his own, which they are not. That this requirement is potential and effective for such a business and trade consequence is plain upon its face and demonstrably certain in practice. By reason of two compelling facts. The first fact is that competing food may be labeled with an identical ingredient statement, in exact and correct compliance with this requirement, and yet be wholly different in every essential attribute of identity, namely, composition, quality, and value. This because they may differ in the variety, quality, quantity, and proportion of their respective ingredients and in the definitive process of their manufacture. In which event, while labeled as identical products, they are actually nonidentical products in all basic food respects. And one may be a product of the lowest grade and the other a product of the highest standard in quality and value. The second fact is that the moment a superior food, made under a private formula and occupying the, or a, leading sales place in its class, is labeled with the comprehensive and rigidly ordered ingredient statement prescribed by this requirement, all the natural and unnatural forces of competition will immediately and irresistibly work for an identical statement upon the label of competing food, including, and especially, inferior food. This because such an identical label statement is an effective means to easily, cheaply, and successfully sell the inferior food as identical to the superior food and thus to exploit its reputation and to misappropriate its goodwill and market. In which event the consequence is the business injury and the unfair competition stated, and a situation that plays directly into the hands of unscrupulous manufacturers. Any denial of this consequence is at war with the facts and the experience of competition.

In illustration: A manufacturer develops an improved food, outstanding in quality and value, under a private formula. It is the product of his extraordinary knowledge of the science of its production, a knowledge gained by costly research, long experience, and specialized manufacture. Its superior quality is derived from a better formula and process, a discriminating selection of the best ingredients and their expert blending, and a perfection of the art of their preparation into the finished product. Its superior value consists of a higher dietary and biological value and resides in other characteristics of superior food, such as taste, flavor, palatability, etc. While an analysis will more or less disclose its composition, such analysis will not disclose its definitive formula and process, which are the key to its superior quality and value. And to such formula and process, originated by him, the manufacturer fairly has a proprietary right under the most elementary conception of equity. And he is fairly entitled to the full business and trade benefit of that right. For this food he creates and maintains a broad market, by merchandising action necessarily expensive. Because of its genuine merit it enjoys a wide, continuous, and increasing consumption. Because of its superior merit it comes to the, or a, leading sales place in its class. It is, of course, sold in a competitive market. Its success results in keen competition against it, sharply seeking in every available way to displace it. Such competition includes that of inferior products having the price advantage of their inferiority. They are inferior because they are not made by the improved formula and process of the superior product and also, perhaps, because they are deliberately cheapened for a price advantage. To all this competition the manufacturer of the superior food cannot object, no matter how severe it is, since it is simply the normal working of the competitive system ordained by public policy. He can only object to this competition, if and to the extent it is unfairly pursued. And against unfair competition he has a twofold protection. It is first the legal protection given by the common law, the Federal Trade Commission Act and the other applicable statutes. An essential protection of great value. It is second the practical protection given by the privacy of his formula and process and by the resulting fact that the label of his product contains no identifying composition statement which can be copied by a competitive product for its successful sale as an identical product, which is his greatest protection against unfair competition. For the absence of any composition statement upon the label of his product places the burden upon the manufacturer of a different and inferior product to otherwise prove its identity and to otherwise promote its sale. Which first stated proof is difficult, if not impossible, to establish.

This is the present state of competition by and against a superior food of private formula into which the compulsory ingredient-disclosure requirement in question enters. And that state it completely reverses. For it places the competing manufacturer of an inferior food in the position where he now, for the first time, can easily and successfully represent his product as identical to the superior one by the simple and inexpensive device of an identical label-ingredient statement and any readjustment of composition accordingly; a statement that is apparently conclusive of such identity to the dealer and consumer, and one that has the sanction of law; a position which the unscrupulous manufacturer can and will exploit to the limit. And the burden is now shifted back to the manufacturer of the superior food to prove its superiority in the face of a comparative label statement directly to the contrary, supported by a price advantage. Manifestly this situation is grossly unfair to him, because it exposes him to the misappropriation of his product and market. And in such a situation there can be no doubt that he has lost the trade value of his private formula, in its competitive conception; that he is made subject to the injuriously unfair competition of deceptive product simulation and the successful palming off of competitive products as identical to his own, which they are not. And it is because of these detrimental trade consequences that the manufacturers of superior food of private formula have not voluntarily disclosed its composition upon its label, as they are naturally disposed to do; that for 150 years and more the Federal law has not required them to make this disclosure; that for 25 years and more this act has expressly provided in section 8 that he is not required to do so. For that section provides that "nothing in this act shall be construed as requiring proprietors or manufacturers of proprietary foods which contain no unwholesome added ingredient to disclose their trade formulas, except insofar as the provisions of this act may require to secure freedom from adulteration or misbranding."

In short, whatever may be said for this requirement the fact remains that it is practically potential and effective for injurious consumer deception and injurious unfair competition; that it works against the rightful interest of the best manufacturers of the finest food, to their detriment, and plays into the hands of unscrupulous manufacturers, to their benefit; that it is fundamentally an influence against food improvement by private formula and an incentive for food manipulation and debasement under a deceptive label; and that it is not necessary to effectuate the basic purposes of this act. It is too plain for argument that such a requirement has no proper place in an act designed to prevent consumer deception and unfair competition. Only an imperative public health reason, outweighing the consequences stated, could justify this requirement. And that reason does not exist. For this requirement does not present the question of injurious ingredients which the act elsewhere condemns.

It is no answer to say that this act is directed to primarily protect the consumer, rather than the manufacturer. For this requirement actually operates to deceive the consumer and this act was never intended to injure honest and better food manufacturers because they produce superior food. It is no answer to say that this requirement does not compel the disclosure of ingredient percentages or the specific names of spices, flavors and colorings. For its stated injurious consequences remain.

3. This requirement is also injuriously and grossly unfair to the manufacturer of a new food originated by him and made under a private formula, a food valuable to the public and successful accordingly, for the reasons stated in the preceding paragraphs. The situation described there, as to a superior food, is essentially that presented here, as to an original food. A successful original food invariably provokes imitative reproduction. And the greater its success the more its imitation. Against this imitative competition the manufacturer has two protections. One is legal and the other is practical. The legal protection is the law against unfair competition. The practical protection is the privacy of his formula and the resulting fact that the label of his product contains no identifying ingredient statement. This fact is his greatest protection against such competition. And that protection this requirement is practically effective to destroy. For once an original food bears a label ingredient statement identifying it, its exclusive product identity is gone. Because an imitation product can immediately copy that statement and thereby successfully represent itself as an identical product. In which event the original product has practically lost the trade value of its private formula, from a competitive standpoint, and it is left exposed to the injuriously unfair competition hereinbefore described.

4. This requirement is also injuriously and grossly unfair to the manufacturer of food sold under a standard name known to every housewife, which substantially identifies such food to her. For as to such food it is unnecessary, and therefore it needlessly exposes the manufacturer to the injurious consequences hereinbefore described.

5. This requirement is also injuriously and grossly unfair to the manufacturer of food only temporarily subject to it. Such food is that sold under a common or usual name and therefore includes nearly all food. For definitions and standards of identity will be established with respect of all food sold under such a name and they will exempt it from this requirement. To compel manufacturers to temporarily comply with a requirement which seriously injures them is neither sound public policy nor fair play. To impose upon the food-manufacturing industry the expense of a purely temporary label revision is likewise neither sound public policy nor fair play. That expense will amount to $150,000 for one manufacturer alone as to each revision, or $300,000 for the original and return revision. Its aggregate amount will run into millions. This expense will increase the necessitous cost of living accordingly. And because it is unnecessary such increase is unjustified.

III

1. This requirement is potential and effective for serious injury to the consuming public—an injury inherent in it and certain by reason of its described trade abuse, for it permits, encourages, supports, and validates a food-label statement which, while technically true, is actually false and deceptive in its practical operation—a statement which is a half truth amounting to a lie, that is, an identical label-composition statement for nonidentical food. It has been shown that such a statement for such food is practicable with respect of competing food, and easily accomplished; that all the natural and unnatural forces of competition irresistibly work for such a statement with respect of inferior and imitative food; and that such a statement can and will be abused by an unscrupulous manufacturer. It is indisputable that an identical label-composition statement for competing food represents their product identity to the consumer and is prima facie evidence thereof; that the average consumer will be inclined to accept such an identical statement as sufficient evidence of product identity, especially when backed by a lower price permitted by a cheaper composition; that such a statement is deceptive to the consumer who is thereby induced to purchase one food as identical to another, which it is not. And this deception results in an economic injury, if and to the extent the food purchased by reason of it is inferior; and in such a case it may also result in serious injury to health. Clearly a requirement having these consequences has no proper place in an act designed to safeguard health and to prevent trade deceit. And it is no answer to say that the act elsewhere prohibits a label representation which, while literally true, is actually deceptive, for compliance with this requirement is compulsory under the act.

2. Moreover this requirement will unnecessarily increase the cost of food to the consuming public, if and to the extent it compels the expense of a temporary label revision. This situation has been explained; and the large amount of such expense has been indicated. Whatever its amount the consumer is certain to pay it, since the price will include it.

3. Furthermore, this requirement will impose another large and unnecessary expense upon the consuming public by preventing the manufacturing practice now described. It is the practice of certain ingredient variation required by a fluctuating ingredient cost differential. It is a normal manufacturing practice customarily pursued with respect of particular food subject thereto. It is a legitimate practice, because it involves no change in the identity or character of the food affected. It is a necessary practice, because it is required to maintain the lowest manufacturing cost and the lowest price accordingly. An example of this practice is the substitution of one shortening material, such as lard, for another in a bakery product, caused by the fluctuating market price of the available shortening material and the resulting variable price differential. By this substitution one manufacturer alone saves $150,000 a year in production cost. The total saving from this practice runs into millions. And such practice this requirement is effective to prevent. For it compels the label disclosure of each ingredient, except as to spices, flavors, and colorings, described by its common or usual name. Therefore, lard would have to be described by that name. And since the manufacturer must practically use a standard label and since he cannot practically change the label of his product, every time he makes such a change in its composition he will be compelled to desist from this practice. Section 7 (f) recognizes this practice and undertakes to provide a remedy. But it fails to do so. For it provides that to the extent compliance with this requirement is impracticable because of normal variations in ingredients or their quantities, used in good manufacturing or packing practice, reasonable variations from the stated order of such ingredients shall be permitted by regulation. Therefore, reasonable variations from the stated list of ingredients is not permitted.

IV

1. The argument for this requirement is fallacious. The first argument is that the requirement is essential to inform the consumer of commercial food composition (Com. Rep. 11). In the first place this argument implies that the requirement will have a general application to food. Whereas it will not. For ultimately it will not apply to food sold under a common or usual name, and nearly all food is in that category. Therefore at most the requirement will then apply only to relatively few foods. In the second place, this argument implies that the requirement will result in a composition disclosure enabling the consumer to intelligently determine the composition and character of food, actually and relatively. Whereas it will not, to a large extent. It will not do so with respect of ingredients which are spices, flavors, and colorings, because they may be generally described as such. It will not do so with respect of ingredient proportions, because they need not be disclosed. It will not do so with respect of food for which a composition statement is either meaningless or confusing. For example: In the case of a small food containing from 15 to 20 ingredients. Or in the case of a well-known food which may comply with this requirement by a declaration reading: "Water, sugar, spices, and flavors." A declaration that utterly fails to indicate its value and is derogatory to it. Moreover, as previously shown, compliance with this requirement may not disclose the identity, character, or value of food; and, on the contrary, it may be used to misrepresent food. Consequently, whatever informative value the requirement may have it will be relatively small. And that value is offset by the injurious consequences stated.

2. The second argument is that this requirement is necessary to discourage the use of a proprietary name for cheap food in order to sell it at an exorbitant price (Com. Rep. 12). In the first place, this argument assumes that all food sold under a proprietary name has a cheap composition and is sold at an exorbitant price. Whereas that is not so. In the second place it also assumes that this requirement will actually discourage the use of a proprietary name for food. Whereas the pertinent facts indicate to the contrary. In the third place, the committee report contains no statement of established facts upon which to base this argument. In the fourth place, it is a wholly price argument in a purely economic conception; whereas the act has nothing to do with price in that conception. If it did, this requirement would have long since been in it; and this requirement would also apply to drugs and cosmetics, which it does not. What and all the act is purposed to do is to prevent product adulteration and misstatement in sale. And if a food is not objectionable in either of these respects it fully satisfies that purpose. Moreover, this argument is met by the fact that the requirement is potential for injurious consequences which condemn it.

3. The third argument is that this requirement is necessary to safeguard public health with respect of allergy. (Com. Rep. 12.) That is, to protect persons who are hypersensitive to a certain substance, which is injurious to them notwithstanding it is normally harmless, by informing them of its presence in food. This is a novel argument in food law annals. And it is open to several answers. In the first place, this protection will be extremely limited, because the requirement will ultimately apply only to a relatively few proprietary foods. To what extent these foods are open to allergic objection is unknown. An inquiry to some prominent proprietary food manufacturers discloses no allergic experience. In the second place, this protection will not extend to ingredients which are spices, flavors, and colorings, because they may be generally named. In the third place, this argument is met by the fact that the requirement is potential for injurious economic and health consequences which condemn it. Finally, if this argument is sound, why is it that drugs and cosmetics are not made subject to a similar requirement? For it would be equally justified as to them.

4. The last argument is that proprietary foods of valuable composition will be benefited by this requirement (Com. Rep. 12), whereas the fact is that it will result in their injury, for the reasons previously explained.

AMENDMENT NO. 9. DEFINITIONS AND STANDARDS FOR FOOD

Section 11, page 18, lines 8–15: Revise this section to read (the amendment is in italic):

"SEC. 11. For the effectuation of the purposes of this act, the Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations, as provided by section 22, fixing and establishing for any food having a common name, a reasonable definition and standard of identity, and a reasonable standard of quality and fill of container: Provided, That no standards of quality shall be established for fresh foods and fresh vegetables."

Supporting statement

1. As now drawn section 11 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a definition and standards of identity, quality, and fill of container for any food. This amendment is effective, first, to confine that authority to food having a common name, which is a name of common use. And therefore to confine it to common food as distinguished from proprietary food. For without this amendment that authority may be used to unjustly deprive the manufacturer of his valuable business asset of a private formula, to which he fairly has a proprietary right, as previously shown. Moreover, the amendment is not derogatory to the consuming public, because (a) proprietary food is otherwise required by the act to be pure and truthfully sold; (b) no food having a common name can escape section 11 by assuming a proprietary name; (c) section 7 (c) requires any food which purports to be or which is represented as a food for which a definition and standard of identity have been established under section 11 to conform thereto and to be labeled with the name prescribed therein; and (d) section 7 (a) prohibits any misleading fill of container. In short, proprietary food necessarily establishes its own definition and standards; to subject it to this authority is unjustly injurious to the manufacturer; and that is unnecessary, because the act otherwise thoroughly protects the consuming public with respect of such food. The definitions and standards for food heretofore established to enforce this act and all pure-food laws have always been confined to food having a common name. And there is no sound reason for departing from that policy.

2. As now drawn section 11 provides that the authorized standards of quality and fill of container shall be reasonable. This amendment is effective, next and simply, to insert the same provision as to the authorized definitions and standards of identity. They, of course, must also be reasonable. And therefore the section should likewise so provide.

AMENDMENT NO. 10. ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD OF REVIEW

Section 15, pages 22–24: Add at the end, after line 3, on page 24, the following new paragraph:

"(d) If an administrative hearing, prescribed by paragraph (c) of this section, results in a finding that the respondent thereto has violated this act, then said respondent shall have the right of a review of such finding by the board created by this paragraph, as and to the extent herein provided. An administrative board of review is hereby created and vested with the necessary jurisdiction, for the purposes of this paragraph. The board shall be composed of five members, who shall be appointed by the President. Not more than three members of the board shall be members of the same political party. The terms of office of members of the board shall be 5 years: Provided, That the terms of office of the members first appointed shall expire at the end of 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 years, respectively, as the President shall designate. The President shall prescribe the extent of the board's power of review, under this paragraph, and any necessary limitations upon such power and the procedure of its exercise, by regulations promulgated by him. The decision of the board that a respondent has not violated this act shall be binding upon the Secretary under this act: Provided, That the several district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review such decision and to modify or reverse it, upon application by the Secretary. The board shall annually choose a chairman from its own membership. A majority vote shall prevail upon any motion before or upon any decision by the board."

Supporting statement

1. Section 15 (c) requires an administrative hearing upon an apparent violation of the act, before the Secretary of Agriculture reports it for a criminal prosecution. If the hearing results in a finding adverse to the respondent, he is subject to immediate prosecution upon the basis of that finding; and this amendment is effective to provide for an administrative review of a finding open to fair question as to its validity.

2. The amendment is designed to establish a plan whereby a manufacturer or advertiser may secure an impartial administrative review of an administrative finding that he has violated this act, which he believes to be erroneous and which, in fact, is of doubtful legal sanction, before he is compelled to face a criminal prosecution (with all that it implies) upon the basis of that finding. The amendment is a reasonable, just, and necessary part of the revised act, because of its extension into the broad field of advertising. Advertising goes far beyond a label, to which alone the act now applies. For it involves a boundless and continuously changing sales appeal, largely opinion in character; whereas a label is static as a rule and contains a strictly limited product declaration; and the administration of a broad advertising law, such as this, presents an infinite number of difficult and close questions of construction, which are puzzling to the best experts and which are open to honest difference of opinion and subject to honest opposite answer. It is certain that the administrative answer will be sometimes wrong; and in plain justice the advertiser should have a reasonable opportunity to correct an administrative answer, which may be fairly said to be wrong, before he is dragged into a criminal prosecution and publicly branded as a false advertiser upon the basis of that answer.

3. This amendment must be appraised in the light of the facts pertinent to it. The first fact is that the administrative hearing presents the first and only opportunity which the respondent now has to establish his innocence of the charge of violation against him in avoidance of a criminal prosecution. If the hearing results in a finding adverse to him, then he is subject to immediate prosecution, notwithstanding that finding may be wrong. The second fact is that upon the hearing the finding is ultimately made by a single administrative officer, who acts as prosecuting attorney, judge, and jury combined in one in an administrative sense. And his finding is practically conclusive. Nominally that officer is the Secretary of Agriculture. Actually it is the Chief of the Food and Drug Administration. The third fact is that however able that officer may be, his finding is certain to be erroneous on numerous occasions, especially in the broad and doubtful field of advertising. He is bound to be a strict constructionist; his point of view is necessarily academic; and his judgment is not infallible. Moreover, he must largely rely upon the judgment of subordinates. The fourth fact is that this amendment is carefully drawn to prevent its abuse. In the first place, the President is explicitly directed to prescribe the board's power of review, to place any necessary restrictions upon it, and to define the procedure of its exercise. In that situation no review will be permitted unless it is justified in the circumstances. And if it is justified in the circumstances, it ought to be allowed. In the second place, an erroneous decision by the board in favor of the respondent is subject to immediate review and reversal by any district court of the United States upon application by the Secretary. In short, this amendment is effective to reasonably protect the Secretary and the food, drug, and cosmetic industries from an injurious misadministration of the act by a plan duly safeguarded against its misuse.

4. The arguments against this amendment are fallacious. The first argument is that because the present act contains no provision for an administrative board of review, the revised act should not. The answer is that the present act should contain such a provision; that, in any event and because it includes advertising, the revised act should equitably contain such a provision. The second argument is that the amendment will operate to interfere with and delay the administration of the act. The answer is that it cannot do so, because the President is directed to duly restrict its application. Hence, there will be no review that ought not to be made and only a review that ought to be made. Moreover, this review has no application whatever to the Secretary's action for a seizure or injunction proceeding, for he may institute such a proceeding without an administrative hearing. The third argument is that the advisory committee plan of section 15 (a) precludes the need of this amendment. The answer is that such plan does not provide the administrative review which this amendment is purposed and effective to secure.

AMENDMENT NO. 11. PERMIT FACTORIES

Section 12 (a), pages 18–19: Amend this paragraph in the following respects:

First. Strike out the word "adequately" in line 21 of page 18.

Second. Insert between "merce" and the following comma, in line 23 of page 18, the words "and the act cannot be otherwise enforced with respect of such articles."

Third. Add, in line 3 of page 19, the following new sentence: "The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to determine whether any administrative use of this paragraph is authorized by it, upon application by any person affected thereby."

Supporting statement

1. Section 12 (a) empowers the Secretary of Agriculture to place the manufacture of any class of food, drugs, or cosmetics under complete Government permit control, whenever he finds that, by reason of conditions surrounding their manufacture, interstate commerce in such articles may be injurious to health and their injurious nature cannot be adequately determined after they enter such commerce. The drastic and discretionary character of this power requires no explanatory comment.

2. The amendment is effective, first, to modify this power by providing that it may be exercised only (a) if the injurious nature of such articles cannot be determined after they enter interstate commerce; and (b) if the act cannot be otherwise enforced with respect of such articles. These are reasonable conditions. For if the injurious nature of such articles can be determined after they enter interstate commerce and the act can be otherwise enforced with respect of such articles, then this power should not be exercised. Moreover, unless this amendment is made the Secretary may exercise this power to place any and all food, drug, or cosmetic manufacture under his complete control. For there is nothing in section 12 (a), as now drawn, which prevents him from finding that any class of such manufacture may be injurious to health by reason of manufacturing conditions and that its injurious nature cannot be adequately determined after entry into interstate commerce. As to drugs, he may make this finding upon the basis of uncertainty of necessary scientific control. As to food and cosmetics, upon the basis of uncertainty of sanitary control.

3. The amendment is effective, next, to provide the right of a court review of an administrative use of section 12 (a), which is deemed unwarranted and prejudicial. The right conferred by section 23 does not extend to the heart of section 12 (a).

AMENDMENT NO. 12. FACTORY INSPECTION

Section 13 (b), pages 20–21, add at the end of line 6, on page 21, the following new sentence:

"No injunction shall be issued pursuant to this paragraph unless (1) the denied inspection is shown to be necessary for the administration of this act, and (2) such injunction provides against an unwarranted inspection or disclosure of a private formula or a secret process."

Supporting statement

1. Section 13 (b) empowers any district court of the United States to enjoin, temporarily or permanently, all interstate commerce in any food, drug, or cosmetic with respect of which an official factory inspection is denied, "after reasonable request" therefor. The breadth and drastic character of this power requires no explanatory comment. It suffices to note that the term "reasonable request" remains undefined.

2. This amendment is effective to prescribe two conditions of such an injunction: The first condition is that it shall not be issued unless the denied inspection is shown to be necessary for the administration of the act. This is a reasonable condition necessary to prevent an inspection abuse. The second condition is that the injunction shall provide against an unwarranted inspection or disclosure of a private formula or a secret process. This is also a reasonable condition necessary to protect the manufacturer accordingly, which protection section 17 (g) supplements.

AMENDMENT NO. 13. SEIZURE PROCEEDING

Section 16, pages 24–26, amend this section in the following respects:

First. Strike out the words "or at any time thereafter" in line 12 of page 24.

Second. Strike out "(1)" in line 15 of page 24; substitute a period for the comma after "libel" in line 16 of page 24 and strike out the remainder of this paragraph; strike out paragraph (b) in lines 4–11 of page 25; substitute "(b)" for "(c)" in line 12 of page 25; substitute "(c)" for "(d)" in line 15 of page 25; substitute "(d)" for "(e)" in line 13 of page 26; substitute "(e)" for "(f)" in line 17 of page 26.

Supporting statement

1. Section 16 provides that a food, drug, or cosmetic in interstate commerce that is adulterated or misbranded, etc., shall be liable to be proceeded against "while in interstate commerce or at any time thereafter", by process pursuant to libel. This amendment is, first, to strike out the words "or at any time thereafter." Unless this amendment is made section 16 expressly authorizes the seizure of a food, drug, or cosmetic after it has passed from interstate into intrastate commerce. And because and to the extent it does so this section plainly violates the Constitution of the United States and is void.

2. This amendment is effective, next, to strike out the provisions of section 16 authorizing the seizure of an apparently adulterated or misbranded food, drug, or cosmetic, upon the basis of a purely administrative order issued without court sanction. Upon this amendment the section will authorize such a seizure only when approved by the court in pursuance of a libel proceeding. This the present and indicated state of the act.

AMENDMENT NO. 14. LIABILITY OF CORPORATION AGENT

Section 18 (b), page 31, lines 17–22: Revise this paragraph to read (the amendment is italic)—

"Whenever a corporation or association violates any of the provisions of this act, such violation shall also be deemed to be a violation of the individual directors, officers, or agents of such corporation or association who personally ordered, or knowingly did any of the acts constituting, in whole or in part, such violation."

Supporting statement

1. This amendment is required to protect an employee of a corporation from liability for its violation of this act, with respect of action he was ordered and therefore was required to take and the illegality of which he does not and cannot know. To hold him liable under such circumstances is grossly unjust.

2. In illustration: The foreman of a factory printing department orders an employee therein to print a new label according to the copy given to him. Such employee did not prepare the label; he knows nothing about its legality; and he is not positioned to secure that knowledge. His job is simply to operate the printing press and if he declines to do so he is subject to discharge. It subsequently develops that the label violates the act and the corporation is successfully prosecuted accordingly. Under section 18 (b), as now drawn, this employee would be equally liable for such violation. And that is plainly a wrong state of the law.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 27, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PARSONS.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who coverest Thyself with light as with a garment, so fill us with Thy radiant Spirit that we may see and magnify the good in the lives of others. May we honor it; may we rejoice in it and try to imitate it. Teach us, Heavenly Father, however turbulent outward conditions may be, to maintain inward calm. O ever keep us conscious of our birthright as Thy children, that our actions and purposes may be filial, fraternal, and loyal to Thee. This day may we so put our trust in Thy fatherhood that old hurts will be relieved, anxious forebodings will be dispelled, self-assurance will be merged into the Divine will, and self-direction will yield to Thy leadership, and Thine shall be the praise forever. In the name of Jesus, our Savior, we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 191. An act for the relief of William K. Lovett;

H.R. 210. An act for the relief of Anne B. Slocum;

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPUBLICAN POLICY

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech I delivered last evening over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by myself over Columbia Broadcasting Co. network, Wednesday, April 25, 1934:

At the beginning of this session of Congress I made certain statements in behalf of the Republican minority in the House of Representatives. I invite attention to the policy of the minority as then outlined. It has been observed to the letter in the eventful session now approaching its end.

We declared that we would gladly cooperate with the administration in restoring prosperity and would support any policies that would contribute to the common welfare, without regard to the political fortunes of either party.

At the same time, we declared that we would oppose any policies which were destructive of our form of government, or alien to the basic ideals of the American people, or economically unsound, or as threatening the Nation with fiscal bankruptcy, and that we would hold the administration responsible at the bar of public opinion for promoting such policies.

The Republican minority has been faithful to that pledge. It has voted for sound legislation calculated to hasten recovery. It has stoutly opposed unsound, un-American legislation.

The record of this Congress will be submitted to the verdict of public opinion; I urge all citizens to study it. I court a rigid scrutiny of the position taken by representatives of the Republican Party on all the questions that have arisen.

It will be found that the Republican Party as represented in Congress, has sought to defend this Nation against the forces of disintegration. It has championed the personal liberties of the individual as guaranteed by the Constitution. It has defended the cause of honestly conducted business and has opposed unwarranted interference of government with such business. It has fought for the integrity of our currency and for national solvency through honest balancing of an honest budget. It has supported generous relief of destitution and full assistance to all agencies of recovery; but it has opposed extravagant appropriation of public money and reckless expenditure of appropriations which were made.

Notwithstanding the great confusion resulting from unprecedented conditions and the astounding assortment of contradictory legislation proposed by the administration, the Republican Party has kept to the clear path of constitutional government and sound economic policies. It has refused to plunge blindly ahead in search of imaginary short cuts to the millennium. It has preferred the wisdom and safety of experience to the hazards of experimentation.

We are opposed to any further tinkering with the currency. It must be stabilized on an honest basis for the protection of the individual and the honor of our Government. Those who go into the market places must know not only what our dollar is worth today but what it will be worth a month, a year, or 5 years from today. Ordinary business contracts cannot be made or long-time investments planned so long as there is continual experimentation with the circulating medium of exchange.

As a corollary to this, we must have a solvent Government. Promises upon the part of this administration to balance the Budget must begin to be fulfilled, instead of the time of their redemption being still further postponed. That cannot be if there is a continuation of public expenditures on the present vast scale. Such expenditures only create demand for still greater ones.

The present expenditures were authorized upon the plea of an emergency, to tide over public and private business until the backbone of the depression could be broken and business and industry had time to recuperate. The period of emergency is over. Private enterprise is now ready to go ahead. Nothing is retarding it except the harassing laws enacted by this administration and the even greater harassment incident to their administration by an army of bureaucrats.

A great contributing cause to the retardment of recovery is the growing competition by the Government with private industry. Officers of this administration have taken out articles of incorporation in several States authorizing them, in their capacity as representatives of the Federal Government and using Federal funds, to enter into practically every known field of private enterprise—manufacturing, fabricating, the real-estate business, the building trades, wholesaling, and retailing of merchandise of all kinds.

No real or prospective investor has any certainty that tomorrow he may not find himself engaged in a losing fight with some Federal bureau incorporated to invade his particular line of activity and operating with Federal funds. The business of the people of the United States belongs to them and not to the Government, except and unless we are ready to embark upon a career of state socialism. To transfer millions of men now idle to permanent pay rolls in productive industry and business it is essential the Government withdraw from private business. The Republican minority will stand against voting any further appropriations to finance this unwarranted intrusion into the field of private endeavor.

We also stand steadfast against any attempt to make the various emergency measures and set-ups permanent. The Republican minority gave unanimous support to these extraordinary measures a year ago because they were designed to meet the extraordinary needs of the hour. Moreover, the administration in asking the passage of these measures pledged its honor they were only emergency measures. Since that time the public has been informed that it is the intent of this administration to make this emergency legislation permanent.

To do this would make permanent the vast system of bureaucracy which has been set up to administer these laws. It would make permanent increased expenditures of billions of dollars annually. To support such a program the Republican minority would not only be breaking faith with the people but it would be contributing to the overthrow, not only of our present economic system but our constitutional form of government. To that program we will not subscribe.

The Republican Party is not willing to assist in wrecking the economic system upon which our country is erected, by reason of which we have developed as a nation and prospered as a people to a degree not equaled by any other people of any other time or place. We do not admit that a Federal bureaucracy can excel the people in the wise direction of their own affairs. As between bureaucrats who never created an industry or developed one; met a pay roll or created productive employment for a single wage earner; built up a business in the face of competition in the marts of the world or risked a dollar of their own money in pioneering an idea; plowed a furrow, planted a crop, or reaped a harvest, and those of our private citizens who have done all this, and done it so successfully that they have made America the outstanding Nation of the world, the Republican minority takes its stand by the side of the private citizen.

Dangerous as is the threat of the new deal's philosophy and policies to America's economic structure and the material welfare of our people, the threat it carries to America's political institutions and the liberties of our citizens is even more dangerous. For the first time in our history an administration in power at Washington has challenged our form of government and those occupying high official and advisory positions in this administration are making a concerted and persistent attack upon American ideals and institutions.

When, in answer to an appeal of this administration, the American Congress vested extraordinary powers in the Chief Executive to meet an emergency, it expected and the American people expected there would be no transgression of the fundamental principles of our Government. The American people were faithful to the American Constitution and they expected the administration to be just as faithful.

No economic emergency could possibly equal the emergency created by an attempt to foist upon this country a system of government which will exercise the powers of life or death over not only all agricultural, industrial, and business operations, but over the liberties and fortunes of American citizens.

The political philosophy of this administration is that nothing must be left to the individual citizen. His freedom of action is to be denied. His individual judgment is to be suspended. He is to be brought under the dictatorship of a Federal bureau and regimented by Federal officers.

This constitutes not only a denial of the citizen's economic rights but a denial of those political liberties which are guaranteed him in our Constitution. The Republican Party stands where it has always stood, for a constitutional government. It holds the powers of our Government under our Constitution are sufficient to cope with any emergency. It holds that where these powers are usurped either by a dictator or by a bureaucracy, they thrust upon the American people an issue which must be met if the form of this Government is to continue as it has existed since its establishment.

This issue may be met squarely by applying the philosophy of one of our earliest Americans, Thomas Jefferson, who said: "I am not one of those who fear the people. I know of no safe depository of the ultimate powers of society but the people themselves. I would rather be exposed to the inconveniences attending too much liberty than those attending too small a degree of it."

DEVELOPMENT OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER BASIN

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, this administration is launching some of the most important development work and plans ever undertaken by our Nation.

There is a far-sighted intelligence manifest in the program; also there is a determination that some of these great basic resources shall remain wholly within the control of the people at large.

I am pleased with the opportunity of contributing to the movement and sharing the work that makes such a program possible. It is my conviction that the name of our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, will go into history as a leader who has inaugurated principles which will stand high on all of the future records of our people. That I should have the opportunity of joining him in this work, that this Congress should be a part of the historic program, and that this period when there is so much distress and uneasiness at large, should have been marked by inauguration of this movement is most gratifying to me.

We are in the midst of a new conservation principle advocated by our President. It is the development and use and production of our matchless natural resources. There is a movement not to seal certain potential assets for an indefinite period in the future, but rather to get orderly, intelligent action in their uses, so that they may be made to serve the highest purpose and, at the same time, be replenished or conserved with the highest possible, modern intelligence.

In approaching the water resources of our Nation, which are conceded of enormous value, this administration is taking positive, forward steps which are blazing a trail for a new field in national development. These resources are both wasteful and destructive when not controlled. Our President's program is planned to control the flood waters in order to check their present destructive influences and also to harness this energy to the Nation's industrial and domestic use. Instead of proceeding in the haphazard program of the past, the order of the day is for a great systematic program balanced with care in respect to location and time.

When the Tennessee Valley Authority was before this Congress we voted it with enthusiasm, I deeming it an honor and an opportunity to join. This Authority has the statutory right to undertake the most far-reaching and scientific work that has ever been laid down in respect to the treatment of any American watershed. The more effective application of agriculture, the industrialization of a rural people, the reforesting of the mountains, the impounding of flood waters, navigation of streams, and the development of power is all within the range of this effort.

WILL ADD TO HOME COMFORTS

In the Tennessee Valley power has been and will be for long years the outstanding feature of the development program. Waters of this stream and its tributaries that formerly ran to the sea in idleness are now to be put to the effective use of man. All of the more modern conveniences and comforts of home are to be offered to the people of this region at living prices, and the rates of the power are to be such as to encourage the maximum use of electricity. Industrial uses of this power are to be directed and encouraged by this Federal Authority, in order to give the people opportunities for employment and a means of establishing themselves on a more profitable, comfortable basis of life. This experiment is to be a gigantic commercial laboratory in social economic plans. It will undoubtedly reflect its influence throughout the Nation.

On the St. Lawrence River the administration also stands for the harnessing of that mighty stream with Canadian cooperation. In this work navigation developments for the great producing and industrial elements tributary to the Lakes territory is to be accompanied by a power development under the control of the New York State Authority. Here we have two cardinal principles bearing on the life of the northern region of our country presented by our President with the insistence that they shall be recognized through treaty, and later appropriation by Congress.

Mr. Speaker, in the Columbia River Watershed of the Pacific Northwest, we have another mighty program inaugurated through the forceful action of President Roosevelt. He has designated sites and allocated funds for the inauguration of work at both Bonneville and Grand Coulee projects. The Grand Coulee is planned as the beginning of the greatest irrigation development the Nation has ever undertaken in any one project, and, in fact, almost equals the total of Federal reclamation work since another President Roosevelt started this program. It will prove a monument going down through history, affecting a large number of people and making possible the development of productive farms by the thousands for that time when American agriculture is called upon to feed our growing population, and also in that program wherein the farmer is to be put on a profitable basis of operation. With the Grand Coulee will be a large offering of power, which may, as in the Tennessee Valley, be used for domestic consumption in cities and the country tributary there for industrial operations.

I am more directly connected with the Bonneville development on the Columbia. This is in my immediate territory. It is laid out for the inauguration of a program embracing the most perfect navigation conditions and the generation of power in heavy blocks at very low cost, beginning with a tidewater dam.

BONNEVILLE DAM OUTSTANDING UNIT

I hope this House and the country at large will better understand the Bonneville project. To me it is the outstanding, single unit in our President's mighty national program. It is the beginning of work to harness the great resources of the Columbia River on a plan which the engineers themselves regard the most effective that could be adopted.

Will you indulge me for a moment to study the Bonneville layout? Picture the country as a whole. Observe the Columbia River as the second greatest stream on the North American continent and third in the Western Hemisphere. Note that its discharge into the sea is nearly as large as that of the Mississippi into the Gulf of Mexico; that is, about 200,000,000 acre-feet of water annually.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, make further note of the fact that this stream has a watershed only one fifth the size of the watershed of the Mississippi. The effect of this inevitably must be accepted as an ideal condition for the generation of power; that is, tremendous volume of water flowing from the highest levels of the continent a very short distance to the sea, swift waters, cascades, many gorges hewn through the rocks, limited development and population down next to the stream, proximity of the first developments to the sea, an easy deep-sea channel to the first and second dams, ideal climatic conditions for industrial operations and human comfort, and on top of it all, the background of the beautiful, outstanding, scenic Pacific Northwest.

More than 150,000,000 acre-feet of the Columbia's flow comes from east of the Cascade Mountain Range. This rugged and picturesque uplift has an average elevation of 6,000 feet and parallels the Pacific Ocean shoreline from British Columbia to Mexico, only about 150 miles away. But one cut has been made through this great mountain range by waters of the interior, and that is the gorge of the Columbia.

At the point where tidal influence ceases is located the Bonneville Dam. Barge navigation requiring drafts from 9 to 15 feet is now available, and with the expenditure of but $5,000,000 more, a deep-sea channel may be cut to the dam. With another two and a half or three million dollars, deep-sea locks may be put through the dam enabling deep-sea ships to operate up to The Dalles, Oreg., better than 200 miles from the Pacific Ocean.

HAS NO PARALLEL IN THE WORLD

There is no other parallel to this project anywhere in the world. Volume of flow, economy of development, tidewater location, perfect transportation conditions, and the combined influence of economic opportunities make this the gem of the power projects which either private capital or the Federal Government has yet undertaken to develop.

About 600,000 horsepower of energy may be generated at this dam, more than 50 percent of the same prime power under the present flow conditions of the river. With further reservoiring in future developments upstream the prime power will steadily increase until practically the total energy now discussed will be of that type.

Mr. Speaker, this dam is but 40 miles today from a 35-foot channel to the sea. It is within 40 miles of a great population center in and around Portland, Oreg., and Vancouver, Wash. In transmitting the energy for use of the people the shortest line yet proposed for any major project will be found sufficient. For those industries that desire to locate at the dam site our country can easily make it possible for the deep-sea ships to reach that point without breaking cargo of raw materials brought in until unloaded at the factory warehouse, and taking the finished products out to all parts of the world. There are two railways and two highways serving the site where transportation advantages are more perfect than may be found elsewhere.

This great storehouse of energy is being opened to the people of Oregon and Washington. Control of the power is solely and wholly with the Federal Government, which agency is putting up all of the funds for development. As the people of the two States approach the Federal authorities with plans for the use of this energy, the same as is being done in the Tennessee Valley, they will be met in a responsive, cooperative way, and every possible encouragement will be given to the extension of the use of this power throughout the region where there may be a market.

The two other great Federal developments on the Pacific seaboard now under way are the Boulder Canyon Dam and the Grand Coulee. Each of these are much further from tidewater than Bonneville. Boulder Canyon energy will be transmitted from 200 to 300 miles to reach its major market. Grand Coulee can find an industrial market of any magnitude only over lines of from 200 to 250 miles length. Bonneville is on tidewater, on perfect navigation channels, and in a large population center. These relative locations will indicate to us the enormous value of Bonneville in comparison with any other Federal or private project of size that has been undertaken on the American Continent.

RECAPTURE OF INDUSTRY TO RESULT

In addition to serving the people adjacent to such developments as that at Bonneville for their greater human comfort and advancement with the lowest possible cost of electric energy, Bonneville is the tangible, living bid of these United States to recapture industry which has been driven to foreign lands. It is the logical economic procedure in laying foundations for revival within the United States of the pulp-paper, chemical, and metallurgical lines of industry. It is the nearest bid this country has yet made in meeting the great competitive program which the Soviet Republic is inaugurating for industrial supremacy. It is the lowest bid so far made within the United States to meet the low cost of power in Canada. It will, Mr. Speaker and my fellow colleagues in the House, be accepted by the experts of this and coming generations as the beginning of a real, virile industrial period for the Pacific coast wherein our country will start the building on our western seaboard of a vastly greater industrial empire for our safety and prosperity in war and peace.

In the Canadian hydroelectric program a marvelous combination of conditions was presented by nature. You have the great glacial lake regions north of the St. Lawrence and Lakes Ontario and Erie. Here we see vast natural reservoirs provided at no cost to man. We also find a rough terrain between the northern lakes and the St. Lawrence drainage system which enables the power plant to secure an advantageous head at a low cost of construction. These power sites are near the marvelous transportation system of the Great Lakes and that which will be provided on the St. Lawrence. With nature offering the reservoirs and very satisfactory dam sites, Canada has forged ahead in her power development in a remarkable manner.

Mr. Speaker, with the development of hydroenergy in Canada has gone marvelous increase in her industrial expansion. I note from recent reports that $276,000,000 of American capital has been invested there to produce pulp-paper products. I also observe that more than $400,000,000 of our capital has been used in the development of public utility enterprises for Canada, much of this being water power. I further observe that the pulp-paper industry of the North American Continent has rapidly shifted to our neighbor on the north until we pay her approximately $150,000,000 a year for products of this character which we import and use within the United States. It is also to be noted that the great Aluminum Company has built at Arvida a superb, modern plant for the reduction of bauxite ore into this newest and most useful metal. Other chemical and metallurgical operations have been attracted to Canada.

CANADA'S HEADWAY REMARKABLE

While Canadian industrial progress was being recorded in an amazing manner, we also were making headway, but not in the same proportion. We did not have the low rates for electric energy which Canada possessed. We had not approached our greatest unit developments of hydropower because of their magnitude and the difficulties of private capital in financing such projects and carrying them until there was a market for the energy created there.

Due to this combination, the most rapidly expanding line of American industry, termed electrochemical and electrometallurgical, which is commanding the greatest attention of any single field in world effort, was not holding its proper place within the United States. We were falling behind in the race, and were due, under that program, to become a relatively light industrial factor.

Our people were prone to hold that fuel-generated power, conveniently located for industrial purposes would protect our position. I recognize that amazing progress has been made in the efficiency of fuel uses for power production. However, every expert who has ever testified before congressional committees admits that there is a basic, enduring advantage to the industry using hydroenergy. When the great dam is written off as a capital charge and when only the parts of a hydroelectric plant which deteriorate through use and age are calculated for stated renewals, the hydroplant has an advantage which can never be attained through fuel-generated power.

I have another observation to make in this respect. Coal, the chief source of fuel energy for all time is becoming every year more and more an essential raw material in industrial operations. Science is using coal with a diversity and a completeness for manufacturing a great variety of products that is amazing to all of us. Coal within another generation or two has in prospect a greater value as a raw material than for fuel. Coal cannot be reproduced within any historic period. When it is exhausted another crop will not be available for millions of years.

ARTIFICIAL RESERVOIRS COST MONEY

Mr. Speaker, water power is perpetual, at least, so long as the present climatic conditions prevail. Water running to the sea unused is a waste. Unused water power throwing the burden of industrial energy upon coal violates a fundamental principle of the present conservation program. Although in the use of coal the fuel requirement has been cut 50 percent within quite recent years for the same unit of energy, still this fuel is being exhausted. Prices will inevitably become higher. Mining conditions in the coal mine are unwholesome. Increased depths involve greater costs, and in every respect I say that substitution of fuel-generated energy by water power is one of the most farsighted and fundamental conservation efforts that the Nation can indulge today.

Except for the Great Lakes, which constitute probably the world's most perfect reservoiring system for equalizing the flow of Niagara and the St. Lawrence, there is no great natural reservoir condition found within the United States. Where the stream's flow is not naturally equalized artificial reservoirs must be created. These cost money. The flood-control program being urged by our President and accepted by the Congress as fair and proper is a step in the great national work of restraining our flood waters at proper intervals, preventing destructive erosion, safeguarding against channel silting, and equalizing the flow so that these waters will serve navigation, irrigation, and power.

Three great projects now under construction in Montana, Oregon and Washington, Nevada and Arizona are the initial steps for the control of flood waters, harnessing the vast latent energy previously wasted there and making the channels carry an additional flow during the usual low season to accommodate navigation. As these initial steps are expanded, as each additional reservoir is built, and as each new project is brought in, man's hand will by slow and inevitable degrees provide the storage capacity which nature has failed to leave in the major watersheds of the United States and which have been so admirably furnished in Canada in the Great Lakes system.

I mention general physical conditions in order to point the argument in support of the President's splendid program of development. I hope that every Member of Congress, from whatever part of the country he may come, will recognize that each of these developments has a national significance and cannot be termed local in any sense of the word. I further hope that the wisdom of our great leader, who is writing economic history in flaming letters, will never be the target for the charge of "pork barrel", provincialism, or localized vision. If there ever was a time when the Congress should get the inspiration of his view it is now. If there ever was a period when coordination of the forces in different parts of the country should govern our work it is now.

At a cost of something like $50,000,000 a 35-foot deep-sea channel has been provided between the Pacific Ocean and Portland, Oreg., and Vancouver, Wash. About half this total outlay has been paid out of local taxes, the other half being a Federal charge.

SAVING TO MANKIND COMPENSATES COST

Bringing deep-sea ships 100 miles interior from the Pacific has given low rates of transportation for producers of the soil and industry that no other human efforts could have provided. It has been a heavy outlay, but the saving to mankind is so great that the annual net returns compensate many times over the cost involved.

In our program on the Columbia for further improvement, which is marked by the first big navigation power unit at Bonneville, we shall take when the work is finished, deep-sea ships another 100 miles into the interior beyond Portland. This will give to the upper reaches as far as The Dalles deep-sea terminal rates. Ships going on this route will be able to reach Bonneville first, where 600,000 horsepower of energy may be generated. By providing deep-sea locks through the dam constructed and provision for which is made in the plans now being executed, deep-sea ships may proceed another 47 miles to the foot of the greatest potential power development in any one unit of the American continent.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, engineers could not create a more perfect setting for tremendous industrial operations than may be provided at a very low cost on the Columbia. Not to exceed $5,000,000 will be needed to dig the deep-sea channel as far as the Bonneville Dam. About $2,500,000 more than is needed for a barge canal will be necessary to convert these locks into a deep-sea type. After passing through the Bonneville locks, the ships then have a pooled area 47 miles in length, with a minimum depth of 35 feet or better, in reaching The Dalles. At The Dalles a high-dam type of construction could be made to generate from four to six million horsepower of energy, perhaps even more as the flow of the Columbia is regulated above.

After The Dalles project is developed, again there is pooled water provided to the next site which may be selected by the engineers. Thus, starting downstream and working up, the Columbia offers the ideal opportunity for carrying cheap transportation to the power sites of the greatest energy stream on the North American Continent and perhaps even greater than will be found in South America. It has been estimated that the trunk and tributaries of the Columbia have a potential of approximately 22,000,000 horsepower. With deep-sea ships and barges penetrating through the very heart of this, and with all climatic and other conditions favorable, industry is bound to hail this storehouse of energy and this marvelous transportation system as one of the greatest industrial centers the Nation has known.

WASTED ENERGY TO BE CONSERVED

With coal at $3 a ton and with the most modern practices known to the largest fuel-generated plants, the wasted energy of the Columbia River watershed is today practically equivalent to 100,000,000 tons of our precious fuel supply. If you saw 100,000,000 tons of coal being burned each year, would you not feel it your duty as a patriot and a true conservationist to stop the appalling waste? Why not, then, with equal effectiveness, save the equivalent of 100,000,000 tons of coal per year in water power and put it to the use of man in this most modern and progressive age?

The Columbia Basin, so far as existing records prove, is without any appreciable supply of commercial coal or petroleum. Deprived of these important factors, we must turn to our "white coal", that is, water power. Using this water power with the most advanced methods of science, our industries will thrive. Nature has given us compensations, but they are valueless until developed. Our President has started the development program. Our Nation in due course will write this plan down as the beginning of a most important era. All people in different parts of the country will hail this as one of our greatest forward steps. The man who today shouts "pork barrel" and "provincialism" at the expense of the whole people will be ashamed that he ever uttered such words.

Mr. Speaker, we of Washington, Oregon, and California are on the Pacific seaboard. That is your western front. We look out upon about half the population of the world. Trade is steadily growing there and is intensely competitive. The United States cannot take its proper share without our natural facilities on the Pacific coast being used. Distance is in our favor in seeking Pacific-country trade. We can reach those consumers in a shorter mileage than Europe. If you undertake to haul through the Panama Canal American products intended for that market, distances are against you. From an American viewpoint, whether indulged in the North, East, South, or West, this program is national in scope and purport. We want to establish all of our people on the firmest possible footing. We want our seaboard strong and invulnerable, either from an economic or an invasion viewpoint. We want American population in industry balanced. A top-heavy, centralized industry is not healthy. Trade within our own country is soundest when markets for our products may be widely distributed. You of the East and the South will find the West a superb market for your products when you encourage our development. You of this region should and will be happy to know that your western front is strong and impregnable in any event.

LOW COST OF POWER MAKES MARKET

We hear much of rates in connection with the Presidential power-development program. Taking the same basis of computation for all projects, Bonneville offers the lowest cost of energy yet determined by the engineers in their preliminary estimates. It is this low cost that will make the market. It is this advantageous situation, combined with the low cost found at Bonneville and plants upstream as navigation is taken to each, which will give us the competitive strength to meet Canadian and other foreign operations.

Mr. Speaker, America will in due course be proud of this work, and a careful study of the situation will command general admiration. I ask you, my colleagues in this House, to become more intimately acquainted with this program and believe with the fervor of patriotism that it is of benefit to every American.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—M'ANDREWS v. BRITTEN

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 362

Resolved, That James McAndrews was not elected a Representative to the Seventy-third Congress from the Ninth District of the State of Illinois and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Fred A. Britten was duly elected a Representative to the Seventy-third Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of the State of Illinois and is entitled to retain his seat.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute for the resolution which the gentleman from Georgia has just sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield for that purpose?

Mr. PARKER. I do not. I understand that I am to be recognized for 1 hour. If any gentleman in the House wants time on this resolution, I shall be glad to yield him time; but I do not yield the floor, and I do not yield to anyone to offer any amendment or substitute for the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia refuses to yield and is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman refuses to yield to me to offer a substitute. I know many instances where recognition has been accorded Members to offer a substitute in similar matters and, therefore, I feel that the precedents permit the offering of a substitute, regardless of whether the Chairman of the Committee on Elections yields or not. That is a right which every Member has, and of which he cannot be deprived. For that reason I feel that my substitute for the resolution is in order.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has not conferred with the chairman of this committee, nor with any member of the committee, with reference to this proposed amendment. We do not know what it provides, and I think the gentleman is entirely out of order. He has shown the committee no courtesy whatsoever in coming here and offering a substitute without letting us know he had it in mind.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why not have the substitute read and let the gentleman from Georgia reserve his objection?

Mr. SABATH. That is satisfactory. I ask unanimous consent that my substitute be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. SABATH. Usually the time is divided equally.

Mr. PARKER. I shall be glad to yield the gentleman from Illinois 10 minutes if he wants it.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman cannot divide the time equally, or yield me 30 minutes, I will content myself with 20 minutes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to yield time to any Member who wants to speak on this resolution. I do not want to yield time to any Member to speak out of order.

Mr. SABATH. I assure the gentleman my remarks will not be out of order.

Mr. PARKER. I shall be glad to yield half the time to Members opposing the resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the resolution.

Mr. PARKER. How much time do gentlemen on the minority side desire?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. SNELL. We would like to reserve 15 minutes. As I understand, the whole hour is under the control of the gentleman from Georgia, and that he may yield to anyone he sees fit a certain length of time without yielding the floor.

Mr. PARKER. I want to take into consideration the time the minority members of the committee may need. I wish to yield such time as may be needed on the minority side.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Under the circumstances it would be best for the minority to reserve half the time.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of the time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

I am glad to yield 15 minutes, half of my time, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], which he may use himself or apportion to other members of his delegation as he sees fit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I greatly regret that it is my unpleasant duty today to oppose the resolution before this House, namely, the resolution that would seat my colleague, Mr. Britten. I wish to sincerely assure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten], and the Membership of this House, that there is absolutely nothing personal in this matter; but, as the ranking Democratic Member from the State of Illinois, and chairman of the Illinois Democratic delegation, I have a plain duty to perform, and I shall try to perform it to the best of my meager ability, notwithstanding I have had no time to properly prepare to present matters with which I feel the House should be acquainted.

James McAndrews, the contestant, was the Democratic nominee from the Ninth Congressional District in the election of November 8, 1932, and he claims he received the majority of the votes cast in that election and he has filed a contest charging irregularities and that he was deprived of the certificate of election due to fraud and other reasons he has assigned. Obviously 15 minutes is not sufficient time within which to properly present the contestant's side of the case.

Shortly after the contest was filed testimony was taken in the city of Chicago. Approximately nine witnesses were heard and a transcript of the testimony was submitted to the Clerk of the House in accordance with the law. Later, oral arguments were made before the Elections Committee by attorneys for the contestant and the contestee. On March 15, the Committee on Elections No. 1, which had jurisdiction of this case, voted to recount the ballots cast in that election. The former Chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 1, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK], having been assigned to the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER] became Chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 1, and a day or two later he introduced House Resolution 335 asking that $2,500 be appropriated for the purpose of defraying the expense of recounting the ballots in the city of Chicago. Although Mr. PARKER appeared before the Committee on Accounts a day or two later, for some unknown reason the Committee on Accounts did not act upon the resolution; and, if I am correctly advised, the resolution has been withdrawn.

The contestee, my colleague, Mr. Britten, appeared with Republican Members, as I am informed, although I had no notice, nor did the other Democratic Members from the State of Illinois have notice, that the request would be made that morning for this authorization by the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution asking for this authorization was introduced upon the vote of the Elections Committee ordering the recount, and the Committee on Accounts met the following day. Being informed that the Committee on Elections No. 1 would have a meeting—not knowing the reasons for the meeting, but believing they might desire some information—I, with five or six other Democratic Members, appeared before it. To my great surprise, my colleague, Mr. Britten, was present. After about 45 minutes the Democratic Members from Illinois were permitted to appear before the committee. We were obliged to listen to unjustifiable and inappropriate attacks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten]. The gentleman attacked the Democratic National Committeeman from Illinois, attacked me, and attacked the contestant [Mr. McAndrews]. Later I, too, was given the privilege of addressing the committee; and I stated that these charges were unjustifiable, unfair, unfounded.

The gentleman from Illinois tried to convince the committee that these ballots had been tampered with, stating that he had received a telephonic communication from a friend of his, whose name I shall not mention because the name was given in confidence, to the effect that this friend was informed by some other friend that if the ballot boxes were opened and the ballots recounted, beyond any doubt Mr. Britten would be unseated.

I stated to the committee in behalf of the Democratic Members from Illinois who were present that notwithstanding there was a Democratic board and the county judge having jurisdiction in the matter was a Democrat, they were honorable, trustworthy men, who would not tolerate, permit, sanction, or be a party to the perpetration of any fraud. Not only did I assure the committee that I felt but I assured the committee that I was satisfied—and I am still satisfied—that the ballot boxes had not been tampered with. Whereupon my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'BRIEN] telegraphed to Judge Jarecki and received an answer, which was handed to me this very minute.

The telegram reads as follows:

Hon. JAMES J. O'BRIEN,
House of Representatives.

Charges that ballots in Ninth Congressional District have been tampered with are absolutely baseless. On the contrary, they have been since election, and are today, in sealed vaults. Access to them in local contests has even been denied by the courts.

EDMUND K. JARECKI,
County Judge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the gentleman from Illinois has been denied the right to offer a substitute resolution.

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We are, therefore, going to be asked to vote on a resolution presented by the committee seating Mr. Britten.

I think it would be to the gentleman's advantage if he would tell us just what evidence of fraud has been presented in this case and why he thinks we should vote against the resolution that has been offered by the Chairman of the Elections Committee. I am a member of the Committee on Accounts and we received absolutely no information of fraud when money was asked to count the ballots. Therefore, I should like to hear what evidence of fraud has been presented, if the gentleman has the information.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman will get it.

The mere fact that the Elections Committee, originally, after long deliberation, ordered the opening of the ballots should satisfy any Member of this House that there must have been justification and evidence on which to base its action. That was the vote of that committee on March 15. Why, after two of the Members have gone to other committees from that committee, the new chairman and the members of the committee have rescinded the action without giving the contestant or any of his representatives a chance or opportunity to be heard, I cannot understand; but the mere fact that the ballot boxes have been ordered opened and the ballots recounted should suffice to show that the report before the House today should be voted down and the Elections Committee instructed to proceed with its original action to recount the ballots. The ballots have been protected and are protected.

The statement of my colleague before the Committee on Elections No. 1 that some of the election judges in Chicago have been convicted of fraud might have influenced some of the members of the Elections Committee, but may I say right here that it is the practice and the things that my colleague did during the election that bring about and are responsible for the frauds committed by the election judges and the clerks of election. The evidence discloses that my colleague [Mr. Britten] offered prizes of $250 in each ward to the captain and the workers of the precinct that would give Mr. Britten the largest vote in the precinct. It is because of that fact and because of the desire on the part of these election judges and some of the political workers to obtain this large sum of money, namely, $250, that Mr. McAndrews believes that frauds were committed. The tally sheets have been changed and the votes have not been properly counted.

May I say to the Democrats as well as to the Republicans that I would not vote against this resolution or against my colleague [Mr. Britten] if I thought for one single minute that justice would not prevail. I harbor no ill will against my colleague [Mr. Britten], with whom I have served long, despite the fact that he has, for a reason I do not know, charged me with pressing this contest. I have made a few inquiries of two members of Elections Committee No. 1 and urged that some action be taken, as there was a continuous demand from the Democratic leaders and the Democrats in general that a Democratic House give Mr. McAndrews an opportunity to prove that he and not Mr. Britten was elected.

Therefore, I repeat that I have no personal interest, that there is no animosity, and that all I desire, even now, is that Mr. McAndrews be given the merited opportunity of a recount.

In view of that fact and the manly position assumed by contestant, Mr. McAndrews, the recklessness and unworthiness displayed by my colleague, Mr. Britten, and his lawyers in attacking the character of the contestant is deplorable. Mr. McAndrews for six terms served honorably and ably in this House, and who, contrary to the charges, has resided for many years in that district and, in fact, has spent more time therein than has my colleague, the contestee. Mr. McAndrews was born and reared in the city of Chicago, and has held many important positions of trust, is honored and respected by all who know him; no one is held in higher esteem than he, and long before my colleague, Mr. Britten, or I reached the city of Chicago, Mr. McAndrews was favorably known to a majority of the people of that district.

The charge made by the contestee against the county judge and the election board, before the Elections Committee, was willful and malicious. The same can be said as to the attacks Mr. Britten has made against the Illinois Democratic leader, Mr. Nash, and, surely, the wise-cracking remark as to myself, though undeserving of attention, caused me to remark, or counter, that I may not have such a luxurious residence in my district, nor such a mansion in Washington as he has.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] suggested what evidence there was to justify the opening of the ballot boxes or for a recount. In answer to his query, I wish to say that, in addition to the witnesses who testified as to the $250 prizes or rewards offered to precinct captains and workers for the highest votes for Mr. Britten, Mr. Arthur G. Murray, who has served in many election contests, and who is considered an expert, testified that the split vote given was so unreasonably high in favor of the contestee that they were three to five times greater than the usual split vote. This is shown by the vote in the precincts in every one of the wards. The following table shows the disproportionate vote in many of the precincts:

In the forty-second ward:

Precinct	Straight vote	Split vote	Vote credited to Britten
5	69	207	276
7	87	280	367
19	75	202	277
23	55	244	299
25	53	260	313
26	48	234	282
31	56	139	195
49	88	181	269

And in the forty-third ward:

Precinct	Straight vote	Split vote	Vote credited to Britten
21	75	247	322
36	50	229	279
38	68	241	309
41	55	210	265
42	44	222	266

Likewise, in the forty-fourth ward:

Precinct	Straight vote	Split vote	Vote credited to Britten
1	49	168	217
3	57	259	316
4	49	215	264
5	71	227	298
11	41	209	250
12	61	196	257
14	80	265	345
15	61	149	210
16	104	244	348
29	57	203	260
31	90	230	320
36	80	274	354
38	21	219	240
41	83	219	302
43	51	151	202
44	43	167	210

Also, in the forty-sixth ward:

Precinct	Straight vote	Split vote	Vote credited to Britten
18	79	213	290
31	60	255	315
32	84	276	360
33	63	227	290
43	61	139	200
44	90	189	279
45	32	127	159
46	72	254	326

It is upon this evidence that the contestant, a gentleman of splendid reputation, who served in this House five or six terms with marked fidelity and ability, believes that if the ballots are recounted it will clearly show that the judges and the clerks of elections, due to the temptation and in the desire of winning the rewards offered, changed the tallies and credited Mr. Britten with many votes that were not cast for him.

In view of this disproportionate vote and the testimony given, and in view of the fact that the ballot boxes are certified as intact, I feel that there should be a recount, and, if I were in my colleague's position, I would not oppose that motion. I repeat, that is all I ask in the resolution which I have offered as a substitute for the committee's resolution, and which I feel, in justice to the contestant, the sanctity of the ballot, and the House, should have prevailed. The resolution reads as follows:

Whereas Committee on Elections No. 1, on March 15, 1934, ordered a recount of the votes cast in the election held November 8, 1932, in the Ninth Congressional District in the State of Illinois; and

Whereas a subcommittee was authorized to recount the ballots and to obtain a determination of the actual votes cast for contestant and contestee; and

Whereas notwithstanding said action of said committee, and without said recount having been made, the committee reported on April 23 to the House recommending the adoption of a resolution entitling contestee to retain his seat; and

Whereas the action of the committee was taken without notice to the contestant, and thereby nullified its own previous action without due procedure or formality of notice to contestant: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 1, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to recount the ballots cast in said election and to report to the House the number of votes received by the contestant and the number of votes received by the contestee.

The Chairman of the Elections Committee, who acted in a most unfriendly manner, and who under the rules of the House refused to yield to me, precludes the obtaining of a vote on my substitute resolution.

In conclusion, I cannot refrain from stating that this arbitrary action, as well as the action of the gentleman of the Elections Committee who first moved that the ballots be recounted and who some weeks later moved to rescind the action of the committee, is difficult for me to comprehend. There is a great deal more that I could say which I shall refrain from saying at this time; but when the opportunity presents itself I will name the Members and some nonmembers of this House who may be responsible for the reconsideration of the first action of the committee and for its refusal of the recount.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have never, since I have been a Member of the House, objected to a request of this kind; however, I can see in a delicate matter such as an election contest the opportunity to lodge in the hands of the gentleman from Illinois a weapon that might do irreparable damage to my colleague, Mr. BRITTEN. I do not believe it is fair under the fiction of revision and extension of remarks to permit 35,000 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to go out setting forth a statement of the case by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], which my colleague, Mr. BRITTEN, has not the opportunity to properly answer. Therefore I am constrained to object, as much as I am reluctant to do so.

Mr. SABATH. Would the gentleman object to the real honest facts and truths going before the people?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no objection to the gentleman making his presentation on the floor of this House where there is adequate opportunity to answer him, but I do not believe it is fair to grant the gentleman's request under the circumstances to extend all this information and material in the RECORD, which cannot be answered, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I am in the embarrassing position of coming before this honorable body defending the Republican side rather than the Democratic side. I am one of the Democratic members of Election Committee No. 1, to which committee was assigned this case of McAndrews against Britten.

The charges involved in this case were, first, that Mr. Britten, the Republican candidate, offered prizes to the various precinct captains whose precincts voted the largest votes in proportion to the Republican votes that were given in these precincts. The evidence is that he offered $150—some say $200—to the precinct captain in whose precinct the largest proportionate vote was turned in. To the second precinct captain he offered $100, and to the third precinct captain receiving the highest proportionate vote he offered $50. There is some dispute as to the exact amount that was offered. Some of the testimony is that he offered $250 to the precinct captain in whose precinct the highest vote was recorded. It is immaterial whether it was $250 to the first man or $150. The principle is the same. It is a question as to whether or not his conduct in offering these prizes was a violation of the Corrupt Practices Act. If it was a violation of the Corrupt Practices Act, it is immaterial as to the amount offered.

The evidence in the case is undisputed that Mr. Britten offered these prizes to the precinct captains. There is no dispute as to that fact, and, in fact, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] admits it himself. The record in the case so indicates. What the committee had to decide was whether or not the offering of these prizes was in fact a violation of the Corrupt Practices Act.

Section 150 of title 2 of the United States Code, Annotated, reads as follows:

> It is unlawful for any person to make or offer to make an expenditure or to cause an expenditure to be made or offered to any person either to vote or withhold his vote or to vote for or against any candidate, and it is unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such expenditure in consideration of his vote or the withholding of his vote.

Now, the charge in relation to that is that during the campaign the said Britten, for election to the Congress of the United States, offered to make expenditures to certain persons to vote for him, the said Britten, by offering to make an expenditure in the sum of $250 to the precinct captain whose precinct would give Britten the largest vote and by offering to make an expenditure of $100, and so on.

It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that the action which the Republican candidate took, and which is admitted, did not fall within——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. As I say, the question is whether or not the admitted conduct of Mr. Britten came within the terms of the Corrupt Practices Act, section 250, which I have just read.

It was the unanimous opinion of the committee, the Democratic members as well as the Republican members, that the conduct of Mr. Britten did not constitute a violation of this section.

It was argued in the brief for Mr. McAndrews that this was an expenditure to influence votes.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman in how many precincts these prizes were offered and about what was the total amount in prizes offered in the congressional district?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. I have not the information before me as to that.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. If the gentleman will permit, is it not the gentleman's recollection that three prizes were offered to the precinct captains making the best showing on election day, and that there were 172 precinct captains eligible to receive these prizes? Of course, their identity was not known until long after the election when the votes had been canvassed, and if anyone can be said to have been bribed, he certainly did not know he was bribed and could not have known it until about 3 months after the election was over.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I may say to the gentleman and to the House that there were two prizes offered in two wards of my district, each of them consisting of $250, divided, $100 for the first, $75 for the second, $50 for the third, $25, and $15, and the total amount of prizes in the entire district was $500.

Mr. BRENNAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BRENNAN. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that Mr. Britten and his attorney appeared before the committee and consented and agreed that these ballot boxes should be opened?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. One of the questions is whether or not they did consent, and I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. BRENNAN. May I ask one further question? If they did consent, did such consent have any bearing on the actions of the committee?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. The apparent consent did have a bearing on the actions of the committee.

I think the Members of the House who will read section 250 of title II, will readily appreciate the fact that the conduct which Mr. Britten admits does not come within the provisions of this section.

It seems to me that probably the law should be changed to provide that prizes should not be given. In some States the law is that money cannot be expended to influence votes. This is the law in my State; but so long as the law remains as it is, your committee did not feel it could hold any other way than it did in this respect.

Another point that was raised as showing corruption was the fact that Mr. Britten, the Republican candidate, used franked stationery in connection with his campaign. The committee was of the opinion that this does not come within the purview of this election contest.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. The testimony on this point was that 2 months or more after the election Mr. Britten used his stationery and franked envelops to write to Chicago to ascertain the names of the precinct captains who were entitled to these rewards.

The evidence shows that probably not more than 25 were franked for this purpose. Whether or not this was reprehensible conduct was not within the province of the committee to take into consideration in an election contest.

The third ground, and the principal ground, of contest was based upon the fact that Mr. Britten obtained an unusually large number of split votes.

There was not one iota of testimony, direct or indirect, to show that there was fraud in the counting of these ballots, and the only evidence that was in the case on the part of the contestant was that a witness from Chicago testified that he had participated as an election clerk or an official in a good many contests and that the proportion of split votes that Mr. Britten received was unusually large. Upon this ground the committee was asked to hold that there was fraud in this election.

It was testified in the case that Mr. Britten had resided in his district for more than 20 years; that he was active in matters concerning the Naval Affairs Committee; that he was active in obtaining the location of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station there; that he was thoroughly at home in that district, was well known there, and had conducted an active campaign.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that that was the statement of the attorney for Mr. Britten? There was no such evidence as to the residence of Mr. Britten or the short residence of Mr. McAndrews. That was the statement of Mr. Britten's attorney.

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. The gentleman may be correct; I was under the impression that that was in the testimony—at any rate, the statement was not denied.

But I want to say that the committee, taking the split vote alone, in its opinion would not have justified it in holding that there was fraud in the election or in the counting of the votes. That was the principal reason urged for the unseating of Mr. Britten.

Now, the question came up as to the agreement that a recount should be made. It is true that in the argument made by the counsel for Mr. Britten there was no transcription made of the argument, but in the course of his argument, in answer to a question, he contends that he said that he would not be afraid of a recount. Some of the committee felt that his statement was in the nature of an agreement for a recount, and some of them felt that even though there was no evidence that would justify it in the record that if the two contestants mutually agreed for a recount the committee could see no harm in granting one.

Mr. BRENNAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BRENNAN. Am I correct in stating that the committee agreed to a recount?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. At one time the committee voted that there should be a recount.

Mr. BRENNAN. Has there ever been any other action taken by your committee up to the present time?

Mr. PARKER. The committee afterward reconsidered that action.

Mr. BRENNAN. I was at the hearing, and the agreement was that the ballots should be opened, and there was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman is mistaken. There was no such agreement.

Mr. BRENNAN. No agreement, but after the meeting it was agreed by your committee that the ballots should be opened.

Mr. PARKER. We went into executive session after the meeting, and the committee rescinded its former action.

Mr. BRENNAN. Since the determination to open the ballots, has there been any hearing on the matter since that time?

Mr. PARKER. We did have an open hearing, at which the gentleman was present.

Mr. BRENNAN. Who appeared?

Mr. PARKER. Judge SABATH and the gentleman——

Mr. BRENNAN. I was not present.

Mr. PARKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he was Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. BRENNAN. I should like to know what happened to warrant a change in the decision of the committee.

Mr. PARKER. If no other gentleman tells you, I will tell you in a minute. Mr. Speaker, I want to withdraw the statement I made that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRENNAN] was present. I thought he was Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this a unanimous committee report?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Yes; it is a unanimous committee report.

Mr. BLANTON. And the committee is composed of a majority of Democrats and a minority of Republicans, and yet reports this unanimously, deciding the case in favor of the Republican?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then what is all this fuss about?

Mr. TERRY of Arkansas. I shall not take up any more time of the House, except to say that I am a new Member, having come here last January. I was put on this Elections Committee. I feel that when one takes his place on an Elections Committee he thereby assumes a quasi-judicial position, and when he goes into the Elections Committee room he should leave behind him any question of partisanship, and he should decide the cases that come before him between Democrats and Republicans the same as though there were no party lines. [Applause.] And that is what the Democrats and the Republicans did in this case, and I appeal to Members of this House to sustain the action of the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I fear that if I let this opportunity pass without saying something the Committee on Accounts, after the happenings of yesterday, might sink still further in the estimation and esteem of the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]—and this is the occasion for my saying something, called attention to the fact that a resolution for funds for a recount was presented, and a hearing was held before the Committee on Accounts. That is correct. I granted a very quick hearing upon the understanding and assurance that the Elections Committee was unanimous in its opinion that there should be a recount. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER], the chairman of the committee, was notified, as was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], and other gentlemen appeared. We have felt in the Committee on Accounts that when we report out a resolution to the House we must have something with which to back it up. Not one single charge of fraud in this contest was presented to us, not one earthly reason was given why there was even a necessity for a recount, and I am safe in saying that that committee, composed of 7 Democrats and 4 Republicans, was unanimous that no case had been made out so far as a recount was concerned. We later heard that the Elections Committee reconsidered and by a unanimous vote decided against a recount.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I know nothing whatever about this case. I am not a member of the Elections Committee. I do know that up until a few days ago one of the greatest lawyers in this House was the chairman of that committee. I speak of my colleague, Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. He is one of the ablest and fairest and squarest men I have ever known in my life. I know that a few days ago our friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER], who likewise has the confidence and esteem of this House, succeeded Mr. CLARK as chairman of that committee.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Not now. I know that the Elections Committee is composed of 6 Democrats and 3 Republicans and that they now come in with a unanimous report that there is nothing to this contest.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. In just a minute. Mr. Speaker, I am a partisan down-the-line-organization-caucus Democrat, if you please. [Applause and laughter.] But I am not so partisan that I am going to cast a vote in this House to steal a seat from another Member when nothing has been shown to warrant it. We have had enough of that in times past, and the Republican Party has been much more responsible for such occurrences than we have, probably because they have been in power longer. We know all of the outrages that happened here following the Civil War and on down. I think one of the most flagrant cases, one of the greatest outrages ever perpetrated on this floor, was when, in the expiring hours of a Congress, 3 hours before the Congress died, my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER], was unseated by a majority of 1 here in this body and 2 years' salary and other emoluments were voted to the man who contested that seat, Mr. WEAVER having been overwhelmingly elected to take the new seat which the contestant warmed for 3 hours.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Not now. I know that recently, because I was on the committee that heard the cases, in the case of our friend, Mr. PALMISANO, of Maryland, a recount was ordered, and it was in that case that the deadly social lobby tried to get in its work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WARREN. In the Palmisano case, I went with Mr. Speaker Garner to the late Speaker of the House, Mr. Longworth, when Mr. Garner exposed to him the rottenness that was being concocted when friends of the contestant were knocking at our doors, using their social influence with every Member of the House to seat him. I am hoping that those days have gone and we will no more decide election cases on such things as that. I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], who has just spoken, that we ought to sit as solemn judges in these cases and cast our vote according to law and evidence and free ourselves from any feeling or spirit of partisanship. Mr. Britten should be unanimously seated. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina yields back 1 minute.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman yields to me now; he has a minute left.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina has yielded back his time.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, in the very beginning let me state that I am in hearty accord with the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], a member of the committee. When the gentleman from Arkansas tells you that no member of Elections Committee No. 1 has considered any action in any of these election contests along partisan lines he is telling the unvarnished truth. While, the committee has voted to seat 3 Republicans in this House, it did so because it believed these 3 Republicans were elected to membership in this body.

We Democrats on the committee are partisan, yes, every one of us. We come from Georgia, from Arkansas, from Texas, and from Louisiana. It is needless for me to say that we are partisan Democrats; but I believe every member of this committee is an honorable gentleman. There is not a thief in the crowd, and I am sure there is not a man holding membership on the committee who would vote to steal an election from anybody regardless of political affiliation. With respect to the victim in this case, my good friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] we recognize that he is partisan. As a matter of fact, he came before the committee and told us that he was partisan. I would not have any respect for him if he were not partisan; I think he ought to be partisan; and I think we ought to be partisan. But I do not believe we ought to be partisan when we go into a committee room and undertake to decide between man and man as to which one of them was elected to a seat in the House of Representatives.

I have had some experiences along this line myself. I was elected to office in a State-wide election and had the office stolen from me, stolen from me by Democrats, too. [Laughter.] I went into a Democratic convention after I had gotten the vote of the people in the primary, and the delegates to that convention from 21 of the counties in Georgia which I had carried, voted against me and I lost the office I had won at the hands of the people. You would not expect me, after having had such an experience, to be in favor of doing anything but justice to a man who has waged a campaign and has offered himself as a candidate for office. I mention this merely that you may know that there is not any remote possibility that I would try to steal any election from anybody. I feel too strongly on the subject.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. For a question; yes.

Mr. SABATH. Did anyone attempt, or was any effort made, to steal the election from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten]? Is it not a fact that the only thing Mr. McAndrews ever urged and requested was that a recount be had so that the committee would have before it evidence on which it could act?

Mr. PARKER. I cannot answer the gentleman's question, because I do not know the facts in the case.

Mr. SABATH. And is it not a fact that the committee originally voted to order a recount to satisfy itself whether Mr. Britten had been elected or whether Mr. McAndrews had been elected?

Mr. PARKER. I shall address myself to that proposition right now, and I shall answer your question fully.

Mr. Speaker, on March 14 the committee had a hearing; I believe that was the day. In the course of his argument to the committee, counsel for the contestee, Mr. Britten, made the statement that he had nothing to fear from a recount. The committee understood from what Mr. Britten's counsel had said that the gentleman from Illinois did not object to a recount being ordered. One of the Democratic members of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], suggested that if nobody objected to the recount, he thought the committee might go ahead and order it. We took no action in the case that day, but when the committee met again the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] made the motion that the recount be ordered, believing, as he did, that neither the contestant nor the contestee had any objection to a recount. This resolution was adopted by the committee and placed on the minutes. Five or six weeks elapsed, and nothing was done except that the chairman of the committee tentatively appointed two members of the committee, one Republican and one Democrat, to go to Chicago and count the ballots.

Some time thereafter the chairman of the committee was designated as a member of the Rules Committee and gave up his appointment to the Committee on Elections No. 1. After his resignation from the committee, the incumbent took over his duties as chairman. There was that resolution on the minutes, and no arrangements had been made whereby it could be carried into effect.

The first thing I did after I became chairman of the committee was to introduce a resolution asking for funds with which to conduct the recount. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts. I appeared before the Committee on Accounts as did a number of other Members of Congress. When I appeared before that committee, it wanted to know on what evidence our committee had authorized this recount. I told them very frankly that in my opinion the recount had been ordered by the Elections Committee because it believed that neither party to the contest objected to the ballots being counted.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Britten] stated that he had violent objections and that he had already told the former chairman of the committee, my predecessor, that he wanted to be heard. He said he understood that the committee believed he had no objection to this recount, and he wanted to appear before the committee and correct this impression. After I became chairman of the committee he made the same statement to me. I called the committee together and laid the facts before it and asked the members if they wanted to hear Mr. Britten. The committee voted unanimously to have another hearing and to permit Mr. Britten to come in and tell us how he felt about the recount. Several Members of the House from Illinois attended that hearing. We did not shut anybody off. I think the committee was in session some 2 hours or more.

I let everyone talk who wanted to talk. It was an informal, open hearing. There was nothing secret about it. After this hearing was over, and after Mr. Britten had stated he had never agreed to the recount and that he did not want one, we went into executive session, and the committee voted unanimously to reconsider the action it had taken in ordering the recount. Mr. Britten stated he did not believe a recount would hurt him, but he said he could not afford to make any such agreement.

At that meeting every member of the committee was present. After Mr. CLARK was transferred from the committee there was a vacancy and there were only 5 Democrats and 3 Republicans present at the meeting, but all 8 of them voted to reconsider the action, and the motion to reconsider was made by the same Democrat, Mr. BAILEY, of Texas, who had made the motion in the first place to authorize the recount.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. After moving to reconsider, then did the committee vote not to have the recount?

Mr. PARKER. Not that day. Two or three days later we had another meeting in executive session, at which time we considered all the evidence in the case and every Democrat and every Republican member of the committee decided that there was absolutely nothing in the contest and that there was absolutely no ground for unseating Mr. Britten or for even asking for a recount.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN. In the gentleman's opinion, and in the opinion of the other members of the committee, there was no evidence of collusion or fraud that would warrant spending thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money sending people out there?

Mr. PARKER. Absolutely none. If it had not been for the fact that the committee believed all parties to the contest were willing to have the recount, none would have been suggested by the committee in the first place.

The charges against Mr. Britten were that he violated the Corrupt Practices Act. We heard the evidence and we decided that there was absolutely no evidence to substantiate this charge.

The second charge was a reiteration of the first charge with some additions but it too fell flat. There was absolutely no evidence to substantiate it. The third ground was that there should be a recount because Mr. Britten had received a disproportionate number of split ballots.

In all fairness, I want to state that if the fact that a Republican ran ahead of his ticket in the elections of 1932 is any ground for a recount, I think we would have to recount the ballots in the districts from which everyone of you gentlemen on this side of the aisle come. I do not know a Republican Member of this House who did not run ahead of his ticket in 1932. If they had not run ahead of the ticket they would not be here, and it is only natural that Mr. Britten, who has been in this House for 22 years, would run ahead of his ticket in Chicago.

As I understand it, Mr. Britten is the senior Republican in the House. He has been here longer or as long as any other Republican Member, and I was not willing—and no other member of the committee was willing—to subject him to a recount 2 years after the ballots were cast and perhaps cause him to lose his seniority in the House, his committee assignments, and all the other prerogatives that go with long Membership in the House of Representatives without good and sufficient reasons substantiated by evidence. The committee did not believe there was anything to the contest.

We have been frank and honest about the matter. We have brought our report to you. It is a unanimous report. It has the concurrence of every Democrat on the committee as well as the Republicans, and I had hoped when the report was submitted to the House it would not be necessary to take up any of the time of the House. I know of nothing further that I care to say, and I do not believe it is necessary to say anything more.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. [Applause.]

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I yielded the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman desires to use only 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DOUGLASS. That is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. At the conclusion of the 5 minutes I shall move the previous question.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the action of the Committee on Rules in giving this legislation the right-of-way at this time. Large expenditures of public money are made from time to time by the Congress of the United States, but at no time can we as public servants render a greater service than in the expenditure of the people's money for the development of education.

This proposed legislation, Mr. Speaker, will reach and benefit every section of our common country. In times of depression, want, and distress I know of no program or action that this House could take that would mean more to the common citizenry of the country than a liberal appropriation for vocational training. It reaches the homes of the great masses of the common people in every section of the country. The resources of the people have been depleted and in many States and in many sections, except for the strong arm of the Federal Government reaching out in an effort to help the citizenship, vocational education would not be available in many sections.

Every man is entitled to an equal opportunity in life, and the advantages of education should be available to every citizen in this country. By this appropriation of $3,000,000 we make an investment throughout the United States that will declare dividends for all time. No man or woman has ever been enabled to adequately appraise the value of one human life. No statistician will ever be able to calculate the worth of a Washington, a Jefferson, or a Jackson. So in making this contribution to help the forgotten men and women of this country we truly are playing the part of the good Samaritan.

Many reckless expenditures characterize our deliberations from time to time. My only criticism of this legislation is the fact that only $3,000,000 is proposed by the bill. If the opportunities were such and the resources of the country were adequate, I would favor a greatly increased appropriation at this time. I am glad to say that many of the appropriations of a reckless character have not characterized this administration as have characterized former administrations.

No man could rise in his seat on the floor of this House and justify an expenditure of $11,000,000 in the erection of one public building for nine Supreme Judges or $46,000,000 in the erection of another public building down the Avenue and then undertake to say that only $3,000,000 should be available to forward human destiny and build character in this country.

Vocational education and training by reason of this appropriation will reach every part and section of the country. It will afford an opportunity for young men and women in the country to receive special and technical training that would not otherwise be available to them. It gives the farmers' sons and daughters an opportunity for vocational training. It affords them an opportunity in life to which they are so justly entitled. Every father and mother is anxious to give their children the best training and most advantages possible. This appropriation will afford them equal opportunities with those in more favored industrial centers. It gives to the farmers' sons special schooling in agriculture and farm life. It extends to his daughters an opportunity to make a special study of home economics, domestic science, and kindred subjects so helpful to them. The safety of our Government rests in the contented homes of America. No nation will ever be great that does not have an educated, trained, and patriotic people. The birthplace of liberty is in the homes of the farmers. It is in the country where freedom has its birth. The money being appropriated in this bill is an investment in future citizenship. We are investing in young men and women of America.

There should not be a single vote in opposition to this measure. It has been well said that "education is a debt due from present to future generations." We should encourage and educate the young men and women, the boys and girls of today, for upon them soon the responsibility of government will rest. We should prepare them by training and education for this great responsibility. The only investment worth while in this country is in the development of character and spiritual value. It is in the making of men and women. It is in the proper training and development of the mental, physical, and moral man.

Let us continue in our efforts to render service to those so deserving and so worthy as the sons and daughters of the farmers of America.

It has been well said that man made the city, but a kindly and All-Wise Providence made the country. When the only sinless man who ever lived was on earth He dwelt in the open places. He selected his disciples and teachers from the shepherds on the hills and the fishermen on the banks of the rivers and streams.

Let us continue in our efforts to better conditions and improve opportunities in the country homes of our people.

Only by doing this can we measure up to the responsibility expected of us by those who send us here and whose servants we are honored to be, and for whom I am proud to speak.

Let us keep in mind that he lives the most who serves the best. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, before moving the previous question I think it might be proper for me to make the announcement that at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill it is the purpose to call up the rule for the consideration of the Dockweiler bill affecting the compensation of rural carriers, and we hope to dispose of that measure before adjourning this afternoon.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Will that probably conclude the work for the afternoon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should think so, but in the absence of the majority leader I should not like to make that as a definite statement.

Mr. SNELL. I believe earlier in the day the majority leader said to me he believed that would be the program.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is a reasonable assumption, but I should not like to make such a statement in his absence.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. When do we take up the Johnson bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I stated to the gentleman in private conversation yesterday, of course, we are amenable entirely to the suggestions of the majority leader as to when that bill shall be called up.

Mr. RANKIN. Will it be called up this week?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot tell the gentleman. Of course, the Committee on Rules is ready to go ahead and present the rule for its consideration whenever it is put on the program.

Mr. RANKIN. The rule has been reported?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and is on the calendar.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7059) to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 7059, with Mr. ROBERTSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ELLZEY].

Mr. ELLZEY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in the year 1917 Congress passed the Smith-Hughes Act. This authorized an appropriation of money for the purpose of cooperating with the States in promoting training in trades and industries, vocational agriculture, and home economics.

The first year the authorization carried $1,660,000 for this purpose. This amount was increased until it reached its peak in 1926, carrying, at that time, $7,167,000 for this purpose. This continued until 1929, when the George-Reed Act was passed. The George-Reed Act was for the purpose of further providing vocational education and it carried an authorization of $500,000 the first year and was effective for a period of 5 years, adding each year an increased amount of $500,000, making, therefore, for the present year an authorization of $2,500,000.

Under the first Economy Act during the Hoover administration this allocation for Smith-Hughes funds was reduced from $7,167,000 to $6,450,300, and then under the present administration it was further reduced to $5,940,000, making a total reduction in the Smith-Hughes funds for vocational education of $1,227,000.

Under the George-Reed Act the allocation reached as high as $1,500,000 for the year ending June 30, 1933. Then the Economy Act of this administration reduced that to $1,275,000, making a reduction of said funds of $1,225,000, or a total reduction of Smith-Hughes and George-Reed funds of $2,502,000.

I repeat these facts: The total authorization at the peak for the Smith-Hughes appropriation was $7,167,000, plus the George-Reed appropriation of $2,500,000, making a total of $9,667,000. With the passage of the pending bill, Mr. Chairman, the George-Reed Act expiring in June of this year, an additional $3,000,000 will be added, which, with the present funds under the Smith-Hughes Act, would make a total of $10,167,000, or an increase of $500,000.

The bill under consideration carries an appropriation of $3,000,000, and of this amount $1,000,000 is for vocational agriculture on the basis of farm population; $1,000,000 for trades and industry on the basis of nonfarm population; and $1,000,000 for home economics on the basis of rural population. In addition thereto it provides for an equalization fund of $84,603, which would guarantee each State a minimum of $5,000.

You will be interested in data given below, viz:

Smith-Hughes Act

Year	Total allotted	Agriculture	Trade-industry (20 percent home economics)	Teacher-training
1930 (June 30)	$7,167,000	$3,027,000	$3,050,000	$1,090,000
1931 (June 30)	7,167,000	3,027,000	3,050,000	1,090,000
1932 (June 30)	7,167,000	3,027,000	3,050,000	1,090,000
1933 (June 30)	6,450,300	2,724,300	2,745,000	981,000
1934 (June 30)	5,940,000	2,520,000	2,510,000	910,000

NOTE.—Authorization for year 1933 was $7,167,000, reduced by Economy Act to $6,450,300; authorization for year 1934 was $7,167,000, reduced by Economy Act to $5,940,000; total reduction, year 1934, $1,227,000.

George-Reed Act

NOTE.—Authorization for year 1933 was $2,000,000, reduced by Economy Act to $1,500,000; authorization for year 1934 was $2,500,000, reduced by Economy Act to $1,275,000. Total reduction year 1934, $1,225,000 (George-Reed funds); total reduction year 1934, $1,227,000 (Smith-Hughes funds); total reduction year 1934, $2,502,000.

Total authorization at peak:
Smith-Hughes Act	$7,167,000
George-Reed Act	2,500,000
Grand total	9,667,000
With passage of this bill for next year you will have	3,000,000
Smith-Hughes Act next year you will have	7,167,000
Total	10,167,000
Increase of	500,000

It seems to me that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL] was entirely correct in his splendid statement in behalf of this worthy cause.

In 1917 the first appropriation was made by the National Congress for vocational education. I feel that the whole program has been well justified. I wish each Member of the House could have heard the testimony of Bobby Jones, of Ohio, who happens to be a good friend and neighbor of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER].

This young gentleman is a product of vocational education, and he thoroughly demonstrated to our Committee on Education that he had not only been trained as a true American citizen but as a practical farmer. I think he clearly convinced the committee that the appropriation had been wholly justified in his case.

I remember that our good friend from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has been such a loyal friend of education, told the committee that a vocational class had once visited his farm. He testified that their knowledge of agricultural facts convinced him that they had been taught very practical information.

Then the bill carries another worth-while feature, and that is the provision with reference to trade and industry. Before our committee Miss Betty Hawley, vice president of the New York State Federation of Labor, testified. I shall read you a portion of what she said:

We feel we are living in the interests of America, and just because we are a little bit better off financially than perhaps some other urban and rural centers, that we have no less responsibility, and particularly those of us who are leaders of labor do care what is happening to Bobby Jones and to the future farmers and his brother Jim O'Rourke from Tenth Avenue. One is the future farmer and the other is the future industrialist, and they are the future America.

May I say in conclusion that in 1917, when the Federal Government made the appropriation to foster vocational education throughout this Nation, the school authorities of the little red schoolhouse on the hill, and wherever they taught vocational agriculture and home economics, appropriated a lot of money for laboratories for agriculture and for home economics. At this particular time it seems wise to continue the appropriation, and I, therefore, hope that this bill will pass.

Summarizing, let me state again that the bill carries $3,000,000 per year for a period of 3 years—$1,000,000 for vocational agriculture, $1,000,000 for home economics, and $1,000,000 for trade and industry. Add this amount to the $7,167,000 Smith-Hughes funds and you will have for vocational education the total amount of $10,167,000. I am convinced that this amount is extremely small, when we take into consideration the fact that this administration has appropriated for national recovery $3,300,000,000; and another act provided $500,000,000 for relief; and still an additional act $950,000,000 for relief. Before we adjourn this term another billion dollars or more will probably be appropriated. Ten million dollars seems to me a pitful sum to contribute to this worthy cause of vocational education, and I think it should be given careful consideration by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein a breakdown of this set-up showing how the $3,000,000 is to be distributed.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to follows:

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Education. I think it is a very necessary and splendid piece of legislation. So far as I know, there is no opposition to the bill from any Member of the House. Therefore, I shall make no extended speech in its behalf, as I do not consider it necessary.

I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill which really is to extend the life of the so-called "Reed-George Act." Some years ago, when the farm situation was becoming rather acute, a commission of business men was appointed to study the situation as it related to agriculture throughout the country. After the commission had made a very exhaustive study of the farm situation throughout the United States, a joint report was published by two organizations, one the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the other the National Industrial Conference Board. I quote briefly from that report the portion which relates to rural education:

[From the Condition of Agriculture in the United States and Measures for its Improvement]

EDUCATION OF THE FARM YOUTH

It is certain that the task of transmitting to the rank and file of the farmers the results of agricultural research work must largely be attacked through improvements in education of the rural youth. * * * The rural schools can be of great help in transmitting better methods to our future farmers. In the opinion of the commission this phase of rural education has not yet received the necessary attention. At present the rural schools consider it their main task to dispense a type of education which seems ill suited to the probable needs of the pupils. Little consideration is given to the fundamentals of agriculture, and the curriculum seems to be shaped almost completely to meet the requirements necessary for entrance into high school or college. It is not suggested that the rural school become a training ground solely for the vocation of agriculture, but the fact remains that most of the children who stay in the locality will pursue that calling, and it therefore seems that a curriculum which does not completely ignore this fact might be more beneficial than that now normally pursued.

The prosperity of the American farmer depends upon his efficiency relative to foreign competitors. To attain and preserve an American standard of living he must constantly keep several steps in advance of those competitors. This can be adequately done only through education. A well-conceived program of education, moreover, will not only help to provide the means of living well but will in itself contribute to better living and working conditions. Its benefits will not be rapidly attained nor spectacular, but they will work out their results in a thousand devious but effective ways, and education will thus be one of the most important means for improving conditions on our farms and giving American agriculture the standing which it must have if the Nation is to maintain its proper place in the progress of mankind.

Above all, the commission wishes to emphasize the importance of giving to our rural education in large degree a character and a quality which will help to conserve and improve rural life. If we are to preserve some of the fundamental characteristics of farming as a way of life and a noble calling, our farm youth must be brought to a clearer realization of its intangible values and its advantages in contrast to urban activities, and the farmer himself must in larger measure be brought to conceive of his occupation not as a temporary makeshift in which he may well be content to accept lower returns for his labor than his city fellow in the hope of speculative returns on his land values, but as an opportunity for a rich, well-rounded life in which his intelligence and culture and all the resources of community life may find full scope for development.

After that report was made there was formulated before the Committee on Education, of which I then had the honor of being chairman, a program, calculated to meet the recommendations of this committee. As I recall it at that time there were some 11,651 rural high schools in the country, but only 29 percent of those high schools were giving any training whatever in vocational agriculture. The purpose of the Reed-George Act was to reach, so far as possible, the other 71 percent of the over 11,000 rural high schools in the country.

If there ever was a time when we needed this legislation it is now. You gentlemen who have recently read the report of Mr. Hopkins realize that there are some 400,000 farm families on the relief roll. The one ambition of the average father and mother is to see that their boys and girls have an opportunity to get an education. They are willing to suffer almost any sacrifice in the interest of their children, and the only hope that many of these farm families now have in the rural districts for their children to receive an education and to prepare them for life is through vocational work that is made possible by the Federal aid that comes through this bill.

We have poured money in great volume into every kind and type and description of public works, but there is nothing more important to America than the education of the youth of the land. It is a condition precedent to the safety of a republic that the rank and file of the boys and girls have an opportunity to at least receive the fundamentals of an education. Daniel Webster once said:

> If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble to dust; but if we work on men's immortal minds, if we imbue them with high principles, with a just fear of God and love for their fellow men, then we engrave on these tablets something which no time can destroy and which will brighten to all eternity.

The purpose of this legislation is to make more effective an instrumentality for achieving the ideals of education so ably enunciated by the great defender of our Constitution.

We have over 11,000 rural high schools in the United States. We are reaching only part of them, but under the Reed-George Act we have narrowed down the percentage, and more boys and girls are having an opportunity to get an education. At this particular crisis, where in many communities rural high schools have been built, it is utterly impossible for those communities to support those schools unless assured of some aid from the Government. We have assisted about everything imaginable in this country, and I want to see this legislation enacted today to underwrite the future of the farm youth of this land. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of this bill. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein letters from President Roosevelt, Mr. Farley, and Mr. Byrns.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take this opportunity to give a brief summary of the achievements of the Seventy-third Congress and tell in a few words the story of the new deal inaugurated by President Roosevelt. My remarks are in a measure a summary of a recent radio address I delivered at the invitation of the Columbia Broadcasting System from Washington on April 20, 1934.

A little over a year ago our Nation had sunk to the lowest point ever reached in the morale of a people. Business, trade, and industry were at a low ebb, and the number of unemployed increased to an extent never before experienced in our history. March 4, 1933, was more than a mere change in administration. It was the beginning of a new social order. No modern state has undertaken an experiment which even remotely compares with the adventure upon which President Roosevelt has embarked. He is the first statesman who has sought systematically to use the power of the Federal Government to benefit the individual.

On March 5, 1933, the calling of a Nation-wide bank holiday was immediately followed by the passing by Congress of emergency legislation permitting the gradual reopening of sound banks.

Through the Public Works Administration and the Civil Works Administration and other agencies of the Government more than 4,000,000 of the 11,000,000 unemployed have been given work during the past winter, thereby eliminating much hardship and suffering.

The National Industrial Recovery Act gives effect to ideas which have been fought for in Congress for over a quarter of a century. This act abolished child labor. The codes of fair competition give a national status to the regulation of hours and wages, increasing employment and raising the general price level of commodities.

The Public Works Act provided for the expenditure of $3,300,000,000 on public works or public-benefiting private works. It has brought forward many projects such as Federal buildings, waterways, and civic improvements that will mean much to all communities throughout the Nation.

FARM RELIEF

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration has attempted to raise agricultural prices by curtailing production. It provides a plan to pay farmers for crop cuts and a method to raise necessary funds by taxing processors.

From 1921 to 1929 buying power that should have stayed with the farmers became concentrated in the great money centers. Overproduction in agriculture reduced the consumer's buying power even more than it reduced the prices of what he needed to buy. By March 1932 farm incomes in the Nation had dropped from $16,935,000,000 in 1919 to $5,250,000,000 in 1932. Farm prices were the lowest ever recorded. The Agricultural Adjustment Act was built upon the principle of price parity for farmers. In other words, fair-exchange value for farm products as measured by their buying power in the pre-war period of normal agricultural stability. While the National Recovery Administration has succeeded in raising wage levels and the price of manufactured articles, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has not been so successful as yet in raising the general price level of farm produce. I am hopeful, however, that in due time the general price level of farm produce will keep pace with the rising price level of wages and articles of manufacture.

The special session of the Seventy-third Congress granted the President broad powers to control currency and sanctioned a temporary departure from the gold standard and abrogated gold clauses in Federal and private contracts.

The Federal Trade Commission has been authorized to pass on all new security issues sold in interstate commerce, through the "truth in securities act", which imposes severe liabilities on sellers of stocks and securities, who fail to furnish prospective buyers with complete information. This legislation is most fair to the rank and file of the American public because of the long history of terrific losses taken by innocent investors over a period of years.

Legislation has been passed providing a system of licensing sound banks and instituting far-reaching bank reforms, including separation of investment, private and commercial banking, and setting up a way of insuring bank deposits. Our banking and currency systems are now on a sounder basis than they have been for many years. Today, owing to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, people may put their savings in a bank with the assurance that their money will be there when they wish to withdraw it.

The Tennessee Valley Authority was created to operate Government properties at Muscle Shoals, Ala. I am confident that this huge undertaking will contribute much in the fight for recovery. The railroads of our Nation had been hard hit by the depression, and legislation was passed creating the Federal Coordinator of Transportation. Much relief has also been extended to the railroads through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The regular session of the Seventy-third Congress, beginning January 3, 1934, enlarged and expanded the forces of recovery given birth during the special session ended June 16, 1933.

The Emergency Farm Mortgage Act provides for the establishment of a corporation to aid in refinancing farm debts and other purposes. It provides for the handling and refinancing of farm mortgages on liberal terms.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

During the present session of the Seventy-third Congress several bills have been introduced to provide for old-age pensions. People who have passed the years where they are expected to work hard should have security. They should not be compelled to compete in the markets for the relatively few jobs. I favor a Federal pension system whereby the aged and destitute can remain at home and spend their last days in peace and contentment.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds heretofore guaranteed by the Government for interest only will now be guaranteed as to principal. This will be of much assistance to the home owners throughout the Nation in view of the fact that many mortgagees had declined to accept the Home Owners' Loan Corporation loan bonds. With this guarantee there should be no more hesitancy on the part of any mortgagee in accepting the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

I have made two recent speeches on the floor of the House in reference to veterans' legislation. During my entire service in Congress I have at all times been a consistent friend of the veterans in my district. I voted for the immediate cash payment of the bonus when the matter came before the House, and I also voted for the Independent Offices Appropriation Act with its provisions for increased benefits to veterans.

I have received letters from Hon. John Thomas Taylor, vice chairman of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, and Hon. James E. Van Zandt, national commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, expressing appreciation and approval of my efforts in behalf of veterans. The North Carolina organization of Veterans of Foreign Wars has officially endorsed my candidacy for renomination and reelection to Congress, and have asked all veterans to support me as an appreciation of my services.

All new-deal legislation has had as prime essentials, first, to give immediate aid to those in dire distress and, second, to create a purchasing power among the masses and to eventually bring back prosperity.

I favor a measure now pending before the Congress providing a plan to pay off depositors of closed banks in full and thereby turning over all sound assets of these banks to the Government to be liquidated over a period of 10 years.

Another measure under consideration provides unemployment insurance whereby the employer in good times will contribute a small percentage of the total pay roll to create a fund to provide a small income for those temporarily out of work.

I favor legislation whereby the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be enabled to give relief directly to private industry.

There is much legislation I have not been able to discuss in the time allotted to me. I can safely say, however, that more real work has been crowded into these last two sessions of the Seventy-third Congress than in any like period of time in the past. It has been my privilege to contribute my share in helping our President in his fight for recovery.

I strongly favor a continuance of the new deal, and I think no half-way measures should be adopted. I believe in doing the job well while we are at it, and there is strong evidence that we are definitely on the road to recovery and that good times are ahead.

A PERSONAL APPEAL TO MY FRIENDS AT HOME

Mr. Chairman, I am a candidate for renomination in the Democratic primary in my district on June 2, 1934; and although I have seen many hundreds of my friends on recent trips to my district, most of my time between now and June 2 will be required at my post of duty in Washington; therefore I ask the privilege of making a personal appeal to my friends at home.

During 12 years of service the interests of my congressional district have always been paramount with me. I have a sense of honor; and if I did not know that I had given good service and did not know that I was in better position than ever before to accomplish things for my district, I would not ask to be returned as their Congressman.

My many years of seniority in the Congress, my position on the Appropriations Committee, the friendships I have made in my years of work at the Capitol, and my close personal association with the present administration enables me to accomplish things for my district now that I would have had to fight for unsuccessfully years ago. I feel certain that I have accomplished more for my district during my last two terms than ever before. President Roosevelt, in the midst of his new-deal program, needs members of Congress with years of seniority and experience to help him at this time. A new member of Congress would need long experience in Federal affairs to give assistance in a crisis like this.

In view of the fact that so many unfair and false reports have been deliberately circulated in the district in an effort to secure my defeat in the coming primary on June 2, 1934, and for the benefit of my friends who have manifested an interest in me and for all those in the district who believe in fair play, I wish to give the opinions of others than myself as to the service I have rendered.

I quote letters from outstanding leaders of our Nation sent to me, unsolicited and voluntarily, in a spirit of sincere appreciation of my efforts. The first letter is from Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, our President, received while I was home for a few days during the Christmas holidays. The second letter is from Hon. James A. Farley, chairman of our National Democratic Executive Committee, Postmaster General, and chief spokesman of the present administration. The third letter is from Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, former Chairman of the Appropriations Committee (of which I have been a member for several years) and the Present Democratic floor leader of the House of Representatives.

Hon. CHARLES L. ABERNETHY,
New Bern, N.C.

MY DEAR MR. ABERNETHY: It is with keen regret that I learn that you have been ill this summer and trust that you may soon be fully recovered. I want you to know how grateful I am for your untiring efforts in support of the administration's policies during the grinding weeks of the special session of the Congress. While we are all looking forward to and counting on this same fine helpfulness during the coming session, I do hope you will pay attention first to your health. Do not let anything stand in the way of your doing this.

When you do come to Washington, be sure to come in to see me.

Many thanks and best wishes for a happy holiday season to you.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 12, 1933.

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING,
Washington, June 16, 1933.

Hon. CHARLES L. ABERNETHY,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I want you to know that I greatly appreciate the support you gave the administration's program during the session just closed. I feel certain the people of the country generally realize that more beneficial legislation was passed at this session of Congress than ever before in the Nation's history.

For the part you played in these remarkable accomplishments I want you to know that I am personally grateful.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely,

JAMES A. FARLEY, Chairman.

OFFICE OF THE MAJORITY LEADER,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS,
Washington, D.C., June 24, 1933.

Hon. CHARLES L. ABERNETHY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CHARLES: May I take this opportunity to express to you my deep appreciation and gratitude for your kindly consideration to me personally during the trying days of the session. Your service and your loyalty to the party made possible the splendid record written by our Democratic Congress at this session.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely your friend,

JO BYRNS.

These letters show conclusively that I have been of real service, not only to President Roosevelt in helping him put over his great recovery program, but also to the Nation and district.

I have at all times kept in constant touch with the affairs of my district. I am carrying on for my constituents as I always have.

When Democrats are privileged to contest in a primary, a spirit of chivalry should prevail. I promise the district that regardless of any unfair and underhand tactics used against me, and regardless of any false reports that may be spread about in the district, I shall say no unkind or harmful word against anyone. I ask to be renominated to Congress on the basis of my record.

As in years past I am personally available to my constituents at all times. I shall continue to try to answer every call made upon me, and the poorest person in my district can now, as in the past, always command my every effort in his or her behalf.

I am deeply grateful for every consideration extended to me by my constituents during my long years of service; and if I am privileged to continue as their Representative in Congress, I promise that I will make every effort in my power to prove worthy of the trust and confidence reposed in me.

As long as the great majority of my constituents want me for their Congressman and encourage me personally and tell me that I am doing well by them, and as long as they continue to write me letters of commendation and approval, I shall carry on.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. McCARTHY].

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, when we realize that a large part of our Federal tax dollar is spent for national defense and roads, then we should surely make no objection to spending an infinitesimal part of that dollar for education. I think few of us realize the crisis in education at this time, except those who have been in close contact with the schools. It is true that education has suffered in all countries during the present depression, but it is a sad commentary that education in America has suffered more during this period than in any other country. Of course, industry and agriculture have suffered, but education has suffered more than either of these, and of course vocational education, along with the other kinds of education, has been greatly hampered on account of finances. When expenses were to be cut, some of these vocational courses were the first to suffer, regardless of the necessity for them and the demand from the general public.

Briefly, I shall go into some of the merits of vocational education. The pending bill authorizes an appropriation to aid these States in paying the salaries of teachers of agricultural, home economics, and industrial education. In many cases these teachers could not be employed for these projects without the benefit of Federal aid.

In the courses on agriculture, instruction is given in the rotation of crops, marketing, soil chemistry, poultry raising, dairying, and animal husbandry. In the home-economics courses, the girls learn how to make their own clothes, which is a very important matter during this time when incomes are so drastically reduced. These courses also include instruction in the care of infants, child development, and home nursing. In these days there are many families which must depend upon home care in case of illness, for they cannot afford to incur hospital bills. This education is practical along other lines. When the clothes are made at home it is important that the seamstress know something about the fabrics that will be used; and the students are taught how to test fabrics used in garments, draperies, and table linens. I am stressing these things that you may know the practicability of this work.

Then, also, to a family with a reduced budget it is important that a well-balanced diet continue regardless of the reduction of income. These classes are instructed that the cheaper cuts of meat, for instance, can be utilized and made just as tasty as the more expensive cuts through proper preparation. This training has enabled many families to have meat on their tables who would not have had it otherwise.

I bring out the fact, also, that too many schools have already closed; and more of them are going to close unless Federal aid continues; a separate bill covers such an appropriation. The pending bill continues the George-Reed Act. Federal aid to vocational education will terminate in July if this bill is not enacted. At this time there are 316 schools in my own State of Kansas already closed. Federal aid money will be of great benefit in paying teachers' salaries.

As we have been told by members of the committee, education is of extreme importance in a representative government. The children of today cannot wait for the passing of the depression to receive their education; they are growing to manhood and womanhood. Federal aid must be given at this time if it is to be of any advantage to them. Vocational education aids not only the youth of the country, but serves also to provide adult education. Many of the older people who attend these vocational schools had no opportunity during their childhood to receive an adequate education. [Applause.]

Mrs. McCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, perhaps few of our citizens, with the exception of the school men and women, who are in touch with the situation, realize the magnitude of the calamity which has fallen upon the schools and children of America. In order to fully appreciate the crisis it is necessary to quote some statistics in regard to losses recently sustained by education. While it is true that retrenchment has come about throughout the world because of economic conditions, yet in the United States it is a sad commentary when we find that education has suffered more during the depression than in any other country.

Hundreds of rural schools in the various States failed to open last fall because of lack of funds, and by the first of the year 2,600 schools were closed to the 140,000 children in attendance. It is estimated that by April 1, 20,000 rural schools had closed, affecting over 1,000,000 children. While the pupils in the primary and secondary schools are of first importance, the tragedy that has come to the school teachers cannot be overlooked. More than 200,000 of these teachers, or one fourth of all public-school teachers, are receiving less than $750 per year, which is the minimum provided for unskilled labor under the blanket codes of the President's reemployment agreement. Of this number, approximately 85,000 teachers are receiving less than $450 per annum. The teachers, by sacrificing a great part of their salaries to keep the schools open, are thereby bearing a greater portion of the tax burden than any other group.

The seriousness of the situation cannot be overemphasized. The success of a representative government depends upon an informed and enlightened citizenry. In civilization and government we are a democracy, and governments are designed to be the agents of a free society. The first public schools emphasized the need of giving solidarity to a new government. Solidarity through education was an urgent necessity to protect the United States from enemies within as well as from enemies without. Today our Government is threatened more by the danger of internal strife than by the possibilities of invasion by a foreign foe. Agitators spreading their propaganda for revolution and communism find ready listeners among the ignorant and uneducated. Prejudices are easily aroused in such groups.

LOSS OF SCHOOL REVENUE

The present financial condition of the school is due to several causes, chief among which are the shrinkage in property values, inability to pay taxes, lower tax rates, and loss or freezing of school money in closed banks. It is clear that many small taxing units can no longer maintain the present educational opportunities unless there is adjustment of the taxing systems of the country. It is most important that each State put its own house in order and tap every available source of revenue before appealing to the Federal Government for aid. The States may complain that the Federal Government has monopolized the revenues of the Nation through the income tax and other Federal levies but many commonwealths have met the situation by imposition of a sales tax, a State income tax, and license taxes.

TEMPORARY EMERGENCY AID

The Civil Works Administration has been the good fairy for a great many Cinderella American schools that were in dire need. The funds of this emergency bureau received from the Public Works Administration were used for repair of school buildings, payment of teachers' salaries, and income to students who were dependent on their own earnings. The Federal Emergency Relief Administration has provided $2,000,000 per month which is furnishing 40,000 teachers employment. Through the Public Works Administration funds for defraying the cost of constructing school buildings are made available, 30 percent as a gift and 70 percent as a loan, and provision is made in other cases for the Federal Government to pay the cost of construction and lease the building to the school district. About $30,000,000 was allotted to schools up to the first of the year.

PENDING FEDERAL LEGISLATION

The use of Federal funds for the schools is not an innovation and is not unconstitutional. As early as 1785 the Confederation set aside land for schools, and these general grants were continued as the various States came into the Union. The act of 1862 known as the "Morrill Act" marked definite changes in Federal policy from general grants to specific appropriations for specific types of education. This was followed by the Hatch Act in 1887, giving Federal aid to agricultural education and initiating the policy of annual subsidies to the States. In 1914 came the Smith-Lever Act for Federal aid for diffusion of information on subjects related to agriculture and home economics. In 1917 the Smith-Hughes Act, designed to promote vocational education, was enacted, and the work in vocational education was further developed under the George-Reed Act of 1929. In 1920 the Federal Board for Vocational Education was given an appropriation for vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry.

The agitation of many school leaders for permanent Federal aid for our educational system has been a deterring factor in meeting the present crisis. It is not questioned that the present emergency is most acute and the fact that Federal aid is the only remedy is unchallenged. Nevertheless, the danger of paternalism and of surrendering the educational system to Federal control, to become a part of political controversies and campaigns, threatens the traditional functions of government.

Due to the many demands which already have been made upon the Federal Government, further expenditures should be curtailed as much as possible; however, even in this national emergency no child of school age should be denied the opportunity of receiving at least a rudimentary education. These children of today are the leaders of tomorrow, and lawmaking and enforcing are conditioned by the existing level of public intelligence and character. Solution of the problem cannot wait and provisions must be made for keeping the school child at his studies.

The Committee on Education has held extensive hearings on the Federal aid bills before it. The data compiled by the Bureau of Education, the National Committee for Federal Emergency Aid for Education and other interested groups indicates that an appropriation of some ninety to one hundred million dollars is necessary. The conditions in some States has been brought about through the elements of nature, that is drought, flood, and the like. In several States the industrial situation is responsible. In others, mismanagement may be said to be the leading factor, due to an overemphasis on providing elaborate school buildings and equipment rather than giving due consideration to the type and methods of instruction. A bill to authorize Federal aid to primary and secondary schools should be enacted before Congress adjourns without fail.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The first appropriation by Congress in aid of vocational education was passed in 1917, and provided for allotting $500,000 to the States for paying salaries of teachers of agricultural subjects and $500,000 for teachers of trade, home economics, and the industrial subjects, these sums to be increased annually until a maximum of $6,000,000 should be reached in 1926.

H.R. 7059 contains two important improvements over the initial legislation. The provision for limiting expenditures for salaries of teachers of home economics to 20 percent of the appropriation is eliminated. The present bill cuts in half the allowance for administration of the act by the Office of Education. During the present school crisis many of the high schools and colleges would find it impossible to continue their present courses in agricultural, home economics, and industrial education were it not for the assistance given by the Federal Government. The Ellzey bill for vocational education distributes the $3,000,000 annual appropriation on the basis of one third to agriculture, one third to home economics, and one third to industrial education, whereas heretofore industrial education and home economics were lumped together and the entire allowance for both was the same as for agriculture. As the committee report states, this is emergency legislation for a period of 3 years, and the States are to take over the program of vocational education as soon as they are able to carry it on.

The present unemployment situation has resulted in a demand for industrial education which can only be met by assistance from the Federal Government.

For those who are not familiar with the courses of study for which Federal aid is given for teachers' salaries, it might be well to describe some of the courses. For example, home economics is not merely cooking and sewing—training is given in home nursing, dietetics, infant care, child development, home dressmaking, testing of fabrics for garments, draperies, and so forth, consumer education, and practical demonstrations in the value of the cheaper foods which can be used in a balanced diet during the present conditions of reduced incomes. The value of the courses in agriculture is well known and covers a variety of subjects, including crop rotation, marketing, animal husbandry, soil chemistry, seed testing, dairying, poultry raising, and so forth. The courses in industrial education cover manual training, drafting, craftsmanship, and industries which fit each particular locality.

Federal aid has enabled the schools having these courses to have better qualified teachers with higher degrees or more experience. The States, by being relieved of part of the salary expense, are thereby enabled to spend more for laboratory equipment and supplies which are so necessary in these courses.

In the State of Kansas a vast majority of the graduates of high schools and colleges go back to farms, or take up the occupation of housewives, and the value of the courses mentioned cannot be overestimated. During this emergency, when there is such a scarcity of "white-collar" jobs, many of the college-trained young men and women find that there is dignity and inspiration in making homes more livable and in relieving their parents of needless drudgery through the use of improved methods. The vocational courses do not direct the student away from the farm or home environment but increase his interest in them.

As long as we pursue a policy of Federal aid to the States for any purpose, this type of assistance which is so valuable should be given a preference, as it is just as important as good roads, or other beneficiaries of Federal donations. Surely the education of the youth of a country under a representative government is of the utmost importance.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order; and I propose to address my remarks to the bills H.R. 8495 and H.R. 8496.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, recently, on the 6th of March of this year, there were introduced in the House of Representatives two bills, H.R. 8495—

To authorize the Secrstary of the Interior to repossess certain mineral lands ceded by Mexico to the United States of America by the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and to provide for the national defense, and for other purposes—

And H.R. 8496—

To withdraw from "disposition and sale" under the public-land laws all lands lying within the exterior boundaries of "alleged" or "duly asserted" Spanish or Mexican land grants, and for the protection of bona fide homesteaders, settlers, and/or innocent purchasers thereon, and for other purposes.

Both of these bills were introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], and, by the way, were introduced by request.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Did the Member who introduced these bills come from California? Is the author of the bills familiar with the situation?

Mr. EVANS. I may say to the gentleman from California that the Member of Congress who introduced these bills is not a member of the California delegation. He is a Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania. I have consulted him with reference to these bills. He told me that he had introduced these bills at the request of one H. N. Wheeler, who, to my personal knowledge, has been carrying on a real-estate racket in the State of California for several years, and who, within the past 3 or 4 months, was convicted of a felony in that connection and is now out on bail under a 5-year penitentiary sentence.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. EVANS. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Was the gentleman from Pennsylvania aware of the character of this real-estate racket that has been worked in California and through which many of our citizens have been defrauded?

Mr. EVANS. I had not finished my statement as to the gentleman's conversation with me with reference to the bill.

Mr. COLDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated to me that he had introduced these bills as requested, but he did not know at the time he introduced the bills that the man who requested him to do so had been tried and convicted in the United States courts in California. He further said that at the proper time he proposed to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bills. I called the gentleman's office on the telephone, but he was not in his office. I told his secretary that I proposed to ask permission to say a few words with regard to these bills and that I hoped he would be present when I made my remarks. This, I may say to the gentleman, is the extent of my knowledge as to the connection of the author of these bills with the California land situation.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose and purport of both these bills impeach the integrity and the validity of the title of two thirds of the homes of the people of California. These bills were introduced at the request and instance of a bunch of racketeers who have been carrying on a racket in California for several years by which operations they have taken from innocent people hundreds of thousands of dollars. The members engaged in this scheme have been indicted from time to time. Just recently three or four of them were tried in the United States court, two convictions being obtained. There were several acquittals, and then one of them was convicted and is now serving time for failing to report in his income tax large sums of money he had obtained from innocent people through the fraud he was carrying on. I am familiar with land titles in California, and I consider the operations of these racketeers the most vulgar sort of fraud I have ever witnessed.

They carry on this racket in a very clever manner. Some of them are attorneys. They have a plan of locating would-be homesteaders on property situated anywhere in the State of California, which properties are a part of the old Spanish or Mexican grant. These properties have been in adverse peaceful possession of their owners for more than 60, 70, or 80 years, following the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848, through which treaty all of this territory was ceded to the United States Government.

A commission was appointed by an act of Congress in 1851 to survey and investigate these Mexican and Spanish grants and pass on their validity. The commission functioned, and the act creating the commission provided an appeal would lie from the decision of the commission to the courts of the United States, and in the absence of an appeal the decision of the commission would be res adjudicata as against the questioning of these titles forever. Thereafter, I may say, the Supreme Court of the United States has in no less than half a dozen decisions held that all those titles were in the first place valid; and if any question could have been raised as to their validity, such questions were settled by the decision of the commission which was authorized by Congress to pass on the same.

Furthermore, the United States Senate in 1929 appointed a subcommittee of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate to go to California and investigate the claims of these so-called "homesteaders." The committee was headed by Senator NYE. Senator Sam Bratton, of New Mexico, one of the ablest land-title lawyers in the country and now on the United States district court bench, was a member of this subcommittee. Senator Dale, of the State of Vermont, an able lawyer, now dead, was also a member of the committee. This committee went to California and held sessions for weeks. They made an exhaustive investigation. They brought before them these very men themselves, these pirates, and it was shown through this investigation that there was not a semblance of merit in the claims of these so-called "homestead locators." Of course, the homesteaders themselves may have been acting in good faith, but the men who led them to file on these lands were not acting in good faith in any instance.

The Senate committee made a report in 1931, and I have before me a copy of the report. It was a unanimous report. I will read a few paragraphs at the conclusion of the report.

NO FACTS INDICATING FRAUD

Although, for the reason stated, it is the belief of the committee that the confirmation of the several grants in the manner previously stated with the subsequent issuance of patent, forecloses further inquiry into the antecedent facts, it may be appropriate to say that the committee's inquiry has disclosed nothing substantial indicating that such grants were not in fact made, or that they were made with attending fraud. Aside from a meager showing that no record of such grants could be found in the archives of the Mexican Government recently, there is nothing to indicate any facts tending to support, even remotely, the charges to which Senate Resolution 291 refers.

CONCLUSIONS

It is the judgment of the committee that the grants in question are separately and severally valid; that their confirmation in conformity with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1851, constitute res adjudicata and cannot be reviewed; that no fraud in connection with its issuance being shown, the patent in each case is conclusively binding with respect to the quantity of land conveyed; that such confirmation of title and issuance of patent present a perfect case of repose of title and foreclose further question; that the attacks being made upon such titles are without substance or foundation and are inspired and furthered by persons seeking to profit financially at the expense of well-intentioned but grossly misled applicants for homestead entry.

Your committee is unanimously of the opinion that those now claiming the lands in question, as successors in interest under the original grants, confirmed as hereinbefore stated, are the unqualified owners thereof and have an unquestioned legal title thereto, and that there is no foundation in fact or in law for the charges which Senate Resolution 291 directed this committee to investigate.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 8 additional minutes.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, when these bills were introduced a few days ago the newspapers of Los Angeles had quite a little to say about the purpose behind these bills. I ask the Clerk to read in my time an excerpt from the Los Angeles Times, issued March 2, 1934, which gives in quite correct detail an interview with the United States district attorney's office in Los Angeles as to the effect of these bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

LAND-GRANT BILL RAPPED—BOOST TO RACKET ASSERTED—LOCAL FEDERAL PROSECUTORS SAY PROPOSED MEASURE MEANS HEAVY COSTS—SCHEME PROVIDES PAYMENTS BY HOLDERS FOR BENEFIT OF CLAIM FILERS

Federal authorities in Los Angeles sharply disagree with the statement of Washington correspondents that the bill introduced recently in Congress by Representative EDMONDS, of Pennsylvania, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, would end the Spanish land-grant racket.

In the opinion of local Federal land officials and United States Attorney Hall and Assistant United States Attorney Thomas, the Edmonds bill would not end the racket, but would continue it, and would pile up mountains of "needless and ridiculous expense" on the Government landowners and the taxpayers.

CITE "SETTLEMENTS"

The "catch" in the Edmonds bill, according to Thomas, is disclosed wherein it provides that the Secretary of the Interior would be empowered to negotiate settlements with the California Homesteaders, an organization whose applications were rejected and their filing fees returned to them, and refer all disagreements over fair prices to a mediation board of three members.

Thomas declared that the California Homesteaders had no legal claim to the property they sought to file on as their applications had been rejected.

"The title originating in the Spanish-Mexican land grants has been many times affirmed by the courts as a good and valid title", said Thomas. "The applicants all seem to believe that by the mere attempt to make an application for a homestead the Government would owe them the duty of helping them take from the present owners some highly developed valuable land."

Many of the rejected applicants were reported to have believed that they would, in the end, if some such a bill as is proposed were adopted by Congress, receive huge sums of money in exchange for their ambitions to become possessed of some of the old land-grant acreage. Most of them tried to file for 160 acres, tendering a fee of $1 an acre. These fees were returned to them when their applications were rejected.

Many of the would-be homesteaders, as soon as their applications were rejected by local Federal land officials, acting under instructions from Washington, paid retainer fees ranging from $100 to $1,000, averaging $500, to carry their appeals from the rejected applications to Washington. If they could not get the land they tried to file on, they apparently believed, it was declared, that they could later collect the money value of the land denied them.

The bill provides the present owners of the old grants would receive a new patent for their lands on payment of $1.25 an acre, with a minimum fee of $10. This would mean that the owners of the Irvine Ranch, encompassing about 47,000 acres of land, would have to pay a fortune for land which has been in their legal possession for many years, and the owners of other grants a sum of money proportionate to their acreages. From this sum of money, so collected, the "California Homesteaders" would be paid the present market value of the land, according to the bill's provisions.

"The bill is so utterly ridiculous that I hesitate to believe any Congress Member will take it seriously, especially those who possess intimate knowledge of the racket, and who are informed as to the findings of the commission and committee reports", Thomas said.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. As I understand the gentleman, the proponents of this bill, having been beaten in the civil and criminal courts, are coming here and asking Congress to give them title to something that does not belong to them.

Mr. EVANS. They come here and ask Congress to consider a bill which will in a way create a background that will support them in continuing a racket which they have carried on for years and also create an atmosphere that there is after all a question as to the validity of these titles and that that question is of such consequence that Congress has taken a hand. This will sound good to the people they have robbed.

Mr. CULKIN. They are asking corrective legislation for a racket?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; the worst kind of a racket. The lands involved in these grants are the highest developed lands in southern California. A score of cities occupy these lands, including part of the city of Los Angeles. There may be a 12-story building on some of this land. There are orange and lemon groves 20 to 40 years old on them. The title to these lands is as good as is the title to land whereon this Capitol stands.

Mr. FREAR. What is the status of the bill?

Mr. EVANS. It was introduced by request and referred to the Public Lands Committee and a hearing requested.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include two more short editorials from Los Angeles papers on this subject. They are very short editorials.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman withdraw the request to include the editorials?

Mr. EVANS. They are very short. I do not care to withdraw the request.

Mr. CARTER of California. I may say that I am constitutionally opposed to the insertion of editorials.

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman just heard one of them read.

Mr. CARTER of California. If the gentleman wants to read them and can get the time to read the editorials, that is a different thing. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman allow me time to read them?

Mr. CARTER of California. I regret I have no more time to yield the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, the time is limited and there are a large number of Members, I understand, who want to talk on the subject of vocational education which we are now considering, and I do not want to take up much of the time, but I should like to have unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include some statistical information in addition to what I may say on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, it should not be necessary to produce many arguments to convince Members of the House of the necessity for this legislation.

Occupational changes everywhere are affecting the opportunity of the individual to adjust himself to his environment, which makes it very essential that we provide this legislation for increasing vocational education.

Some phases of education are being criticized today because much of the education in the high schools is for the purpose of preparing young folks to enter college, and there has not been enough education preparing young folks to enter life direct from high school. A large percentage never even enter college. This is the most practical kind of education at this time, especially in view of the fact that the N.R.A. makes it impossible for young folks under 18 to enter industry, and because of the 40-year or middle-aged deadline employment policy in so many industries. The earning capacity period of the average man is very limited.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. My time is very limited, but if I have any time after I make this statement, I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

The bill now before the House for consideration, H.R. 7059, vocational education, authorizes to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, the sum of $3,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $3,000,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, the sum of $3,000,000.

In 1917, for the purpose of promoting vocational education in the field of agriculture, home economics, and industry, Congress passed the Smith-Hughes Act providing for aid by the Federal Government under a match-fund agreement to the several States. In 1918, $500,000 was appropriated for home economics, trade, and industrial education, and of this amount only 20 percent was decoted to home-economics education, and an additional sum of $500,000 was appropriated for agricultural education.

It was provided that $500,000 was to be added each year until 1926, at which time the total sum appropriated reached $6,000,000.

It was originally intended that this should continue as permanent legislation, but under the so-called "Economy Act of 1932" the appropriation was reduced 10 percent, or $600,000, and a further reduction of approximately $400,000 was authorized March 20, 1933, by an act designated "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government."

As a result of these reductions, agricultural education in 1934 received $2,270,250, while industrial vocational education received $1,830,000, and the amount allocated to home economics was $457,500. The amount, $1,000,000, which, under the Smith-Hughes Act, is annually allotted for maintenance of teacher training was in 1934 reduced to $910,000.

The purpose of the George-Reed bill passed by Congress in 1929 was to add to the amount which the Smith-Hughes bill originally authorized for appropriation to agricultural education and home economics, but excluding vocational training in trade and industry. This bill provided for an equal distribution of the appropriation between agriculture and home economics, the amounts being $500,000 for 1930, to be increased each year after that for 4 years in the amount of $500,000, so that on June 30, 1934, this act expired, thus making necessary the passage of this bill we are now considering if the Federal Government is to continue its past policy of cooperating with the States in financing and encouraging vocational education in agriculture, home economics, in trade and in industry.

The enrollment in Federally aided schools in the year ending June 30, 1933, totaled 253,197. Of this total enrollment 153,062 boys in high schools were enrolled in vocational classes. In the evening schools for adult farmers there were 76,596. In day schools for boys 10,075 were enrolled, and there were 13,464 enrolled in part-time schools for farm youth out of school. Since 1917 there has been an ever-increasing enrollment, which would seem to indicate how great is the necessity for legislation of the kind provided in this bill. The school year ending in June will show for the evening school the largest enrollment in the history of this educational service.

There are three kinds of classes served by vocational teachers, as follows:

First. All-day classes for boys enrolled in high school.

Second. Evening classes for adult farmers.

Third. Part-time classes for boys out of school.

In 1932–33 in the George-Reed department alone there were 1,326 teachers in 1,309 departments in high schools. Forty-three thousand eight hundred and fifty-two boys were enrolled in 3,169 vocational classes for farm boys in high school. It should be kept in mind that these same teachers directed classes for a total enrollment of 21,945 adult farmers attending 836 evening classes and 241 part-time classes serving an enrollment of 3,857 farm boys who were out of school.

Those who were responsible for directing vocational education reported at the hearings conducted by your Education Committee facts which indicate that if the funds provided by the George-Reed Act are withdrawn the present difficult situation in country schools, where most of these departments are located, will be compelled to abandon practically all of these departments. If business conditions were normal, there is a possibility that many of the departments would be able to continue, financed by local and State funds, but under the unfortunate conditions of the depression there is little likelihood that the Department will be able to continue without the aid of Federal funds.

That the financing of this type of education is a profitable investment is indicated in the facts made available by a study of 8,340 former students selected at random in nearly all the States, of which group 59 percent were on farms. This survey was made in 1922. Another survey, in 1927, revealed the fact that there has been no reduction of the 59 percent of former students engaged in using their vocational training in actual farming. A survey made in 1932 showed an increase to 64 percent of former vocational students engaged in farming.

Additional proof of the investment value of the type of education provided for in this bill we are discussing today is evident from a survey made by State Supervisor of Agriculture Education in Virginia, Walter S. Newman. This survey was made of two groups of farmers, alike in every respect, except that one group had enjoyed the advantages of vocational training and the other group had not. The number of years farmed, the amounts of capital, and the years in high school and other factors in relation to each group were equal. The individual labor income of these two groups was determined for a period of over 2 years. Because the 2 years were years of depression, and therefore all labor incomes were low, the comparison in relation to the two groups is valid.

The farmers in the group vocationally trained were able to earn a much larger annual income. Eight hundred and sixty dollars was the average labor income of the vocationally trained farmer as compared with only $549 for the non-vocational group, a difference of $311. In other words, as a result of enjoying the educational advantages such as the provisions of this bill help to make possible, the earning power of the farmers in the vocationally trained group was increased $311 each.

Other convincing arguments which should persuade Congress to vote immediate passage of this legislation are contained in the reports of the serious results that seem inevitable if the Congress should fail to authorize this appropriation to continue vocational education in collaboration with the States. Here are a few of the possible consequences if the funds are withdrawn.

First. Elimination of vocational agriculture in schools will cause the overloading of academic courses and impair the work of the entire school system.

Second. Work now being done by the vocational teachers on relief and recovery programs must be discontinued.

Third. It will be necessary to drop some of the vocational training for the unemployed.

Fourth. The continued development in vocational agriculture will be blocked.

Fifth. Buildings and equipment have been especially provided for vocational agriculture department. If these funds are not made available then it will not be possible to utilize these buildings and equipment.

Sixth. Another serious result of failure to pass this legislation will be the increasing of unemployment by the discharging of vocational teachers now being financed under the funds provided for by the George-Reed Act.

Seventh. In addition to these serious possibilities that would seem to be inevitable if this legislation should fail to be favorably considered is the fact that State funds which have already been appropriated contingent on receipt of Federal funds will, of course, necessarily lapse, and the very serious emergency that now confronts education everywhere will be alarmingly increased.

This bill affords Congress a real opportunity to participate in a great service to the Nation by investing some of the financial benefits of our growing prosperity in building the character and developing the intelligence of the coming generation of citizens whose thinking and whose standards of citizenship will help to determine the Nation's destiny. I earnestly urge the passage of this deserving measure.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, along with the other speakers who have voiced their opinions on this bill, I want to add my endorsement of the thing which this measure is attempting to do.

This bill gives to the State of Kentucky, to be spent in vocational education in trades and home economics and in agriculture, a little over $87,000. As is well known throughout the Union, Kentucky does not rank as high educationally as that State ought to rank. We have been for a great many years under the domination of a bipartisan combine of Republicans and Democrats who have used the educational system of the State and the money that ought to have gone to education as a pawn in politics. This money they cannot use in that way. This money goes to the point where it ought to go, because the Federal Government designates it for this particular purpose.

It gives actual benefit to the boys and girls of the State of Kentucky, and they will be grateful to the national Government for continuing this splendid work which is now being carried on in these fields.

There are other measures before this House to give additional aid to education, and I trust that the Congress will give thoughtful consideration to emergency relief to school systems. Our present head of the educational department of Kentucky, Dr. Richmond, a very able educator, is the head of the National Council of Educators for Emergency Relief. They have made a study of the needs in the Nation as a whole and they have advocated appropriation to the school systems of this Nation. I sincerely hope that before we adjourn we shall have an opportunity to vote on that subject. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER].

(Mr. GLOVER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before us is H.R. 7059, by the gentleman from Mississippi, which is a bill to continue vocational education in the United States. Money spent in developing the youth of our land is never wasted; in fact, no money we have ever spent has brought better results than money spent in vocational education. No nation has ever risen, or will ever rise above the intelligence of its citizenship.

The constitution of my State declares that "Education is the safeguard to liberty and the bulwark of our free institutions and good government." Vocational education teaches the person the practical things of life. Many boys are now drifting around when if they had received a vocational training they would be useful citizens, home owners, and would be helping to maintain a government.

There are many persons who have some physical defect and without being trained for some useful trade or vocation they have a poor chance in life to earn a living as they would like to do. It is for that class I plead.

I had the privilege of serving for 2 years on the Committee on Education. I remember well when we had hearings on a bill for vocational education that several persons who had received training from vocational training schools appeared before us to give testimony of what it had meant to them in life. I remember one in particular who was on the street corner selling pencils for a living. He was induced to take a training course to learn a vocation or trade, and at the time he gave testimony he was earning a good salary and was the owner of a home. Every person growing up should be taught along this line.

The author of this bill has spent a part of his life in educating the youth of the land, and he feels keenly the need of this kind of education for our boys and girls. I can see no reason why anyone should oppose this bill, and I hope it will be passed by a large majority.

I hope the time will soon come when our National Government will contribute to the States a large percent of the money necessary to carry on our schools as they should be. The Government is interested in the education of its citizenship. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time now stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 6 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California 4½ minutes.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusettts [Mr. DOUGLASS].

Mr. DOUGLASS. I thank the gentleman cordially.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 monutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the Smith-Hughes Act passed by Congress in 1917 provided for aid by the Federal Government on a 50-50 basis to the several States to promote vocational education for the benefit of agricultural education, home economics, and industrial training. This is permanent legislation.

In 1934 agricultural education under the Smith-Hughes Act received $2,270,250, home economics received $457,000, and industrial training received $1,830,000. Under the Smith-Hughes Act, in addition, $910,000 was appropriated for the maintenance of teacher training.

In 1929 authorizations were made under the George-Reed Act for additional funds to the original Smith-Hughes authorization in the field of agricultural education and home economics, trade and industrial training being excluded in the George-Reed Act.

In 1934 under the Economy Act $1,275,000 was appropriated under the George-Reed Act, which act will expire on June 30, 1934.

The pending bill provides for a continuation and expansion of the authorization under the George-Reed Act.

The bill, as reported, authorizes an annual appropriation for the next 3 years of $3,000,000, one third to be allotted to agricultural education, one third to home economics, and one third to trade and industrial education.

I am pleased with the provisions made for industrial education. Child labor has been abolished under the new deal. The youth that formerly worked in factories will thus have an opportunity to train themselves for life. The youth is not being, in many cases, employed, so that employment may be given to people who have family obligations. Manual training will be provided, and the youth will be better prepared for life.

Under previous legislation much equipment, at large expense to the local taxpayers, has been provided for vocational training and for home economics.

States, counties, and municipalities are unable to carry on without assistance the vocational work for which equipment has been provided. It is important, therefore, that the George-Reed Act be continued.

Schools are probably harder hit than any other institutions on account of the depression. The salaries of teachers have been drastically reduced. Local taxes are inadequate to provide for the operation of the schools. There was an unusual expansion in school building and construction during the past 15 years. Interest must be paid and bonds must be retired—sinking funds must be provided. Probably no class among us has suffered more than the teachers during the past 4 years as a result of economic conditions. Our schools must be saved.

I have therefore gladly promoted and aided in the emergency in the allocation of relief funds to the cause of education. The program of recovery is not complete; the need for assistance to schools is still urgent; and States, cities, and local districts are unable to support and maintain their schools adequately. I shall continue to cooperate with all of the friends and supporters of legislation to secure additional funds for education to supplement local funds.

The paramount duty of the State and Nation is to provide for the education of the youth. Thomas Jefferson was right when he said:

> There is no darkness except ignorance.

We hear much of the problem of the youth today. Heretofore the high school was intended to prepare largely for the college and university. Comparatively few high-school graduates are now attending college. It is necessary, therefore, for the high schools of the country to revise their courses and to prepare the young men and young women of today for life.

I believe in the countryside. It should be made more attractive. I am an advocate of the ownership of the farm by the man who cultivates the soil. It is just as essential for the farmer to be educated as it is for the engineer to be trained. In the race of life, success is the result of preparation. Home life in the country should be made more desirable. The women who live on the farm should have the comforts and conveniences that obtain in the homes in the towns and cities.

Again, it has been my experience and my observation from my contacts with the vocational schools that they reach a class of students who otherwise would be unable to obtain vocational training or training in home economics. We are coming more and more to believe that education should prepare for life.

My heart goes out to the youth of the land today. We live in a period of uncertainty. Our college and university graduates are without employment. It is more imperative than ever, therefore, that our schools provide training that will enable the youth to be prepared definitely to earn a living as well as to live. The value of vocational education and training in home economics has been fully demonstrated.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the debate upon the election case just preceding when the gentleman from Texas inquired, if there was a unanimous committee report, why all the fuss about it. I am not going to do any fussing about this bill. I am glad that the committee has reported it unanimously, and I think all its details have been thoroughly explained to you. I sincerely hope it will go through speedily and without amendment, as the bill has been carefully thought out and we need hasty action.

This is but an authorization for an appropriation, and not an appropriation itself. The bill must go through the Senate and then back to the Committee on Appropriations. We are nearing the adjournment of Congress, we are told, and, therefore, I ask for speedy consideration and passage of this bill.

I am very much in the position of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL] who so eloquently addressed you yesterday. I am one of the men of the House most thoroughly opposed to Federal aid, but this is one of two bills involving Federal aid that, as chairman of the Committee on Education of the House, by your sufferance, I have favored, and I do it despite my general opposition to Federal aid to education, except perhaps in an emergency, of which we shall hear more later. This vocational education is an established national policy, set in operation 17 years ago. It has worked out well, and it has accomplished splendid results. I could not find it within myself, with all my stern principles and objections to Federal aid, to refuse to help the passage of this bill, and I do it principally because of the argument that has been advanced, though briefly here, and that is on account of the youth of the Nation.

We organized the C.C.C. because there were hundreds of thousands of young men wandering about this country in idleness and temptation. We have appropriated for migratory birds, and I have human nature enough to want to appropriate also for human souls. We have this youth problem before us, and even your C.C.C. men, when they get through their course of training in the C.C.C., will some day have to find means of making a living. Under the N.R.A. code we have closed the doors of the shops and the industries to those under 18 years of age. That multitude of young men and young women is thrown back upon us. We are in a Federal educational emergency, and the surging and dangerous wave of it all is those thousands of youths. Here is a measure providing for vocational education, to take them off the streets at a tender age, when their minds are receptive, and to put them into a vocational school of an agricultural nature, or in an industrial or trade school, or, in the case of the girls, into a home economic school, that their time may be taken up advantageously, and that they may learn a healthful way of making a living. In voting for this bill you are voting for the young men and young women of the future America. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks a portion of the committee report. It is very brief and much to the point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

The Smith-Hughes Act, which was passed by Congress in 1917, provided for aid by the Federal Government, under a match fund agreement, to the several States, in the field of vocational education, for the benefit of agricultural education, and home economics and trade and industrial education.

This is permanent legislation. Starting with the year 1918, $500,000 was appropriated for agricultural education and $500,000 for home economics and trade and industrial education—home economics not to receive more than 20 percent of the latter appropriation. This appropriation of $1,000,000, which was to be divided as mentioned, was to increase each year by $500,000, until in 1926, the sum of $6,000,000 was reached; one half for agriculture and one half for home economics and trade and industrial education, and from 1926 thereafter, it was to remain at $6,000,000. In 1933 the appropriations were reduced 10 percent by an act approved June 30, 1932, the Economy Act. This reduction amounted to $600,000 per year from the total amount. In 1934, the appropriations were further reduced by an act approved March 20, 1933, entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government." This reduction amounted to approximately $400,000.

Thus in 1934, agricultural education, under the Smith-Hughes Act, received $2,270,250; trade and industrial subjects, $1,830,000; and home economics, $457,500.

In addition, under the Smith-Hughes Act $1,000,000 is allotted each year for maintenance of teacher training. In 1934, $910,000 was appropriated.

In 1929 Congress passed the George-Reed bill, the purpose of which was to add funds to the original Smith-Hughes bill in the field of agricultural education and home economics, excluding trade and industrial subjects. The appropriation was to be divided equally between agriculture and home economics. This act provided for $500,000 for the first year, 1930, to be increased $500,000 each year for 4 years. Thus on June 30, 1934, this act expires. In 1933, instead of receiving the $2,000,000 authorized under the act, only $1,500,000 was received under the provisions of the Economy Act. Instead of receiving the $2,500,000 for 1934, $1,275,000 was appropriated under the Independent Offices Act of June 16, 1933.

This bill, as introduced, H.R. 7059, called for $3,750,000 annually and was intended to be permanent legislation. Under the George-Reed Act, now expiring, $1,250,000 of the $2,500,000 authorized in 1934 goes to agricultural education and $1,250,000 to home economics. It was proposed in the bill H.R. 7059 that a further $1,250,000 be added to be allotted to trade and industrial subjects, making a total of $3,750,000.

The committee believes there is no question of the great value of vocational education in each of these phases mentioned. Vocational education has made a splendid social contribution, as evidenced by the testimony and reports of those appearing before the committee in favor of this bill. But it is believed that this problem of vocational education is essentially a problem for the individual State while it is able to carry it on.

From 1930 to 1934 these added provisions to the Smith-Hughes Act helped to meet the emergency which existed and which is now continuing. The committee is reporting this bill, not as a permanent measure but to cover a period of 3 years as an emergency measure during the present depression, in the sum of $3,000,000 annually, commencing with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935; one third to be allotted to agricultural education, one third to home economics, and one third to trade and industrial education. It is believed that trade and industrial education should be included in order to assist those young people who, because of lack of employment, are going back to school to learn trades. It is thought that this is not the proper year and time to withdraw Federal aid, as this action would mean probably the immediate loss of employment to many people engaged in this work, and there is no desire on the part of the committee to bring about this situation.

But it is recommended strongly that the States put their houses in order and prepare themselves, just as soon as possible, to take over this whole program of vocational education, and rid the Federal Government of a task which is properly the duty of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of providing for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for each year thereafter, the sum of $3,750,000. One third of this sum each year shall be allotted to the States and Territories in the proportion that their farm population bears to the total farm population of the United States, exclusive of the insular possessions, according to the United States census last preceeding the end of the fiscal year in which any such allotment is to be made, and shall be used for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects in such States and Territories. One third of the sum appropriated for each fiscal year shall be allotted to the States and Territories in the proportion that their rural population bears to the total rural population of the United States, exclusive of the insular possessions, according to the United States census last preceding the end of the fiscal year in which any such allotment is to be made, and shall be used for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of home-economics subjects in such State and Territories. One third of the sum appropriated for each fiscal year shall be allotted to the States and Territories in the proportion that their nonfarm population bears to the total nonfarm population of the United States, exclusive of the insular possessions, according to the United States census last preceding the end of the fiscal year in which any such allotment is to be made, and shall be used for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors of trade and industrial-education subjects in such States and Territories.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the figures "1935", strike out "and for each year thereafter."

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$3,750,000" and insert "$3,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $3,000,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, the sum of $3,000,000."

Page 3, after the word "Territories", insert "Provided, That the allotment of funds to any State or Territory for each of three purposes enumerated in this section shall be not less than a minimum of $5,000 for any fiscal year, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1935; June 30, 1936; and June 30, 1937, the sum of $84,603, or so much thereof as may be needed, which shall be used for the purpose of providing the minimum allotments to the States and Territories provided for in this section."

The committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CONNERY: Page 3, line 9, at the end of section 1, insert "Provided further, That none of the funds herein authorized shall be allocated to any State or Territory to pay salaries of teachers, supervisors, and directors, if such teachers, supervisors, and directors are denied the right of joining any legal organization of their own choosing."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, the whole purpose of this amendment is that it is asked for by organized labor to protect the school teachers in their right to organize, if they see fit to do so and to join an organization of their own choosing. In some instances boards of education may say to the teachers, "We forbid you to join a labor union." The House will notice that the language in the amendment is "any legal organization of their own choosing." Since labor organizations are legal I do not see how any Member can have any objection to this amendment which I am offering.

The right of labor to organize, the right of collective bargaining, is a legal right now under the NRA; and the purpose of this amendment is merely to prevent some board of education from saying to its teachers that they shall not be permitted to join a labor organization under penalty of losing their positions. That is the sole purpose of this amendment. I am not trying to harm this bill. I am in favor of the bill. I favor the general principle of vocational education, but I do not want to allow any board of education to get funds from the United States Government and then use those funds to outlaw labor-union organizations. I hope the committee will adopt the amendment, because it injures the bill in no manner whatsoever and merely protects the right of school teachers to organize if they want to, and as they should be entitled to under the the law.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. RANKIN. No. I think the soundness of the point of order is apparent on its face.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be heard on the point of order. I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The section under consideration deals with the appropriation of money and sets out certain sums authorized to be appropriated. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts places certain restrictions upon the use of the money.

The Chair holds that the amendment is germane, and overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to oppose such an amendment, but I feel compelled to do so. This matter was not brought before the committee in any of its hearings, and we held 3 days of hearings on the subject of vocational education.

I think that the gentleman from Massachusetts, perhaps, is raising a straw man here at which to throw balls. There is no proof before us that any such condition as the gentleman described has actually occurred or is likely to occur.

In a matter of such grave importance as the pending bill, and in the present parliamentary situation, we are not, in my opinion, in a position where we can risk this legislation by burdening it with an academic question not based on any facts presented to the House and which was not brought before the committee.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLASS. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I can cite instances in the State of Georgia where teachers were prohibited from joining organizations.

Mr. DOUGLASS. If that be true the State authorities can take care of the situation. I do not know why this bill should be burdened with such an amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, these funds are used to supplement funds appropriated by States and subdivisions of the States. The expenditure of these funds is in the hands of the State, whether it be Georgia, New York, Massachusetts, or any other State of the Union.

One of the objections, Mr. Chairman, to Federal aid for education has been that the States are to be deprived of their independence, and of their supervision of education. I respectfully submit that the virtue of this legislation lies in the fact that the handling and expenditures of the funds is left entirely to the States. However sympathetic we may be toward the gentleman's amendment, the matter should be left to the States and to the municipalities to provide restrictions on the expenditure of these funds. For this reason, among others, I submit that, inasmuch as there may be one requirement in Louisiana, an entirely different requirement in Massachusetts, and a still different one in Ohio, and so on throughout all the 48 States, and further, as the States have the last word in the expenditure of these funds, the States alone should have the right to impose these restrictions.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. In the opinion of the gentleman from Mississippi, will not the placing of restrictions in measures of this kind result in killing such legislation?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; I do not think such a policy is helpful to this kind of legislation, and I ask that the committee be supported in its stand.

Mr. Chairman, I am always sympathetic with labor and with the men and women who work and toil, but the question of labor has no place in this bill nor should the race question be injected into this legislation.

Federal aid to education of any kind would be endangered if Congress undertakes to exercise authority in the operation of the schools. Education is primarily the function of the State. The purpose of Federal aid is to enable States, counties, and municipalities, especially in the emergency, to provide for the youth of the land, but in the last analysis education is the function of the State. The State should, therefore, be supreme in the matter of the employment of teachers and in the disbursement of funds. When Congress undertakes to prescribe and stipulate as to the disbursement of the funds within the State the cause of Federal aid will be endangered.

The virtue of the bill under consideration, as well as the Smith-Hughes Act, is that the funds are distributed by the local agencies. Conditions in Mississippi may be different from conditions in Massachusetts; conditions in New York may be different from conditions in Kentucky. There is too much centralization already. The rights of the States are fast disappearing. As the friend of labor and as the friend of all races, I urge that the amendment be defeated, and that any amendment that has to do with the distribution of the funds within the States among the races should also be defeated.

Of course, I believe the teachers should have the right to organize. I think all classes are entitled to consideration, but there is no place in the pending legislation for either the labor question or the race question.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I know I have not the right to speak a second time on one amendment, but I feel so strongly about the matter that I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to speak again for 2 minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I take pride in saying that the Committee on Education is a very conservative committee. We understand the difficulty with regard to Federal control through Federal aid. We have conscientiously, and I may say jealously, religiously tried to avoid this issue to keep it from coming upon the floor of the House.

I am a lifelong, tried friend of labor, but I can see that such an amendment as the one now pending brings in the subject of Federal control. Just as soon as we inject into bills providing Federal aid to education any element of Federal control strong opposition will be raised to the whole vocational and rehabilitation system, and perhaps result in the denial of Federal aid to any form of education.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLASS. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Under the N.R.A., industrial enterprises are not allowed to work their employees more than 40 hours a week, and they are required to pay a certain standard of wages.

Mr. DOUGLASS. But I do not see how the situation the gentleman pictures in his mind can arise at all.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from Georgia has just stated that such a situation exists in his State.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Then, as pointed out by the gentleman from Mississippi, for 17 years the distribution of funds under this act has been in the hands of the State authorities. They will know the local situation best and can best deal with it at all times.

Mr. CONNERY. They have not taken care of it in Georgia and they have had it there for 17 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 22, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DE PRIEST: Page 3, after line 9, insert: "Provided further, That in States and Territories where there are separate schools between white and colored pupils that the funds herein mentioned shall be divided according to population based on the last United States census."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the section or to the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is plainly a limitation, and, therefore, I believe it is in order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, may I offer the suggestion to the Chair that the distribution of this fund is fixed in this bill, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, to be allotted on the basis of population, on the basis of agriculture, and on the basis of industrial training. The proposed amendment undertakes to change the very foundation upon which this legislation rests and the method of distribution as outlined in the bill. It strikes me the amendment is not germane to the purposes of this bill, which is not only to provide for aid insofar as population is concerned, but also insofar as trade and agriculture are concerned.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman believe that the gentleman from Illinois can make a further limitation? The gentleman has already read a number of limitations.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If it is in line with the previous limitations and not in contradiction and absolutely repugnant to the provisions contained in this bill. It must be germane to the method carried in the bill. One yardstick cannot be substituted for another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the section to which this amendment is offered fixes certain limitations and that the committee has the right to change these limitations. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois seeks to put a further and additional restriction upon the distribution of the funds, and therefore the amendment is germane, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I would not have offered this amendment if I thought there would be a fair distribution of funds. I know, and every gentleman here knows, that in the Southland, where the great proportion of the Negroes live, they do not get their just proportion of the school funds according to population.

According to a recent study it was found that the average educational expenditure per pupil in 11 Southern States amounted to $35. When divided according to the two races it was found that the average expenditure for each white child was $44 as compared with $12 for each Negro child.

It was further found that the average investment for plant and equipment was approximately $160 for each white child as compared with $40 for each Negro child.

The South, in general, is far behind other sections of the country educationally, and naturally the Negro in the South is proportionately further behind the whites of that whole section. For example, the average wealth per capita in the South is only $1,700 as compared with $3,600 for the States outside of the South.

It is believed by many persons in the South that the only way that the educational interests of the Negro can be safeguarded is by definitely earmarking funds appropriated for educational purposes.

In 1932 one State appropriated to counties, as the result of a Negro census and average daily attendance, in round numbers two and one half million dollars, with the assumption that the counties would supplement this from local funds. One hundred and thirty-two counties in this State not only failed to supplement the appropriation but failed to expend for Negro education the full amount allotted by the State for that purpose. Thus only a million three hundred thousand, or one half the amount received from the State for Negroes was spent for them.

In 15 Southern States in 1930 there were 230 counties with a Negro population of 12½ percent, or more, of the total, without any high-school facilities for colored children. These counties contain 1,400,000 colored people, 160,000 of whom are of high-school age.

The average annual salary of colored teachers in rural areas is only $388 as compared with $945 for white teachers in the same area.

It has been revealed that out of approximately $72,000,000 loaned and granted by the P.W.A. for purposes of building and repairing schoolhouses, only $3,000,000 went to Negro schools and colleges. Of this sum $2,000,000 was spent on one institution alone which meant that only $1,000,000 was left to be distributed among 6 Negro high schools and 1 Negro college.

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Chairman, I am in somewhat the same difficulty, hoping I will not be misunderstood, in opposing this amendment as I was in opposing the labor amendment.

I do not think anyone can accuse a man of my name and its association with the Negro race of prejudice. I do not think anyone can accuse me as a member of the Committee on Education for 10 years of prejudice, because I have been one of the stanchest supporters on that committee of appropriations for the Howard University. So with a free and open mind I make the same point against this amendment that I did against the other one.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I do not think the gentleman thinks for a minute I accused him of prejudice.

Mr. DOUGLASS. I want the gentleman to know that in opposing his amendment I am not actuated by prejudice.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. DOUGLASS. I am glad the gentleman appreciates it.

Mr. DE PRIEST. I do not think the gentleman is acquainted with conditions in the South.

Mr. DOUGLASS. That is the point I want to bring out. This amendment, as far as the committee's position is concerned, stands upon the same footing as the labor amendment. We cannot and should not by any action of this body begin to dictate the policies of education carried on in the schools nor interfere directly in the way that Federal funds are employed or distributed by the State, because when we take that position on this matter, as upon the labor matter, we drive the entering wedge of Federal control which we are not here advocating, but actually trying to avoid.

As soon as we pass one measure of this kind we open the door to measures of all kinds in the way of Federal control. The sentiment of this country is against interference with the States in the matter of education. [Applause.] Your committee is convinced, and I think the country is convinced, that education is a State function, a State duty, and a State responsibility, and it is only an emergency that a State has any real right to come here and ask for aid. There is no emergency in this case except the general one of depression. The amendment asks the Government of the United States to say to the States, "Not only do we give you this money but we are telling you how you shall distribute it."

As chairman of the Committee on Education, I believe the States of the United States are all broad and liberal and that they will properly, and in accordance with local tradition, local justice, and in good faith, administer these funds that we give them 50-50 in the interests of all the people of their States. I have no right to make any presumption to the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Interior, Office of Education, for vocational education, the sum of $100,000, annually to be expended for the same purposes and in the same manner as provided in section 7 of the act approved February 23, 1917, as amended October 6, 1917.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 13, after the word "education", insert "for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1935, June 30, 1936, and June 30, 1937"; and in line 15, after "$100,000", strike out the word "annually."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. PARSONS] having resumed the chair, Mr. ROBERTSON, of Virginia, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 7059) to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories, pursuant to House Resolution 324, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? (After a pause.) If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 133]

Allgood	Brooks	Chapman	Frey
Andrews, N.Y.	Browning	Claiborne	Fulmer
Auf der Heide	Brumm	Clarke, N.Y.	Gasque

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and thirty-two Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DEROUEN and Mr. DE PRIEST rose.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. DEROUEN. I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DEROUEN moves to recommit the bill (H.R. 7059) to the Committee on Education, with instructions to that committee to report the bill back forthwith with the following amendment: "On page 3, line 15, strike out '$100,000' and insert in lieu thereof '$75,000.'"

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I rose before the Speaker put the question, and could not get recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. DE PRIEST. I rise to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DE PRIEST. My parliamentary inquiry is whether a second motion to recommit is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule provides for only one motion to recommit.

On motion of Mr. DOUGLASS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—H.R. 7059

Mr. DOUGLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

THE DESCENDANTS OF THE PEOPLES OF NORTHERN EUROPE HAVE REASON TO BE PROUD OF THE IMPORTANT PART AND ROLE WHICH HAVE BEEN PLAYED BY THEIR ANCESTORS AND COUNTRYMEN IN THE HISTORY AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am proud of my Scandinavian ancestry. I was accidentally born in this country, in Chicago, Ill., a very fortunate accident, I should say, but I do not claim any especial credit for that fact, for I did not have a great deal to say about it; in fact, I cannot remember that I was even consulted and asked to express a preference as to where I should like to be born. If I had been, I would certainly have selected the same country where I was born, the United States of America, the best, the freest, and the grandest country upon which the sun ever shone.

However, my mother was born in Sweden and my father was born in Denmark, and next to my love for America is my affection for those countries and that other country in Scandinavia, Norway, where my mother and father met in Christiania, the capital, and carried on their courtship, and also for Finland, where my wife's parents were born. My wife was born in this country, in Montana, but both of her parents were born in Finland, so our two little daughters, Margaret Louise and Marian Eleanor, born in Hoquiam, Wash., are truly descended from the peoples of northern Europe.

The descendants of the peoples of northern Europe have reason to be proud of the important part and role which have been played by their ancestors and countrymen in the history and development of the United States. It is appropriate to mention the fact that George Washington, the Father of our Country, was directly descended from a family which emigrated from Skane, Sweden, in the year A.D. 970 and settled in Durham County, England, where they built a small town, calling it Wass-in-gatun—town of Wassings. Also that John Morton, of Swedish ancestry, as a Member of the Continental Congress, cast the deciding vote of Pennsylvania in favor of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence; that John Hanson, of Swedish ancestry, was elected the first president of the Confederation of the Thirteen Original States, with the official title of president of the United States in Congress assembled; that Sweden was the first nation which voluntarily recognized the American Republic in 1783; that Theodore Roosevelt was descended from forbears who settled in Normandy, and had the blood of the Viking in his veins. John Erickson, of Vermland, Sweden, invented the Monitor, the first iron-clad and screw-propelled battleship, and who, former President William Howard Taft declared, saved the Union cause; and when the first shot of the Civil War was fired it was none other than Robert Anderson who met the first shock of rebellion at Fort Sumter, a descendant of a Delaware Swede. In the Civil War we have General Stolbrand and Admiral Dahlgren, both Swedes, and there were 14 Swedish officers in the War of the Revolution.

Although limited in area geographically, the Scandinavian countries, considering their small size and populations, have made greater contributions to the culture, learning, progress, and development of the race than almost any other nation. Let us call the roll of some of the brilliant names which adorn the pages of history and biography: Leif Ericsson and Eric the Red, Norsemen, who were the first discoverers of America about the year 1000; Nansen, Amundsen, and Steffansen, the great Norwegian Arctic explorers; Eric Nelson, the Norwegian aviator; Lindbergh, the Prince of the Aviators, whose father was born in Sweden; Carl XII, the boy king and warrior of Sweden, of whom Voltair wrote his famous biography; Gustavus Vasa and Gustavus Adolphus, the Lion of the North, champion of the Protestant Church after the Reformation, and who lost his life on the field of Lutzen in his battle for religious freedom for Europe during the Thirty Years War; Jenny Lind and Christine Nilsson, the Swedish nightingales, two of the most renowned singers the world has ever known; Ole Bull, Norwegian violinist; Grieg, the Norwegian composer; Ellen Key, Norwegian authoress; Tegner, Swedish poet, whose great classic, Fritjofs Saga, was beautifully translated by Longfellow, who declared it to be one of the masterpieces of literature; Strindberg, the great novelist and dramatist; Ibsen and Bjornson, the two noted Norwegian novelists; Selma Lagerlof, a daughter of Sweden and one of the greatest, if not the greatest living woman novelist of the world.

Finland has contributed a galaxy of brilliant names: Johan Ludwif Runeberg, professor of history and literature, and the famous author of Vort Land, the national anthem of Finland and Sweden; Elias Lonnroth, professor of Finnish language and compiler of the noted collection of folk epics, Kalevala; Johan W. Spellman, Finland's greatest senator and statesman; Topelius, her greatest novelist; Albert Edelfelt and Axel Gallen, two of the world's most noted painters and artists; John Sibelius, one of the world's greatest composers, author of the Swan of Tuonela, and the author of several world-known symphonies; Robert Kijanus, leader of the symphonic orchestra in Helsingfors for the past 40 years; the great sculptor, Takanen, who died in Rome some years ago; Emil Wickstrom, its greatest sculptor; Johan Aho, one of Europe's greatest novelists.

Hans Christian Andersen, Danish writer of folk and fairy tales. Thorwaldsen, the eminent Danish sculptor. George Brandes, of Copenhagen, one of the most noted scholars of this generation. Carl Von Linnaeus, the poor Swedish barefooted boy who became the father of botany, and probably the greatest botanist that ever lived. Schele, the Swedish chemist who discovered oxygen. Emanuel Swedenborg, the great mystic and founder of the religion which bears his name. Count Bernadotte, Napoleon's field marshal, who was invited to become the King of Sweden and founded the present dynasty. Alfred Nobel, another Swede, inventor of dynamite and founder of the Nobel peace prize.

Time does not permit my enumerating any more of the names of the gifted sons and daughters of the North, but I have named a sufficient number to justify my pride in my Scandinavian ancestry.

Those of us who are of Scandinavian ancestry can justly take pride in the important part which the Scandinavians are playing in the growth and progress of the Pacific Northwest and of the State of Washington in particular. Some of the leading business men, newspapermen, industrial leaders, bankers, merchants, building contractors, doctors, lawyers, professional men, and public officials of the State of Washington are Scandinavians. Washington is becoming, in fact it already is, one of the leading States in the Union from the standpoint of the large number of our citizens who were born in the northern European countries, or whose parents were born there, and I believe we rank next to Minnesota in that respect. That is true particularly of my home community, Grays Harbor, and the Scandinavians are very numerous in Pacific County, in Clark County, in Lewis County, and throughout my congressional district and the State of Washington. They are doing their part toward the growth, development, and progress of the communities in which they live, and are highly respected for their industry, thrift, and sterling qualities as law-abiding citizens.

THE NECESSITY FOR MODIFICATION OF THE STEEL CODE TO RELIEVE OPPRESSED INDUSTRIES

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it is vitally necessary that immediate action be taken to secure relief for the industries of Minnesota, and States similarly situated, from the harm done said industries by the actual workings of the steel code.

Tuesday, in an effort to secure Presidential intervention to end the oppressive discrimination, that if not stopped now, will ruin many industries in my home State, I introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to exercise forthwith the powers conferred upon him by the National Industrial Recovery Act, to cause such amendment or modification of the steel code as will eliminate the abuses herein described.

The steel code is a contract between all steel producers to make in a certain way their delivered prices, which delivered prices are made up of theoretical base prices at certain basing points, plus all-rail freight, although other and cheaper methods of transportation exist.

The United States Steel Corporation owns a plant at Duluth, Minn. The Minnesota Steel Co. is its subsidiary company, created to operate the Duluth plant, and the Illinois Steel Co. is its distributing agency. The ore used by this Duluth plant is mined from the Minnesota iron ranges. Orders placed with the United States Steel Corporation or any of its subsidiaries, by Minnesota steel fabricators, for articles produced at the Duluth plant are filled in many cases, from that plant, and not from Chicago, Gary, Pittsburgh, or any other point.

Under the code, Duluth is a basing point for wire, wire nails, bale ties, and wire fencing. These are all consumer goods—the finished product—and the basing price is the Chicago price on similar goods plus $1 a ton.

Duluth is not a basing point on merchant bars and billets. On these articles, which are not consumer goods, but require fabrication for their ultimate use, Chicago is the basing point, and the price at Duluth is the Chicago price plus all-rail freight of $6.60 per ton—this in spite of the fact that the goods are not shipped from Chicago, have never been in Chicago, and the $6.60 charge is a fictitious one imposed for an imaginary service.

In the Twin Cities the price on merchant bars and billets is the Chicago price plus freight from Chicago, and this in spite of the fact that the metal is shipped from Duluth, less than half as far away as Chicago.

This method of fixing prices ignores conditions—that Duluth-produced steel is made from Minnesota ore; that it can be moved from Duluth to many manufacturing cities at a fraction of the freight charges from Chicago to these cities; that if sold and fabricated at Duluth there is no freight charge at all; and that if shipment were from Chicago there are available lower freight rates than the all-rail rates.

To gage the discrimination it is necessary to remember that various Minnesota industries using Duluth steel must compete with similar industries located, for example, at Chicago. Considerable quantities of steel made at Duluth are sold to Chicago fabricators. For this steel the United States Steel Corporation must charge the Chicago price. Therefore, it does not get the fictitious freight charge which the Duluth buyer must pay. So as between the Duluth and Chicago users of Duluth steel, the Chicago buyer pays $6.60 per ton less and therefore has a production cost advantage of $6.60 on this item alone.

But this is not all. Since the price of the Duluth steel at Chicago is the Chicago price and the steel must be shipped from Duluth to Chicago, it is clear that the United States Steel Corporation must pay the $6.60 freight from Duluth to Chicago. Consequently it is too apparent to require argument that on the product of its Duluth plant shipped to Chicago, the United States Steel Corporation receives for each ton of merchant bars $13.20 less, and for each ton of billets approximately $13.20 less from the Chicago buyers than it charges the Duluth competitors of said Chicago buyers.

These lower prices made to Chicago fabricators have the effect of lessening substantially the competition of Minnesota fabricators and are not prices made to meet competition in good faith. It is an outrageous situation.

Minnesota steel-using industries always have been handicapped because of the State's geographical location, but this handicap has been offset somewhat by lower production costs, particularly for labor, in the Northwest.

Also, the United States Steel Corporation, realizing the burden placed on Minnesota industry, endeavored to equalize costs of production for Minnesota and eastern industry by making partially offsetting price allowances.

Now the code has changed this.

Many Minnesota producers have signed their industry codes and are complying with their provisions. Consequently these producers are paying nearly the same wage as their eastern competitors.

The United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries have signed the code and are complying with its provisions. Consequently they are unable to make price allowances or adjustments.

As a result, Minnesota industry, without offsetting advantages, has tried to carry the oppressive burden of the fictitious charges for imaginary services, which burden is unbearable. Therefore, Minnesota producers are faced with two alternatives: Go out of business or appeal for modification of those provisions of the code which have brought about the trouble.

Of course there are other kindred problems. For example: (1) In the past, enormous tonnages of steel have been shipped into Minnesota based on water rates. Yet under the code, the fictitious charge is based on all-rail shipment. (2) Minnesota in its trunk highway program uses large quantities of concrete reinforcing bars. These are consumer goods, a finished product. The State should not be charged Chicago plus.

Since it is not the purpose of the President or the Congress to oppress small industries, and since under the code they are being oppressed to the point of extermination, and since under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act the President has the power to modify the code; it is fitting that, by formal congressional action, his attention be called to the conditions existing and that he be requested to modify the code's provisions in such manner as to provide immediate adequate relief from the abuses mentioned.

MINNESOTA INDUSTRIES ENDANGERED

Some hundreds of Minnesota industries with factories located at Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth use bars and billets. Their production costs are increased by the discriminatory freight charge for a service which is entirely and admittedly fictitious and imaginary.

One of these firms, the business of which affords a striking example of the problem in point because its factory is located in Duluth, and is therefore immediately adjacent to the plant of the Minnesota Steel Co. where merchant bars and billets are produced from Minnesota ores, is the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co.

LETTER ASKING RELIEF

Through its president the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co. wrote the Illinois Steel Co., distributing agents for the United States Steel Corporation, in part as follows, the letter being dated March 8 of this year and constituting only a step in the company's continued and insistent demands for relief:

Mr. W. I. HOLLAND,
Vice President Illinois Steel Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: As I have not been granted relief from the present oppressive, discriminating, and destructive position which my company has been placed under the present steel code, forcing us to pay Chicago prices for steel, plus an imaginary freight charge, which amounts to $6.60 per ton, although the steel is made and rolled at your mill in Duluth, I have appealed to you and to Mr. C. L. Wood, vice president of the United States Steel Corporation, both by correspondence and by personal interviews ever since the code was being formulated, but so far without avail or relief.

This has of necessity forced me to appeal direct to the Government for relief. * * *

Yesterday I was asked to make a statement before the Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission. I gave a complete history of our business, its progress from 1908 up to the present time, and how, until 1917, we made only horseshoes and horseshoe calks, but in that year made large quantities of tools for the United States Government, and as the horseshoe business was getting sharply less we decided to continue in the tool business permanently. We soon found that as we no longer were protected by patents in our horseshoe business and the tool manufacturing was a wide-open competitive proposition, we were getting in a bad way because of the high cost of raw material.

I appealed to Mr. Buffington, then president of the Illinois Steel Co., for reduction in our raw material cost and asked for parity with Pittsburgh. Mr. Buffington saw that I had to have relief and advised me to see Mr. Farrell, president of the United State Steel Corporation, New York City. After having listened to a detailed story of our position, he was convinced that we could not continue in open competition, unless we were granted some relief and I was then given $5 per ton reduction as relief against freight, as a permanent proposition until I may eventually be relieved of the entire freight burden. This had reference to steel made or rolled at the Duluth mill.

I also explained to Judge Healy that, at that time, we had an investment of $165,000 in the business and that, with the relief so granted us by Mr. Farrell, we were able to meet competition in a fair way, although we still were handicapped. Depending upon this relief being permanent we have, since that time, added more than one-half million dollars to our permanent investment so today, we have invested capital of about three quarters of a million dollars, which would never have been possible, had we not been granted such concession.

I further explained to Judge Healy that, because of our unfavorable location, so far from the consuming district, 90 percent of all goods we manufacture must first reach Chicago, which includes the west coast, because of lower freight rates. This adds another hardship to the amount of $15 per ton on 90 percent of our manufactured goods and that added to the $6.60 on raw material gives us a disadvantage of approximately $22 per ton—which our competitor who is located at such points as Pittsburgh and Chicago, does not have.

I also stated that I was appealing for relief to the extent of $1 over Chicago, in other words, steel rolled at the Duluth plant at Chicago base, plus $1 differential and while that still gave us a handicap, we would, however, be able to operate, but anything in excess of $1 over Chicago, we could not stand. I showed him our inability to continue in business under the present set-up; that it would be absolutely necessary for us to close our doors within a short time and that the entire investment would be lost and more than 300 men thrown out of employment.

I was finally told that my case was a most striking example of violation of the Recovery Act that had come to the Commission and it was agreed that I should at once appeal to you in person and have my request granted by the institute while in session now.

It has been the general impression of all those I have come in contact with that any reason which existed in 1924 in granting Duluth as a basing point on wire and wire products should also have been declared a basing point on merchant bars and billets manufactured and rolled in the same mill with the same machinery.

The appeal that I am making is for both merchant bars and billets. I have come here now in my final effort to save the business of the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co., and to save the 67 stockholders, all Duluth citizens, from losing their investment in this institution and our more than 300 employees from losing their jobs which would mean that a great many of them would be thrown upon the municipality and the Government for their support.

Sincerely hoping you may see the light, making it unnecessary for me to go further, I am,

Very truly yours,

DIAMOND CALK & HORSESHOE CO.,
OTTO SWANSTROM, President.

February 2 of this year another body, by resolution, directed the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the steel code and its effects upon industry, particularly concerning price fixing and any increase in price of steel products.

The Federal Trade Commission immediately conducted an investigation and on March 19 submitted its report.

It went into the entire problem at length and in detail. Under "the practice of the steel industry under the code with reference to price fixing" it found:

Briefly stated, members must file their mill-base price quotations with the authority, may make deductions therefrom only as permitted by the authority, must make certain additions thereto as specified by the authority, must calculate delivery charges from specified common basing points according to a specified formula, must sell through distributors selected according to standards determined by the authority, and must require of such distributors written agreements to conform to specified resale prices. From the moment mill-base price quotations are filed the code itself prescribes the formula and the factors entering into it by which the ultimate price is automatically calculated.

As to what made up "the selling prices which are required by the code" its findings were:

With certain specified exceptions, all prices at which members of the code may quote and sell "shall be delivered prices" (schedule E, sec. 4). These delivered prices are a composite of several factors; a so-called "mill-base price" plus whatever extras may be specified by the code authority for given products plus a delivery charge which must be the equivalent of the all-rail freight charge to destination, regardless of what mode of transportation is actually used.

A little later on in speaking on this program the Trade Commission says:

The code accepts such a fiction by requiring that delivered prices shall be arrived at by adding to the mill-base quotation the all-rail freight from specified common basing points. As a result the so-called "mill-base quotations" do not represent net realized prices for steel except for such mills as are located at the basing point for a particular product. For all other mills the code contemplates that freight to a given destination shall not be calculated from actual shipping point but from what may be called the "ruling basing point", which is the one whose base quotation plus all-rail freight, makes the lowest delivered price.

On the exact point now before us, the Federal Trade Commission, to illustrate its views, uses the unfortunate experience of the same company used by me for illustrative purposes in this address.

The Commission in discussing "Minimum additions to mill-base quotation required by code authority", say in part:

The code (schedule F) lists the recognized basing points for each product and requires that delivery charges be calculated therefrom and not from place of shipment as such. A producer is not at liberty to sell his product f.o.b. his own mill and allow the purchaser to assume the exact delivery cost. Nor may he figure the actual delivery cost in his delivered price unless his shipping point happens to coincide with the authorized basing point. The power to select and establish basing points therefore is the power to determine which mills shall be required to calculate and collect a delivery charge from the purchaser, which is not the equivalent of their actual cost of delivery.

The basing points now established were selected by the organized industry through the American Iron and Steel Institute and they can be changed only by similar action of the institute as the code authority. As a result a member whose mill is not located at a recognized basing point must get the approval of the institute before he can calculate his delivery charge at its actual cost. In the last analysis the application of a member to make his mill a basing point or to enlarge or reduce the number of basing points is subject to the collective approval of his competitors.

An illustration of those facts and the sort of results which may occur in their application is found in the experience of the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co., of Duluth, Minn. It has long been buying its raw steel from the Minnesota Steel Co., whose mill is at Duluth. Duluth not being a recognized basing point for such steel, the code requires prices to be based on Chicago, the nearest basing point. This required the Diamond Co. to pay in addition to the price as quoted by the Duluth mill, the equivalent of the all-rail freight from Chicago to Duluth, or imaginary freight of $6.60 a ton on steel produced at Duluth. As a further result the nearest competitor of Diamond Co. located in Chicago can buy there at the basing point price, or $6.60 a ton less than the Diamond Co. pays at Duluth.

For a number of years before the code, this competitive disadvantage of the Diamond Co., due to the basing-point system, was largely offset by the Minnesota Steel Co. making it a special concession of $5 a ton on steel from its Duluth mill. This still left the mill with $1.60 a ton out of the imaginary freight of $6.60 a ton which the basing point system called for, yet enabled the Diamond Co. to compete. Because the code forbids continuation of that concession, and despite the desire of the Minnesota Steel Co. and United States Steel Corporation, its parent company, to continue it, they are forced to collect from the Diamond Co. the full $6.60 a ton imaginary freight. At the same time, however, Minnesota Steel Co. sells similar steel in Illinois and Indiana and nets $13.20 a ton less for it than it nets from Diamond Co. By contrast, the code establishes Duluth as a basing point for other forms of this same steel, thereby permitting them to be sold at Duluth at a fixed differential of only $1 per ton over the Chicago prices.

The Diamond Co. has invested three quarters of a million dollars in its Duluth plant and has some 300 employees, while the Minnesota Steel Co. has a plant investment at Duluth of $10,000,000 or more with numerous employees. Without the consent of its competitors on the appropriate Institute committee and Institute board of directors, the Minnesota Steel Co. is unable to continue a price reduction which it can much better afford to make than that which the code requires it to make on sales at distant points. Similar situations are likely to be created in many other sections of the country.

CONCLUSIONS ON THIS PROBLEM

The Trade Commission's conclusion on this problem which concerns so vitally Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth is this:

It is a conservative statement that the power to select, discontinue, or increase the number of basing points involves the power of deciding what cities shall be handicapped and what cities shall be built up as centers for the remanufacture and processing of steel products. The importance of such a power over the future of communities can hardly be overstated. The tendency is distinctly against what is commonly considered as desirable decentralization of industry.

SUMMARY IN PRICE FIXING

The Federal Trade Commission's explanation of the reasons or causes for the fatally discriminatory plan for price fixing, apparently unforeseen when the code was adopted, is summarized in the statement found on page 26 of its report:

Summing up this system of calculating delivery charges, it starts with an arbitrary basing point, so that differences in actual delivery cost are merged into a fictitious common rate. Then it uses, but solely for calculating purposes, a higher cost mode of transportation than is frequently utilized. Then in some cases it substitutes arbitraries which are higher than the actual cost even of the calculated transportation. Thus the system is not one for determining actual freight costs. It is a device for automatically insuring that all mills will reach a given destination at identical delivered prices and that the identity in their mill-base quotations will not be set at naught by differences of location and of actual freight costs.

After giving the entire problem intensive study, the Federal Trade Commission submits to the other body of this Congress its—

FINAL CONCLUSION

The question naturally arises whether this situation of enforced violation of the Commission's order in the Pittsburgh plus case can be harmonized with the terms of the National Recovery Act and the powers therein conferred.

The National Industrial Recovery Act looked forward to the authorization of codes of fair competition. True, it conceived the possibility of such codes designedly authorizing practices hitherto forbidden by the antitrust laws of the United States, but at the same time it sought to restrain the promulgation of codes that were designed to promote monopolies or operate to eliminate or oppress or discriminate against small enterprises. Furthermore, it expressly prohibited codes from permitting monopolies or monopolistic practices.

A distinct conflict of means and objectives exists between the provisions of the code and the Commission's order in the Pittsburgh plus case. That conflict raises questions not only of legal import but of basic economic implication. Departure from hitherto accepted policies of governmental concern over the maintenance of fair competition is, however, evident. Nevertheless it has been assumed thus far that the departure has the sanction of a congressional mandate embodied in the National Industrial Recovery Act. The test of whether such a sanction is actually present in that act can, of course, be submitted to the courts for determination. But other means for the solution of such an issue are also available. The work under the National Industrial Recovery Act was conceived of as necessarily being largely experimental. The act itself provides not only for means to pursue effectively paths demonstrated to be sound and desirable, but also for means to withdraw from the enforcement of policies which evidence a tendency to attain ends regarded by the act as those that our national economy has discarded.

By direction of the Commission:

GARLAND S. FERGUSON, Jr.,
Chairman.

FURTHER ATTEMPTS TO SECURE RELIEF

None of the industries concerned having secured relief, on March 28, 1934, the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co. applied for help to the National Recovery Review Board, of which Clarence Darrow is chairman. The company's appeal was, in part, as follows:

NATIONAL RECOVERY REVIEW BOARD,
Washington, D.C.

GENTLEMEN: I hereby apply to you for relief from certain sections of the steel code that are oppressing, unjust, and discriminatory in their present form, and if continued will force my company to close its doors, confiscate our investment of approximately three quarters of a million dollars, and throw more than 300 of our employees out of employment.

The Minnesota Steel Co., a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, is located in Duluth. Under the steel code we are compelled to pay Chicago base price, plus an imaginary freight rate from Chicago to Duluth of $6.60 per ton, although a large portion of their products, merchant bars and billets, are sold in Chicago and Indiana at $13.20 per ton less than the price forced on us. Our business is built up and depending upon national distribution of our products.

In 1924 Duluth was made a basing point for wire and wire products, Chicago base plus $1, and in all fairness we only ask the same consideration pertaining to merchant bars and billets. We have been able to develop our business to its present position because of an allowance granted us of $5 per ton in 1918, and which we have had continuously until October 1, 1933; in other words, we have had Chicago base plus $1.60, and now the steel code has taken that away from us, even though the steel corporation declares to us their willingness to grant our request of $1 over Chicago.

Formerly, we had a lower labor cost, because of a natural lower cost of living at our location. This, however, is not so any more. We signed the President's reemployment agreement and are complying with all of its provisions. We are operating under the metal fabricators code. Because of these new conditions we ask for a differential not to exceed $1 over Chicago on both merchant bars and billets—a greater handicap would be destructive to us.

We have appealed to the United States Steel Corporation and to the Iron and Steel Institute, and to Mr. K. M. Simpson, deputy administrator for the steel code, ever since last August, but without any result or promise.

As president of the Diamond Calk & Horseshoe Co. of Duluth, a Minnesota corporation, who started in business in 1908, I now appeal to you and most urgently request your help for immediate relief, as our resources are being rapidly depleted, with the final results of being forced to close our business if relief is not granted very soon.

Sincerely yours,

DIAMOND CALK & HORSESHOE CO.,
OTTO SWANSTROM, President.

GENERAL AGREEMENT CODE SHOULD BE MODIFIED

That those charged with final supervision of the codes are inclined to believe that the steel code requires modification is evidenced by the statement of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson as reported in the Wall Street Journal of last Saturday.

The article starts as follows:

JOHNSON DOUBTS STEEL PRICE RULE—BASING-POINT SYSTEM "PROBABLY WRONG"—HAS NO BIG LABOR CASE WORTH PUTTING TO TEST

WASHINGTON.—The basing-point system embodied in the steel code is "probably wrong", General Johnson stated in discussing criticism of the code before the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

This is the story of how one Minnesota industry is being forced out of business through actual operation of the provisions of the steel code, which increase production costs, add an unbearable burden for charges for imaginary freight service and forbid relief in the form of price allowance.

The same story is being repeated in the business life of many other Minnesota industries.

Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth cannot grow as they should as industrial centers if they are to be handicapped for no other reason than their geographical location, by the arbitrary addition of fictitious charges for imaginary service to those production costs which of necessity they must pay for real service.

The existing procedure constitutes, in effect, a fatal attack on many industries of my home State and is an inexcusable blow to the development of the State.

All other avenues of relief thus far having proved ineffective, it is apparent that a feasible way is to seek remedial action through the provision of the National Recovery Administration, which authorizes the President to modify codes.

RURAL LETTER CARRIERS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 355.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H.R. 8919, a bill to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted; and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit; with or without instructions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY]. It is the desire of the majority leader that we try and dispose of this bill this afternoon. It is now about 3:30 o'clock, and in order to conserve the time for the consideration of the bill upon its merits, I shall be most brief in presenting the resolution for consideration of the bill.

I do not conceive it to be necessarily the function of a member of the Committee on Rules in presenting a resolution for consideration of a bill to undertake to explain all its provisions, or any of its provisions, unless it is a highly controversial or a political proposition.

This bill has been reported by the committee—I understand unanimously. It is a bill that seeks to reclassify salaries and allowances of rural carriers.

You gentlemen will recollect that under the provisions of the Economy Act there was a reduction in the equipment allowances of rural carriers. Under the provisions of this bill, as I understand it, the allowances for equipment of rural carriers upkeep is raised from 4 cents to 6 cents a mile. There may be some controversy as to whether or not that increase shall be put at 5 cents a mile or 6 cents a mile. I understood that perhaps there was some division on that in the committee as to the amount of increase.

I shall not undertake to go into the provisions of the bill. The members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will explain it thoroughly; and, gentlemen, I want to say—if I can say it with propriety—I have been serving in Congress for many years, and I have had occasion to observe the capacity, character, poise, and good judgment of various chairmen of the legislative committees of the House. I do not want to indulge in any flattery of the Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, but the more I see of his conduct with bills, his familiarity with the legislation, his knowledge of all details of the bill he is sponsoring, the higher becomes my admiration of the admirable qualifications of the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]. [Applause.] He is always armed and equipped, his information is accurate concerning all features of the legislation under his control. Of course, there are able gentlemen associated with him on his committee, but I felt that in passing, this small tribute to his capacity should be stated.

I now yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I am in favor of this legislation. I wondered whether the gentleman could state whether this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that it is. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

BILL TO PAY DEPOSITORS OF BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein such tables and other information as may be explanatory of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word about the McLeod bill. The way I view it, it is like the story I heard about Columbus.

M'LEOD BILL SUPPORTERS LIKE COLUMBUS

Columbus left home and did not know where he was going; when he got there he did not know where he was; when he returned home he did not know where he had been.

The proponents of the McLeod bill are in a similar position. They are advocating an appropriation of public funds unknown in amount; they do not know who will get the money; and they do not know the reason for its payment. The bill is sponsored by the Republican Members of the House. It is opposed by the President of the United States.

WHAT THE BILL PROPOSES

The McLeod bill—H.R. 8479—proposes that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be compelled to acquire by purchase all the remaining assets of closed banks that are in charge of receivers and conservators, which at the date of closing were members of the Federal Reserve System. It is proposed that the bill be amended so as to include State and private banks, and I understand the author is favorable to the amendment.

WHERE WILL MONEY COME FROM?

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under the present policy of obtaining funds, will be required to issue more tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds to get the money. The Government will guarantee the payment of interest and the principal of the bonds. It is not known how much money it will take, since we do not know the institutions that will come within the provisions of the law by the time it is enacted.

WILL THERE BE A LOSS, AND WHO WILL PAY IT?

Certainly there will be a loss. The Government cannot acquire the bad debts of closed banks without taking a loss. The taxpayers will pay the loss. If the present sources of revenue are insufficient for that purpose, Congress will be under obligations to enact additional tax measures, which will doubtless restore many of the nuisance taxes, to pay the losses. Further, by reason of paying these losses, deserving appropriations for the relief of destitution and the unemployed will probably have to be reduced in amount.

WHO WILL GET THE MONEY?

If this bill is enacted, one depositor will get more than $32,000,000. Four percent of the depositors will receive 50 percent of the money. The following table is self-explanatory:

Analysis of closed national banks, showing percentages with respect to accounts

THE RICH MAN'S BONUS

This is not a bill to help the poor so much as it is a bill to help the rich. If we owed the rich anything, I would be in favor of paying them, but we do not owe them a penny.

A few, less than 300, of the large, wealthy depositors of the Guardian National Bank, Detroit, Mich., contributed an amount sufficient to pay in full all the depositors of that bank who had accounts less than $1,000. It required more than $3,000,000. If this bill passes, the small depositors of that institution will not be paid; they have already been paid; the ones who paid them will be reimbursed. The Government will assume the debt and release them. This bank, when closed, had deposits amounting to more than $100,000,000. All depositors have already been paid 68 percent of the amount of their deposits, and more will be paid. I wonder how many people in Detroit can get 68 percent in cash from any other investment they made at the same time the deposits were made.

The First National Bank of Detroit, Mich., when closed, had deposits aggregating more than $338,000,000. The depositors have already been paid 50 percent of the amount of their deposits and will likely be paid 75 or 80 percent. The average for all banks is around 76 percent.

Someone is doing a good job liquidating these institutions. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized loans and commitments to receivers and conservators in Michigan banks for the purpose of paying depositors the enormous sum of $198,640,351.07.

Notice the following statement:

HOOVER AND MILLS SPEECHES—DEPOSITS DECREASED

It is contended that depositors were persuaded to deposit their funds in national banks by reason of the antihoarding speeches made by President Hoover and Secretary of the Treasury Mills in February and March of 1932, which caused them to lose it. Let us consider the facts. The last report of deposits in national banks before these speeches were made was December 31, 1931. At that time the deposits were $19,244,347,000. The next report after the speeches were made was June 30, 1932. The deposits had dropped to $17,460,913,000. In other words, it seems that deposits decreased almost $2,000,000,000 instead of increasing.

Within 12 months after these speeches were made, the deposits in all banks had been reduced more than $4,000,000,000.

BAD PRECEDENT

The passage of this bill would enact a very bad precedent. If carried to its logical conclusion, it would call for the Government to pay the debts of all banks—national, State, and private—even though the banking officials are now serving time in a penitentiary for embezzling the funds—building and loan companies, joint-stock land banks, and finally all losses suffered by investors on the stock exchange. Many investors claim the banks denied loans to brokers which caused stocks to be thrown on the market, causing the break. They also contend that Government officials caused these banks to reduce their loans to brokers. Therefore, they contend the Government agents caused their loss. If the McLeod bill passes, these investors who lost their money will have claims against the Government supported by the same sort of reasoning.

WHAT IS NOW BEING DONE TO AID BANKS AND DEPOSITORS

In order to show what is now being done in the way of aiding the banks, including closed banks and their depositors, the following statement is inserted from the 1934 report of the Comptroller of the Currency:

In addition to the new duties of the Comptroller as a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Board, he was appointed to membership on two special committees created by the President, one to be known as the Deposit Liquidation Board, on October 15, 1933, which constitutes a special division of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The President appointed this Board for the purpose of making loans to banks closed since January 1, 1933, on their assets. The Board was constituted as follows:

C. B. Merriam, the head of the special board; Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Dean G. Acheson, Under Secretary of the Treasury; J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency; Walter J. Cummings, chairman Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; Lewis Douglas, Director of the Budget.

"The purposes of the Deposit Liquidation Division", the President's announcement read, "will be to stimulate and encourage liquidating agents of banks closed after January 1, 1933, to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order that funds may be made available to depositors as quickly as possible. The general intention is to make loans on the assets of closed banks for the benefit of depositors up to a maximum of 50 percent of their deposits, inclusive of distributions heretofore made. This does not, of course, mean that in a bank whose remaining assets are worthless, the depositors will get 50 percent. They will get in such a case only their share in the remaining assets.

"It is estimated that the maximum loanable value of the assets of banks closed during the year 1933 will not exceed $1,000,000,000, and it is hoped that the distribution will approximate that amount."

We have acted speedily in coming to the rescue of depositors in closed banking institutions. Between October 17, when this Board started functioning, and January 2, 1934, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authorized $243,119,582.97 for distribution to depositors in 496 closed banks, nearly all of which were closed after the first of the year.

The President on October 23, 1933, announced the establishment of a special Reconstruction Finance Corporation division for bank reorganization and to make recommendations for purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of preferred stock of State banks. The following members of this new division were named by the President:

Harvey Couch, to be its head; Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, ex-officio; Eugene Black, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board; Dean Acheson, Under Secretary of the Treasury; Lewis Douglas, Director of the Budget; J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency; Walter J. Cummings, Chairman Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; Henry Bruere; Frank Walker.

At the same time the President announced that "Governor Black is to head a subcommittee on cooperation with member banks in this same effort." The prime purpose behind the formation of this special division was to prepare State banks for eligibility in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by January 1 in that the sale by them of preferred stock will strengthen their capital structure. "We hope", President Roosevelt said, in announcing the creation of this division, "that all banks will take advantage of this opportunity to put themselves in an easy cash position to help in the work of recovery. We need the banks and want them to have adequate capital. As a rule such capital cannot now easily be found in the communities. As recovery continues, such capital will be found. But in the meanwhile and temporarily, but for such length of time as may be necessary, the Government will supply the necessary capital through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in its purchase of preferred stock. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will thus serve as a recovery finance corporation.

"The banks must feel free to function well, and the Government will help them prepare themselves to play their important part.

"To accept the Government's offer to purchase preferred stock does not mean that a bank is weak but that it is eager to cooperate in the recovery effort to the fullest possible extent and thus undertake to put this additional capital to work. We are not thinking of idle capital. We are thinking of working capital—capital working for recovery."

As a member of the Board appointed by President Roosevelt, I can say with pardonable pride that we have made a good record so far in strengthening State banks through the purchases of their preferred stocks, capital notes, and debentures by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. From October 23, the date of creation of this division by the President, to the close of business on December 31 a total of 3,323 nonmember banks had a total of $242,100,000 approved for issue, of which amount $84,936,000 consisted of preferred stock and $157,164,000 consisted of capital notes and debentures.

In addition to the above record made by the special division in such a short time, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation during the 7 months ended December 31, 1933, approved the purchase of a total of $65,336,000 in preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures in 78 nonmember banks. During the same time the Corporation approved 1,059 applications from member banks for a total issue of $502,930,000, of which amount $372,868,000 was in preferred stock and $130,062,000 in capital notes and debentures.

Never in our history has the Federal Government done so much to aid distressed depositors in closed banks by declaring dividends from the loans made on the assets, as well as the purchase by the Government of preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures in the banks in the country.

Do not overlook the statement of President Roosevelt in the foregoing, and be sure and read the last paragraph of this statement about more being done by the Government for distressed depositors and closed banks than ever before in our history.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this rule and of the legislation which it seeks to make in order. It is my privilege to enjoy the acquaintance of the very able and efficient president of the National Association of Rural Letter Carriers, Mr. W. G. Armstrong. He is a resident of the State of Michigan. His recommendations and views on matters relating to the Rural Carrier Service go a long way with me, because I feel he knows the problems of the rural carrier and the Rural Carrier Service from A to Z.

The bill contains three important provisions. The first recommended by the Department takes into consideration the improvement that has been made in our road system during the last few years and changes the length of a standard route from 24 miles to 30 miles, keeping the compensation for a standard route the same as it is now, $1,800 per year. It further takes into consideration the improved condition of the roads and provides a compensation of $20 per mile over the standard road instead of $30 under existing law. My understanding is that the carriers are willing to accept this provision, provided the other provisions of the bill are retained in the bill and enacted into law.

The second provision in the bill raises the equipment allowance of the rural carriers from 4 cents to 6 cents per mile. There is a tendency on the part of many when considering this equipment-allowance question to compare it with the cost of maintaining an automobile used only in good weather, on good roads, under normal conditions, traveling long distances, and making few stops. That is not the situation with the rural carrier. He must go in all kinds of weather, rain or shine, and, in many instances, snow or shine. He makes frequent stops, he goes over good and bad roads alike, and I am told that the equipment allowance of 6 cents a mile, as a matter of fact, is much less than the average cost to the rural carrier in keeping up his equipment. He has more oil to buy, more gas to buy, and he has to take his car to the service stations for repairs more frequently than the average user of an automobile.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Can the gentleman tell the House how much additional cost will be entailed on the Public Treasury as a result of this legislation?

Mr. MAPES. I am not on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, but I am told that there will be a saving to the Department of something like $3,000,000 per year by the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. McDUFFIE. What is the average salary of the rural carrier now?

Mr. MAPES. I cannot tell the gentleman what the average salary is, but I understand that under the Economy Act the equipment allowance was reduced to 1 cent per mile.

The third provision in the bill prevents the consolidation of rural routes except in case of the resignation, death, retirement, or dismissal, on charges, of carriers in the Rural Mail Delivery Service. That provision is put in to prevent arbitrary dismissals by the Department and the consolidation and extension of routes in some cases to abnormal lengths.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. What the gentleman says about the mileage allowance is particularly true in the north country, where the winters are long and severe, and where the wear on the equipment is extremely severe.

Mr. MAPES. There is no question about it in the gentleman's State of New York and in the State of Michigan.

Mr. CULKIN. In other words, they face storms and bad roads for 6 months at a time.

Mr. MAPES. That is correct. I shall not discuss the bill further but content myself with the statement that I am in favor of it with the amendments recommended by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, this legislation has my approval. I followed the course of the bill in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads through my good friend the chairman of the committee, who has been considerate enough to keep me advised as to its progress. I know the thorough job Mr. MEAD has done in the consideration of the bill. I make this statement not with any idea of flattering the gentleman from New York, but merely to stress the fact that the rural carriers in coming before this committee laid their program before the Membership with the desire to do them the justice they claimed they deserved and to be heard on the merits of the matter.

From my study of the provisions of this bill and the report of the committee, from the testimony I heard, and the talks I had with members of the Rural Letter Carriers' Association, I am satisfied that the bill in its present form represents a carefully worked-out program that not only does a measure of justice to these Federal employees but at the same time does no violence to the financial program of the Treasury. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I give my full approval to this measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Do I state the fact correctly when I say that the bill reduces the appropriation by $3,000,000?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It makes a reduction in the appropriation, of course, and it also irons out some of the inequalities which exist at the present time. Am I correct in my understanding of the matter?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. And is not the total reduction $3,000,000?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is my understanding that it is more than $3,000,000. The rural carriers, in giving their approval to this measure and the amendments to be proposed, recognize the practical difficulties confronting them. It represents to them the securing of some stability to their employment, and it removes uncertainties and inequalities. In addition the maintenance and equipment allowance is fixed by law and will no longer be subject to administrative order. This is a highly desirable change.

The rural carriers do not desire to raid the Treasury. They are willing to do their part in this trying time; they have always been loyal servants. They do ask common justice, and this measure provides Congress with the opportunity to correct a situation which all must admit is unfair, harsh, and unjustifiable from every standpoint.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am supporting this bill for the same reason that I supported the Senate amendments to the independent offices appropriation bill and for the same reason that I voted to override the veto on that bill.

In supporting the Senate amendments to the independent offices bill, we undertook to restore the compensation of underpaid Federal employees whose salaries had been cut by the Economy Act. We did not succeed in restoring all their compensation but did effect a restoration of two thirds of it.

That bill, which was vetoed by the President and passed over his veto, not only helped to restore a living wage but it tended to make the jobs of the Federal employees more secure. It took the jurisdiction of fixing the wages of Government workers out of the hands of the executive department and put it back into the hands of the lawmaking branch of the Government, where it originally was and where it rightfully belongs. The pending bill has for its purpose the taking of a further step in the same direction in regard to one very large and important class of Federal employees, the rural mail carriers.

For many years the rural mail carrier has been working under conditions of uncertainty, both with respect to the compensation he receives and also with respect to the tenure of the work itself. The bill we are now considering undertakes to remove that uncertainty. It does this by stabilizing the base pay of the rural carrier by adjusting it to modern methods of travel upon modern roads, and by assuring to the carrier a reasonable allowance for the necessary upkeep of the modern equipment which he uses on those roads in the performance of his daily work.

I think it is generally conceded that an equipment-maintenance allowance of 4 cents per mile is too low; that it actually costs the rural carrier more than this amount to maintain and operate his mail-delivery equipment. In this bill not only has the equipment-maintenance allowance been raised from 4 cents to 6 cents per mile, but neither the Postmaster General nor anyone else is permitted, under the provisions of the bill, to lower the amount provided by law, as was the case under the Economy Act.

The legislation provided in this bill also saves the jobs of about 9,500 rural mail carriers. The Postmaster General declared some time ago that the service could be maintained adequately with 9,500 fewer rural carriers than we have at present. He also announced that adequate rural mail service could be maintained for $11,000,000 less than it is now costing. He proposed to effect this saving by dismissing 9,500 rural mail carriers and by consolidating existing rural mail routes.

By the plan worked iout under this bill, the jobs of these 9,500 rural carriers are saved, and in addition thereto a reduction of $3,000,000 in the total cost of the service is made. The members of the Committee on the Post Office are to be congratulated on their splendid and humane solution of this problem. And the Congress is to be congratulated for taking this matter into its own hands and by demonstrating that real economy can be effected without throwing men out of work and without reducing the wages of those who remain at work.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fair bill and a just bill. It not only gives to the rural mail carrier a net compensation as large as he is now receiving but it does what I believe is even more important. It makes the jobs of the rural mail carriers secure, and it removes the mental hazard under which they have been working, and it prevents 9,500 men from being thrown out of work at a time when we are bending every effort to put men to work.

The results of this legislation will prove of benefit not only to the rural carriers themselves, but to everyone with whom they come in daily contact. It will benefit the patrons whom they serve. It will benefit the communities in which these faithful, patriotic, and hard-working public servants live. The bill deserves and it should receive our hearty, unanimous support. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may sit tomorrow during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RURAL LETTER CARRIERS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 8919) to adjust the salaries of rural letter carriers, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 8919, with Mr. WEST of Ohio in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the lateness of the hour, I trust it will not be necessary to use all the time allotted for general debate. I hope we may proceed without delay with the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule. While the measure is important, the degree of opposition in the committee and, I believe, on the floor of the House will be such as to warrant our speedy consideration of this measure.

This bill was introduced after the receipt of a letter from the Postmaster General directed to our committee urging a reclassification of the salaries of rural letter carriers on the theory that the Department could get along with approximately 9,500 less than the number they have in that service and because of the modernization of transportation methods and the improvement of highways.

Under the original plan proposed by the Postmaster General it was suggested that the standard route of 24 miles be extended to 30 miles; that is, that the standard rural route hereafter would be a route of 30 miles, for which the carrier would receive $1,800 per year. It was further recommended that the equipment allowance for rural carriers in this service be restored to 4 cents per mile. On the basis of recommendations proposed by the Postmaster General a saving of approximately $11,000,000 would be effected. The saving of the $11,000,000, however, would be a wage reduction upon the personnel of this service.

The committee, in its consideration of the measure, agreed to the adjustment so far as the length of the standard route was concerned, and in that connection the committee was in entire accord both with the Department and with the representatives of the employees. The committee differed, however, with the Post Office Department in connection with the equipment allowance, and, as will be noticed in the bill, the committee felt that 6 cents a mile was a fair and just rate. Increasing the equipment allowance from the recommendation of the Department to the figure contained in the bill reduces the saving to approximately $3,000,000 annually. So that the personnel of the rural service will suffer a total reduction, in the aggregate, of $3,000,000. The bill increases the standard route from 24 to 30 miles. In addition to this, it reduces the annual pay per mile for every mile in excess of 30 miles from $30, which is the rate they now receive, to $20 per mile, which is the rate they will hereafter receive. The adjustment of the standard route from 24 to 30 miles and the reduction from $30 to $20 for the excess mileage over and above the standard route effects the saving requested by the Department. The increase in the equipment allowance from 4 to 6 cents, as was adopted by our committee, reduces the $11,000,000 saving by approximately $8,000,000.

The rural letter carrier under the Economy Act had his equipment allowance reduced by 15 percent. As a result of a provision inserted in the independent offices bill, authority was given the President to reduce or suspend the equipment allowance. As a result of that authority, the equipment allowance was reduced to 3 cents for the months of November, December, January, and February, and to 1 cent a mile for the remaining months of the year. Under this bill that authority is repealed and the equipment allowance will be 6 cents.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know whether I have the right figures, but may I ask if it is not a fact that the equipment allowance is 4 cents and that that is the present law?

Mr. MEAD. The present law is 4 cents.

Mr. SABATH. And this is increased to 6 cents?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. SABATH. This is an increase of 50 percent, causing an additional expenditure for equipment allowance of $8,000,000?

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that in the extension of these routes, with the reduction in the amount allowed for equipment, many of these carriers had to absorb a great deal of their salaries in order to keep up their equipment and carry the mail?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct. The carriers, particularly those on long routes, are credited with being the recipients of excessive salaries. Such is not the case, because the best information received by our committee permits me to explain to the House that somewhere in the neighborhood of $500 annually on an average is necessary to meet the expenses incident to the transportation of mail by motor vehicle. It is also necessary for these rural letter carriers to purchase a new car on an average of every 3 years. Much of the excessive salary or compensation, as it is called, is used in the upkeep and maintenance of their equipment.

Mr. DOWELL. Of course, it is necessary to keep up the equipment in order to give service, and the longer the route assigned to the carrier the more expensive it becomes to the carrier?

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Can the gentleman give us information as to what it costs the carrier to maintain his equipment on the average?

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that our committee heard from the carriers and the Department, and we also took occasion to communicate with many of the large organizations of the country, including telephone, gas, electric companies, and various other organizations that use a great many cars. The best information that we have is that it costs somewhere in the neighborhood of 6 cents a mile to operate a motor vehicle of the type used in the rural letter-carrier service; and the committee felt, upon the evidence presented, that 6 cents was a fair equipment allowance.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the bill make any provision for routes less than 30 miles in length; and if so, what is the provision?

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that routes of a mileage less than 30 miles suffer a severe reduction in base pay.

The reduction in some instances exceeds $400; but we have an amendment taking care of that situation, so that the reduction in no case, on the shorter routes, will be in excess of $180 per annum.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. Are the rural letter carriers in favor of this proposed legislation?

Mr. MEAD. The rural letter carriers face a reality rather than a theory, and they realize that the dismissal of approximately 9,000 men would be an undue hardship, one they could not accept if there is any avenue of escape, and therefore they are willing to accept this readjustment at a loss to them of some $3,000,000 in order that they may meet the recommendations of the Department and save the personnel.

Mr. DUNN. Then they are not opposed to this legislation?

Mr. MEAD. No; they are not opposing it.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. On a 30-mile base how many hours a day does it require a carrier to complete his service?

Mr. MEAD. The Department informed us that the average rural route in the country requires about 5½ hours.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. What did they mean by the average rural route?

Mr. MEAD. Rural routes run all the way from 7 miles to 90 miles; but they take an average route, and it is their claim that the average number of hours put in, 6 days a week by a rural letter carrier, is somewhere in the neighborhood of 5½ hours.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Is it not a fact that it takes them from 1½ hours to 2 hours per day on a 30-mile base and during the balance of the time they crowd out some other good man from giving service at an oil station or something of that kind?

Mr. MEAD. Under the regulations of the Department no rural letter carrier can compete, in employment with any other man.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. But they do, to my knowledge.

Mr. MEAD. That may have been the case some years ago.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. No; lately.

Mr. MEAD. The gentleman may have this service confused with the star-route service.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. The gentleman is not confused. He has made an examination of the matter.

Mr. MEAD. The rural letter carrier of today, I will say to the gentleman, in very few cases violates the regulations of the Department.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Should not this bill provide against that?

Mr. MEAD. The regulations are severe. They are so severe that no law could make them more stringent. Separation from the service is the penalty, and I may say to the gentleman that in view of the regulations, legislation on the subject, in my judgment, is not necessary. While the Department maintains that the average number of hours is 5½, the best information we have is that it is 1 hour in excess of that, or approximately 42 hours a week.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. I was not inquiring about the average, but I was taking your base of 30 miles of which the gentleman speaks. How long does it take such a carrier to give this service on good roads?

Mr. MEAD. Thirty miles is approximately the average route because they run from 7 miles to 90 miles in length, and therefore the average number of hours on the average route, according to the Department, is 5½, but according to the employees it is 7 hours. It is my judgment that it is somewhere in the neighborhood of 6½ or 7 hours.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. My dear sir, I have made an examination, and the information that you have been giving is incorrect on a 30-mile base on good roads.

Mr. MEAD. I may say to the gentleman that this country is so large and the geography of the country is so different in so many different sections, and there are so many different seasons of the year, that the committee, intimately associated with this problem, is perfectly willing to meet the statement of the gentleman by saying that we believe the average rural letter carrier works in excess of 5½ hours a day and that nearly 7 hours a day is more than reasonably correct.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. On a 30-mile base?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; taking the average route over all the United States.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. I should like the Members to examine into this question before voting on this bill.

Mr. ROMJUE. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that nobody before the committee ever questioned that it was not at least 5½ hours.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. For 30 miles.

Mr. MEAD. Yes; 30 miles or the average route. I am very sorry the gentleman did not come before the committee and give us the benefit of his information.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. The gentleman did not want to come before the committee. I am looking to you for information, and I am challenging the statement that a 30-mile base takes five hours and a half of service. That is what I am challenging.

Mr. ROMJUE. And I am telling the gentleman that the members of the committee, after long hearing, as well as the Post Office Department itself, never made any such claim as the gentleman is now making.

Mr. MEAD. I may say in further answer to the gentleman that when the Post Office Department explained to us that the average workday of the rural letter carrier on the average route, taking the country as a whole into consideration, is five hours and a half, the gentleman can bank on it that no rural letter carrier finishes his duties on such an average route in less than five hours and a half. That was a minimum estimate in our estimation, and I may say in addition to what I have already said on this subject, the average rural letter carrier does not follow the improved highways of the country. The average rural letter carrier is crisscrossing the highways like the average hockey player crisscrosses the hockey rinks. The rural letter carrier follows the good and the bad highways; he follows the hills and the valleys, and takes the improved highways once in a while in the course of his daily tour. I think it is unfair to say that the average rural letter carrier of the country on an average route, in following the highways, works less than five hours and a half. There is no information before our committee to support such a statement, and as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE] has stated, I am sorry we did not have such information during our hearing.

Mr. BEEDY. The net result of this bill is that the rural carrier is going to do more work and get the same base pay, but with an increase of the equipment allowance, and have more money than he is now getting.

Mr. MEAD. More money for equipment and less base pay.

Mr. BEEDY. He gets less money in toto and does more work.

Mr. MEAD. Yes; they are reduced $3,000,000 a year.

Mr. BEEDY. Do the carriers want this legislation?

Mr. MEAD. As I said a moment ago, it is a serious situation that confronts them. The Postmaster General has authority to drop 9,500 to effect the saving required by the Budget.

Mr. BEEDY. And in face of that possibility, the carriers think it is the best thing to do.

Mr. MEAD. They accept this legislation as the best way out.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. I want to say that I asked the gentleman with reference specially to the 30-mile route—I did not refer to the average route. I want to say that the chances are that I will vote for the gentleman's bill.

Mr. MEAD. I will say to the gentleman that perhaps we were both somewhat confused.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. No; I was not confused; I was not making an unfair statement, and I resent the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MEAD. If the gentleman from Indiana knew the caliber of the men who are members of our committee, he would allow the chairman to resent the challenge made to the committee.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. I would not, but I think the gentleman was a little bit out of order.

Mr. MEAD. I could have explained the misunderstanding—30 miles is the average route.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. I think I will vote for your bill, but I want to say that out in Indiana they work an hour and a half or two hours a day, and they work at other things, throwing men out of jobs.

Mr. HENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HENNEY. Does the chairman take into consideration the time that the rural carriers put in at the post office distributing mail?

Mr. MEAD. The rural carrier is a traveling postmaster. He collects c.o.d.'s, issues money orders, attends to registered letters; he is a traveling salesman for the Department and a traveling bureau of information. He sells stamps. He does the work of a postmaster; he prepares the mail in the morning, makes up his reports in the afternoon, and he should be credited with that in addition to the service on his route.

Mr. DURGAN of Indiana. I am aware of all that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman from New York explain section 3? Suppose there is no voluntary resignation, no death, no retirement, the rural carrier can only be dismissed under charges, and in any event there can be no consolidation of routes.

Mr. MEAD. That is the situation today, except that under the Economy Act the rural carrier, after 30 years' service, can retire, even though he has not reached the age limit. But we expect that that will soon be eliminated; then this bill follows existing law.

Mr. HASTINGS. And prevents the consolidations except under the conditions as stated in section 3.

Mr. MEAD. That is present law. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the ranking minority member of the committee, because I think he will be able to answer questions that I have at least attempted to answer. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the able and distinguished Chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has been answering questions with all directness and with full information. This bill as amended by the House Post Office Committee is a constructive solution of an emergency. This measure did not originate with any member of the Post Office Committee.

The Postmaster General came before our committee and stated that he was compelled to save $11,000,000 in the conduct of the Rural Free Delivery Service, and that he proposed to do it if possible by extending the standard route and by reducing the amount paid for additional mileage from $30 to $20 per mile. We were faced with a proposition of doing a grave injury to the Rural Free Mail Service or adding some provisions to that proposal changing that. That is the situation regarding this bill. The committee has modified it in the interest of the Rural Delivery Service. From the beginning there has been a conflict between the Post Office Department and the Congress as to this Service. At the beginning two appropriations were made, originating in this House, and the then Postmaster General refused to expend the money on the ground that the Rural Free Delivery Service was not justified, and that it would cost more money than the American people would favor. Still the House put through the appropriations, and finally with a start of $40,000 it was established. From that time the House and the Senate have been supporting this great Service, even while there has been more or less lukewarmness on the part of the Department.

Postmaster General Farley stated that it would be necessary for him to dismiss 9,500 rural carriers unless we gave him a saving through legislation. In my estimation, the Department has already curtailed this great service quite far enough. Between 1932 and 1933 they stripped off 1,597 rural carriers. They are proceeding now at the rate of a hundred a week. This cuts down this service, which ought to be kept up and extended as in the past. Beginning with a very small expenditure, this service grew until 25,000,000 Americans in the rural sections are being served every day by their Government carrying them the mail, which means enlightenment and information. Many of these 25,000,000 are out of touch with any other activity of the Government. This service has led to a great many improvements in rural sections. It takes the market reports every day to the farmer. It helps to bring good roads to the rural sections. Instead of being isolated, it made them really part of a great community. In my estimation we should not hesitate in giving complete service to every dweller in the rural sections of America. Instead of endeavoring to cheapen and curtail this service we should be extending it at a time like this and thus bring encouragement to those who are so greatly discouraged at this time.

As I said, our committee did not originate this legislation. The bill was sent to us by the Department, and we were compelled to take action. The bill as originally presented provided that the standard route should be raised from 24 miles to 30 miles, with the pay remaining the same—$1,800 a year. We believe that that can be justified, because since the 24-mile route was established, better roads have come. It is justifiable to say that the standard route shall be 30 miles. Where the excess mileage went above 30 miles, there was a provision for $20 per mile instead of $30 per mile. We thought that was fair also, and it was approved. However, the Postmaster General has power to consolidate arbitrarily—to dismiss these faithful servants of the rural sections and to cut the equipment allowance down to 1 cent, as is being done at this moment. We felt that protection features should be written in this bill. I remember very well when we first put that equipment allowance in the law. It was in the salary bill of 1925, which, as some here will remember, had a hectic history for 2 years. We provided a basic increase for the post-office clerks, city letter carriers, and railway mail clerks of $300 a year. We did not give $1 increase in salary to the rural-delivery carriers. We gave them, instead, a 4-cent equipment allowance, which amounts to about $300 a year on a standard 24-mile route. That was the inception of this equipment allowance, and it was a matter of simple fairness and justice.

I have always believed that it is unfair for the Government of the United States to employ a citizen and then compel him to spend an indeterminate amount for equipment in order that he may perform the duties of his position. We endeavored to correct that through the equipment allowance. Then along came the Economy Act which reduced this allowance. In February an Executive order was issued again reducing the amount to be paid. Here is an Executive order of February 23 which states that beginning on April 1 and continuing to July 1, 1934, the rate of equipment allowance shall be fixed at one cent and one hundred and eleven ten-thousandths of a cent. This, with a 10 percent reduction, reduces the equipment allowance to exactly 1 cent per mile. So that until the 1st of July the equipment allowance is only 1 cent per mile.

We have had abundant testimony before the committee that it costs more than 6 cents per mile on the average to provide and maintain the vehicle required by the Post Office Department. The amendment in section 1 of this bill, therefore, provides that the rate shall be 6 cents and that such allowance shall not be changed except pursuant to law enacted after the date this act takes effect.

Mr. Chairman, it is important that we maintain the equipment allowance at this rate. Unless that is done, we will work a grave injustice upon these rural letter carriers. With this allowance we do them some measure of justice. I am confident that it will meet with the approval of the rural carriers as a rate more nearly in accordance with the actual expense.

Without further amendment the carriers would have to face the chance of dismissal to the extent of any number the Post Office Department felt necessary. Therefore, another amendment was inserted on page 3. It is a very important provision and reads as follows:

> No consolidation of rural routes shall be made otherwise than on account of the resignation, death, retirement, or dismissal on charges of carriers in the Rural Mail Delivery Service.

Without this amendment there is no limitation to the arbitrary power of the Postmaster General. Without it he may dismiss 9,500 rural carriers, and there can be no way of preventing it. With this amendment we undertake to hold the number of employees in the Rural Mail Service at the point where normal causes operate. We have precedent for it in the Railroad Act, where the service rendered by the common carriers of the country comes under the Interstate Commerce Commission. In the last session of Congress we passed an act freezing the number of employees as of May 1, 1933, and providing for a 5-percent reduction only.

In this amendment we provide that consolidations can be made only on account of resignation, death, retirement, or dismissal on charges; and that provides more than enough curtailment of the service. It seems to me that we know from the Postmaster General's own report that he has been going far enough in the matter of the reduction of the number of rural free delivery carriers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As a matter of fact, has the Post Office Department been making consolidations except in the instances mentioned in section 3 of the bill?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In 1933 there were some 1,591 consolidations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But were not all those cases in which there had been resignation, retirement, death, or dismissal?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Or transfers from the rural service to some other service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So, as I understand it, then, section 3 is really nothing but a perpetuation of the present situation with respect to consolidation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is correct. The Postmaster General told us he would be forced to dismiss some 9,500 carriers, which means adding to the unemployment problem of the country, unless we gave him legislation.

Now, we are not going to accomplish a saving of $11,000,000, for each one of the two additional cents for equipment allowance will mean $4,000,000; but, I am convinced that by the operation of this provision with respect to consolidations as a result only of death, resignation, retirement, or dismissal from charges, that a proper and natural reduction will be made and that the Department should ask for no more power than that.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. DOBBINS. The gentleman referred to the curtailment of service. The gentleman does not mean to curtail the number of people receiving rural free delivery service, but he means, rather, does he not, a curtailment of the number of carriers by an extension of routes?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. At the present time, for instance, there are 39,000 carriers in the Service. A few years ago there were 45,000 carriers in the Service. This means that some 6,000 carriers have been dropped. Our committee has received many complaints from people who are without the service that should be given in the rural sections of the country.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. TABER. In connection with the hearing on the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill there was testimony to the effect that a very substantial number of families had been deprived of rural free delivery service because of the consolidations.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is true; and, Mr. Chairman, I may say further that we have gone far enough in the matter of curtailment. Hardships have been inflicted upon the carriers and the public has less service. Therefore it seems to me that to pass this measure will be to do a constructive act along two lines.

We are endeavoring to establish a permanent basis for this travel allowance, at a point which will more nearly meet the costs, and we are endeavoring to make sure the rural carrier does not have the fear of dismissal hanging over his head every day of the year. We are trying to give him some security.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am in full sympathy with the able argument which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made. I should like to know what special compensation is provided for those carriers whose routes are more than 30 miles?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Those that have routes more than 30 miles in length receive $20 for each mile per year in excess of 30 miles. At present it is $30, and this is a cut of $10 per mile per year.

Mr. HASTINGS. What will a rural carrier get who serves a route under 30 miles after the enactment of this bill?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is figured out at $60 a mile. On a 10-mile route his regular pay would be $600. If the reduction amounts to more than $180 it stops at $180 under an amendment authorized by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. May I say a word in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois in reference to curtailing service to patrons of rural routes by citing an example? I know of one consolidation in my own county where they cut out one rural carrier. They previously had 4 and now they have 3. The route was extended mostly on the route of one carrier. I know that one farmer who formerly had his mail delivered right to his door now has to walk a mile and a half to get it. Two of his neighbors had their mail delivered previously to their farms and now they have to travel a mile to get their mail, and there are two more that have nearly a half mile to go to their mail boxes. This goes to show that every time there is a consolidation of mail routes there is some curtailment in service at the same time resulting in a detriment to the rural patrons.

Mr. DOBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.
